(b) If it appears to the Commission that a registration statement is on its face incomplete or inaccurate in any material respect, the Commission may, after notice by personal service or the sending of confirmed telegraphic notice not later than 10 days after the filing of the registration statement, and opportunity for hearing (at a time fixed by the Commission) within 10 days after such notice by personal service or the sending of such telegraphic notice, issue an order prior to the effective date of registration refusing to permit such statement to become effective until it has been amended in accordance with such order. When such statement has been amended in accordance with such order, the Commission shall so declare, and the registration shall become effective at the time provided in subsection (a) or upon the date of such declaration, whichever date is the later.

(c) An amendment filed after the effective date of the registration statement, if such amendment, upon its face, appears to the Commission not to be incomplete or inaccurate in any material respect, shall become effective on such date as the Commission may determine, having due regard to the public interest and the protection of investors.

(d) If it appears to the Commission at any time that the registration statement includes any untrue statement of a material fact or omits to state any material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, the Commission, may, after notice by personal service or the sending of confirmed telegraphic notice, and after opportunity for hearing (at a time fixed by the Commission) within 15 days after such notice by personal service or the sending of such telegraphic notice, issue a stop order suspending the effectiveness of the registration statement. When such statement has been amended in accordance with such stop order the Commission shall so declare and thereupon the stop order shall cease to be effective.

(e) The Commission is hereby empowered to make an examination in any case in order to determine whether a stop order should issue under subsection (d). In making such examination the Commission or any officer or officers designated by it shall have access to and may demand the production of any books and papers of, and may administer oaths and affirmations to and examine, the issuer, underwriter, or any other person, in respect of any matter relevant to the examination, and may, in its discretion, require the production of a balance sheet exhibiting the assets, and liabilities of the issuer, or its income statement, or both, to be certified to by a public or certified accountant approved by the Commission. If the issuer or underwriter shall fail to cooperate, or shall obstruct or refuse to permit the making of an examination, such conduct shall be proper ground for the issuance of a stop order.

(f) Any notice required under this section shall be sent to or served on the issuer, or, in case of a foreign government or political subdivision thereof, to or on the underwriter, or, in the case of a foreign or Territorial person, to or on its duly authorized representative in the United States named in the registration statement, properly directed in each case of telegraphic until the twentieth day after its filing, and this date may be postponed by the Federal Trade Commission in certain events.

Under the United States act the Commission has supervisory powers over the statement and can require its amendment and refuse to permit it to become effective.

Under the United States act the Commission may issue a "stop order" which suspends the effectiveness of a statement registered with it. The British registrar has no such power—a prospectus once filed with him, his duties and powers in respect thereto cease.

Under the United States act, the Commission has broad powers to investigate the books, etc., of the issuer, underwriter and others if it wishes to determine whether a "stop order" should issue. The registrar has no such powers.

Court review of orders

SEC. 9. (a) Any person aggrieved by an order of the Commission may obtain a review of such order in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States, within any circuit wherein such person resides or has his principal place of business, or in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, by filing in such court, within 60 days after the entry of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or be set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record upon which the order complained of was entered. No objection to the order of the Commission shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been urged before the Commission. The finding of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive, and its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of the original order. The jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside, in whole or in part, any order of the Commission, shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari, or certification, as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U.S.C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347).

(b) The commencement of proceedings under subsection (a) shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Commission's order.

Information required in prospectus

SEC. 10. (a) A prospectus—

(1) when relating to a security other than a security issued by a foreign government or political subdivision thereof, shall contain the same statements made in the registration statement, but it need not include the documents referred to in paragraphs (28) to (32), inclusive, of schedule A;

(2) when relating to a security issued by a foreign government or political subdivision thereof shall contain the same statements made in the registration statement, but it need not include the documents referred to in paragraphs (13) and (14) of schedule B.

(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a)—

(1) when a prospectus is used more than 13 months after the effective date of the registration statement, the information in the statements contained therein shall be as of a date not more than 12 months prior to such use;

(2) there may be omitted from any prospectus any of the statements required under such subsection (a) which the Commission may by rules or regulations designate as not being necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors;

(3) any prospectus shall contain such other information as the Commission may by rules or regulations require as being necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

BRITISH COMPANIES ACT OF 1929—CON.

(3) The written statement aforesaid shall not contain any matter other than the particulars required by this section to be included therein, and shall not be in characters less large or less legible than any characters used in the offer or in any document sent therewith.

(4) The said statement shall contain particulars with respect to the following matters:

(a) Whether the person making the offer is acting as principal or agent, and if as agent the name of his principal and an address in Great Britain where that principal can be served with process.

(b) The date on which and the country in which the company was incorporated and the address of its registered or principal office in Great Britain.

(c) The authorized share capital of the company and the amount thereof which has been issued, the classes into which it is divided, and the rights of each class of shareholders in respect of capital, dividends, and voting.

(d) The dividends, if any, paid by the company on each class of shares during each of the 3 financial years immediately preceding the offer; and if no dividend has been paid in respect of shares of any particular class during any of those years, a statement to that effect.

(e) The total amount of any debentures issued by the company and outstanding at the date of the statement, together with the rate of interest payable thereon;

(f) The names and addresses of the directors of the company.

COMMENTS—CON.

Under the United States act an aggrieved party can obtain a review of any order issued by the Commission, but in any such review the findings of facts by the Commission, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive.

These provisions of the British act specify what must be contained in or accompany an offer of shares to the public if that offer is in writing. (See sec. 356.) In the British act such offer is not termed a "prospectus" but appears to be very analogous to the "prospectus" of the United States act. There are broad exemptions in the British act dispensing with the requirements as to the contents of the written offer in certain instances. (See sec. 356 (2) proviso.)

UNITED STATES SECURITIES ACT OF 1933—CON.

(4) in the exercise of its powers under paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection, the Commission shall have authority to classify prospectuses according to the nature and circumstances of their use and by rules and regulations and subject to such terms and conditions as it shall specify therein, to prescribe as to each class the form and contents which it may find appropriate to such use and consistent with the public interest and the protection of investors.

(c) The statements or information required to be included in a prospectus by or under authority of subsection (a) or (b), when written, shall be placed in a conspicuous part of the prospectus in type as large as that used generally in the body of the prospectus.

(d) In any case where a prospectus consists of a radio broadcast, copies thereof shall be filed with the Commission under such rules and regulations as it shall prescribe. The Commission may by rules and regulations require the filing with it of forms of prospectuses used in connection with the sale of securities registered under this title.

Civil liabilities on account of false registration statement

SEC. 11. (a) In case any part of the registration statement, when such part became effective, contained an untrue statement of a material fact or omitted to state a material fact required to be stated herein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, any person acquiring such security (unless it is proved that at the time of such acquisition he knew of such untruth or omission) may, either at law or in equity, in any court of competent jurisdiction, sue—

(1) every person who signed the registration statement;

(2) every person who was a director of (or person performing similar functions), or partner in, the issuer at the time of the filing of the part of the registration statement with respect to which his liability is asserted;

(3) every person who, with his consent, is named in the registration statement as being or about to become a director, person performing similar functions, or partner;

(4) every accountant, engineer, or appraiser, or any person whose profession gives authority to a statement made by him, who has with his consent been named as having prepared or certified any part of the registration statement, or as having prepared or certified any report or valuation which is used in connection with the registration statement, with respect to the statement in such registration statement, report, or valuation which purports to have been prepared or certified by him;

(5) every underwriter with respect to such security.

BRITISH COMPANIES ACT OF 1929—CON.

(g) Whether or not the shares offered are fully paid up; and if not, to what extent they are paid up.

(h) Whether or not the shares are quoted on, or permission to deal therein has been granted by, any recognized stock exchange in Great Britain or elsewhere, and, if so, which, and, if not, a statement that they are not so quoted or that no such permission has been granted.

(i) Where the offer relates to units, particulars of the names and addresses of the persons in whom the shares represented by the units are vested, the date of and the parties to any document defining the terms on which those shares are held, and an address in Great Britain where that document or a copy thereof can be inspected.

In this subsection the expression "company" means the company by which the shares to which the statement relates were or are to be issued (sec. 356 (3)).

37. (1) Where a prospectus invites persons to subscribe for shares in or debentures of a company—

(a) every person who is a director of the company at the time of the issue of the prospectus; and ("director" includes any person occupying the position of director by whatever name called;) (Sec. 380)

(b) every person who has authorized himself to be named and is named in the prospectus as a director or as having agreed to become a director either immediately or after an interval of time; and

(c) every person being a promoter of the company; and

(d) every person who has authorized the issue of the prospectus, shall be liable to pay compensation to all persons who subscribe for any shares or debentures on the faith of the prospectus for the loss or damage they may have sustained by reason of any untrue statement therein, or in any report or memorandum appearing on the face thereof, or by reference incorporated therein or issued therewith, unless it is proved—

COMMENTS—CON.

Under the United States act any person acquiring the security may recover from the persons liable, whereas under the British act only the person who originally subscribed "on the faith of the prospectus" can recover. Moreover, under the British act the person can only recover the "loss or damage" sustained by reason of the "untrue statement" (sec. 37) or of "the omission" (sec. 35).

Section 37 of the British act provides liabilities where an "untrue statement" is contained in the prospectus. Section 35 of the British act provides for liability where the prospectus does not comply with the requirements of that section (omits to state facts required to be stated). No definite civil liability is set up by section 35, but the British courts have held civil liability to arise by violation of that section. Section 35 gives broader defenses than section 37. The provisions of section 35 are set forth separately at the end of section 11 of the United States act as the provisions of sections 37 and 35 could not both be parallel to section 11.

See section 38 of the British act where an offer for sale to the public in relation to securities allotted by the company with a view to their being offered to the public is made a "prospectus", and civil liability is the same as if the securities had been offered direct to the public, "but without prejudice to the liability, if any, of the persons by whom the offer is made in respect to misstatements contained in the document or otherwise in respect thereof." (Sec. 38.)

(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a) no person, other than the issuer, shall be liable as provided therein who shall sustain the burden of proof—		Under the United States act the "issuer" (usually the company whose securities are offered) is not given the benefit of the following defenses, but is liable in any event. The British act does not by its terms make such company liable in the first instance (but see below as to right to recision under general law of contracts induced by misrepresentation).
(1) that before the effective date of the part of the registration statement with respect to which his liability is asserted (A) he had resigned from or had taken such steps as are permitted by law to resign from, or ceased or refused to act in, every office, capacity, or relationship in which he was described in the registration statement as acting or agreeing to act, and (B) he had advised the Commission and the issuer in writing that he had taken such action and that he would not be responsible for such part of the registration statement; or	(i) that having consented to become a director of the company he withdrew his consent before the issue of the prospectus and that it was issued without his authority or consent; or
(2) that if such part of the registration statement became effective without his knowledge, upon becoming aware of such fact he forthwith acted and advised the Commission, in accordance with paragraph (1), and, in addition, gave reasonable public notice that such part of the registration statement had become effective without his knowledge; or	(ii) that the prospectus was issued without his knowledge or consent, and that on becoming aware of its issue he forthwith gave reasonable public notice that it was issued without his knowledge or consent; or
	(iii) that after the issue of the prospectus and before allotment thereunder, he, on becoming aware of any untrue statement therein, withdrew his consent thereto, and gave reasonable public notice of the withdrawal, and of the reason therefor; or
(3) that (A) as regards any part of the registration statement not purporting to be made on the authority of an expert, and not purporting to be a copy of or extract from a report or valuation of an expert, and not purporting to be made on the authority of a public official document or statement, he had, after reasonable investigation, reasonable ground to believe, and did believe, at the time such part of the registration statement became effective, that the statements therein were true and that there was no omission to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statement therein not misleading; and	(iv) that— (a) as regards every untrue statement not purporting to be made on the authority of any expert, or of a public official document or statement, he had reasonable ground to believe, and did up to the time of the allotment of the shares or debentures, as the case may be, believe, that the statement was true; and	Under the United States act the defendant must show not only that he had reasonable grounds to believe, and did believe, the statement to have been true but also that he had made a "reasonable investigation", and the standard of a reasonableness is the highest—i.e., that of a fiduciary. The British act contains no such unreasonable requirement for investigation.
(B) as regards any part of the registration statement purporting to be made upon his authority as an expert or purporting to be a copy of or extract from a report or valuation of himself as an expert, (i) he had, after reasonable investigation, reasonable ground to believe, and did believe, at the time such part of the registration statement became effective, that the statements therein were true and that there was no omission to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, or (ii) such part of the registration statement did not fairly represent his statement as an expert or was not a fair copy of or extract from his report or valuation as an expert; and of the registration statement fairly represented the statement made by the official person or was a fair copy of or extract from the public official document.
(C) as regards any part of the registration statement purporting to be made on the authority of an expert (other than himself) or purporting to be a copy of or extract from a report or valuation of an expert (other than himself), he had reasonable ground to believe and did believe, at the time such part of the registration statement became effective, that the statements therein were true and that there was no omission to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, and that such part of the registration statement fairly represented the statement of the expert or was a fair copy of or extract from the report or valuation of the expert; and	(b) as regards every untrue statement purporting to be a statement by an expert or contained in what purports to be a copy of or extract from a report or valuation of an expert, it fairly represented the statement or was a correct and fair copy of or extract from the report or valuation; and	Under the United States act the defendant must show he had reasonable ground to believe the statements were true and that there were no material omissions. Under the British act it must be proved that the defendant "had no reasonable ground to believe" the expert "was competent."
(D) as regards any part of the registration statement purporting to be a statement made by an official person or purporting to be a copy of or extract from a public official document, he had reasonable ground to believe and did believe, at the time such part of the registraton statement became effective, that the statements therein were true, and that there was no omission to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, and that such part	(c) as regards every untrue statement purporting to be a statement made by an official person or contained in what purports to be a copy of or extract from a public official document, it was a correct and fair representation of the statement or copy of or extract from the document; Provided that a person shall be liable to pay compensation as aforesaid if it is proved that he had no reasonable ground to believe that the person making any such statement, report, or valuation as is mentioned	Under the United States act the defendant must show he had reasonable ground to believe and did believe that the statements contained in a public document were true, whereas under the British act it is only necessary to show a correct and fair extract.

(c) In determining, for the purpose of paragraph (3) of subsection (b) of this section, what constitutes reasonable investigation and reasonable ground for belief, the standard of reasonableness shall be that required of a person occupying a fiduciary relationship.

(d) If any person becomes an underwriter with respect to the security after the part of the registration statement with respect to which his liability is asserted has become effective, then for the purposes of paragraph (3) of subsection (b) of this section such part of the registration statement shall be considered as having become effective with respect to such person as of the time when he became an underwriter.

(e) The suit authorized under subsection (a) may be either (1) to recover the consideration paid for such security with interest thereon, less the amount of any income received thereon, upon the tender of such security, or (2) for damages if the person suing no longer owns the security.

(f) All or any one or more of the persons specified in subsection (a) shall be jointly and severally liable, and every person who becomes liable to make any payment under this section may recover contribution as in cases of contract from any person who, if sued separately, would have been liable to make the same payment, unless the person who has become liable was, and the other was not, guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation.

(g) In no case shall the amount recoverable under this section exceed the price at which the security was offered to the public.

(NOTE.—Sec. 11 of the United States act covers alike untrue statements and omissions. See above.)

in paragraph (iv) (b) of this subsection was competent to make it.

(2) Where the prospectus contains the name of a person as a director of the company, or as having agreed to become a director thereof, and he has not consented to become a director, or has withdrawn his consent before the issue of the prospectus, and has not authorized or consented to the issue thereof, the directors of the company, except any without whose knowledge or consent the prospectus was issued, and any other person who authorized the issue thereof, shall be liable to indemnify the person named as aforesaid against all damages, costs, and expenses to which he may be made liable by reason of his name having been inserted in the prospectus, or in defending himself against any action or legal proceedings brought against him in respect thereof.

(3) Every person who, by reason of his being a director or named as a director or as having agreed to become a director or of his having authorized the issue of the prospectus, becomes liable to make any payment under this section may recover contribution, as in cases of contract, from any other person who, if sued separately, would have been liable to make the same payment, unless the person who has become so liable was, and that other person was not, guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation.

(4) For the purpose of this section—

The expression "promoter" means a promotor who was a party to the preparation of the prospectus, or of the portion thereof containing the untrue statement, but does not include any person by reason of his acting in a professional capacity for persons engaged in procuring the formation of the company.

The expression "expert" includes engineer, valuer, accountant, and any other person whose profession gives authority to a statement made by him.

(NOTE.—Sec. 35 of the British act specifies the matters which must be set out in the prospectus. The following provisions relating to civil liability for failure to comply with these requirements then follow.)

COMMENTS—CON.

Under the British act no specific provision is made for the return of the security and the recovery of the purchase price, but, considering his contract of purchase under the general law, the person who originally applied for shares on the faith of the prospectus (and only such person) can rescind the contract and recover back his purchase price from the company if he can show—

(A) that a misstatement was made by or on behalf of the company;

(B) that it was a material one;

(C) that he relied upon it in taking the shares;

(D) that he commenced proceedings before liquidation and within a reasonable time.

The British act gives the right to recover damages from directors, etc. (not from the company), but such right is limited to the original purchaser and there can be no pyramiding by suits by successive purchasers from the original purchaser.

Under cases decided in England the measure of damages is the difference between the actual value (not the market price) of the shares at the time of allotment and the sum paid for them. The United States act although limiting the recovery by any one person to the amount of the price at which the security was first offered permits successive purchasers to sue and therefore the final aggregate liability may be much more than the original price.

Section 35 of the British act requires certain things to be set forth in the prospectus, but does not contain any provisions as to what the civil liability is if any of the things are omitted to be set out. However, that it was intended to impose a liability is fairly clear from subsection 4, which states there is no liability in certain instances. It has been held in England that a plaintiff in order to establish his right to recovery of damages must show not merely the omission to state some matter required to be stated in the prospectus but that the omission was equivalent to misstatements, and that the plaintiff has suffered loss as a result of the omission.

	(4) In the event of noncompliance with or contravention of any of the requirements of this section, a director or other person responsible for the prospectus shall not incur any liability by reason of the noncompliance or contravention, if—	The United States act places excuses for false statements and for omissions on the same basis. Section 11 (a) and 11 (b). The British act more readily excuses omissions.
	(a) as regards any matter not disclosed, he proves that he was not cognizant thereof; or	Under the British act a person is excused from omitting to state something which he can prove he did not know or if he can prove he made an honest mistake of fact. This is reasonable and does not require directors and others to be "insurers" but only to use proper care.
	(b) he proves that the noncompliance or contravention arose from an honest mistake of fact on his part; or
	(c) the noncompliance or contravention was in respect of matters which in the opinion of the court dealing with the case were immaterial or was otherwise such as ought, in the opinion of that court, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, reasonably to be excused;	Omission of matters which the court feels were immaterial or the omission otherwise excusable do not give rise to liability under the British act. This seems to be about the same thing the United States act aims at when it creates liabilities in re omissions of "material facts."
	Provided, That in the event of failure to include in a prospectus a statement with respect to the matters specified in paragraph 15 of part I of the fourth schedule of this act, no director or other person shall incur any liability in respect of the failure unless it be proved that he had knowledge of the matters not disclosed.	Paragraph 15 referred to in this section deals with disclosing in the prospectus of the interest of any director in property to be acquired by the company and places the burden of proof on the party seeking to recover by reason of the omission of any such statement to show that the defendant had knowledge of the matter not disclosed. Throughout the entire provisions of the United States act section 11 (b) the burden of proof is on the defendant.
Civil liabilities arising in connection with prospectuses and communication SEC. 12. Any person who— (1) sells a security in violation of section 5, or (2) sells a security (whether or not exempted by the provisions of section 3, other than paragraph (2) of subsection (a) thereof), by the use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or of the mails, by means of a prospectus or oral communication, which includes an untrue statement of a material fact or omits to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements, in the light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading (the purchaser not knowing of such untruth or omission) and who shall not sustain the burden of proof that he did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of such untruth or omission. shall be liable to the person purchasing such security from him, who may sue either at law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction, to recover the consideration paid for such security with interest thereon, less the amount of any income received thereon, upon the tender of such security, or for damages if he no longer owns the security.	(8) Where any person is convicted in England of having made an offer in contravention of the provisions of this section, the court before which he is convicted may order that any contract made as a result of the offer shall be void, and, where it makes any such order, may give such consequential directions as it thinks proper for the repayment of any money or the retransfer of any shares (sec. 356 (8)).	This provision of the British act appears most nearly analogous to section 12 of the United States act. "This section" referred to in the British provision is section 356, which requires a written offer to the public to contain certain information.
Limitation of actions SEC. 13. No action shall be maintained to enforce any liability created under section 11 or section 12 (2) unless brought within 2 years after the discovery of the untrue statement or the omission, or after such discovery should have been made by the exercise of reasonable diligence, or, if the action is to enforce a liability created under section 12 (1), unless brought within 2 years after the violation upon which it is based. In no event shall any such action be brought to enforce a liability created under section 11 or section 12 (1) more than 10 years after the security was bona fide offered to the public.		In England, the general statute of limitations applies and will be a bar to proceedings after 6 years and the time commences to run from the date of allotment, unless there was "concealed fraud." (Handbook on Joint Stock Companies, Gore-Browne, 38th ed.)
Contrary stipulations void SEC. 14. Liability of controlling persons

SEC. 15. Every person who, by or through stock ownership, agency or otherwise, or who, pursuant to or in connection with an agreement or understanding with one or more other persons by or through stock ownership, agency, or otherwise, controls any person liable under section 11 or 12, shall also be liable jointly and severally with and to the same extent as such controlled person to any person to whom such controlled person is liable.

Additional remedies

SEC. 16. The rights and remedies provided by this title shall be in addition to any and all other rights and remedies that may exist at law or in equity.

Fraudulent interstate transactions

SEC. 17. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person in the sale of any securities by the use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or by the use of the mails, directly or indirectly—

(1) to employ any device, scheme, or artifice to defraud; or

(2) to obtain money or property by means of any untrue statement of a material fact or any omission to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading; or

(3) to engage in any transaction, practice, or course of business which operates or would operate as a fraud or deceit upon the purchaser.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person, by the use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or by the use of the mails, to publish, give publicity to, or circulate any notice, circular, advertisement, newspaper, article, letter, investment service, or communication which, though not purporting to offer a security for sale, describes such security for a consideration received or to be received, directly or indirectly, from an issuer, underwriter, or dealer, without fully disclosing the receipt, whether past or prospective, of such consideration and the amount thereof.

(c) The exemptions provided in section 3 shall not apply to the provisions of this section.

company organized outside of Great Britain. (See sec. 355(2).)

The British act does not carry the liability of the company to stockholders who may control the company.

"This section" referred to in the provision of the British act is section 35, which requires a prospectus to contain certain information and deals with civil liability. A similar provision is contained in section 355, relating to offers of securities of companies organized outside of Great Britain. (See sec. 355 (4).)

The British act does not cover fraudulent transactions as such, but leaves the parties to their rights under general law relating to fraud.

It should be noted that the acts declared by section 17 of the United States act to be unlawful apply even as to securities that are otherwise exempt from the act under section 3.

Under the United States act the Commission is given broad power to prescribe rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of the act and in its investigations under the act can require persons to testify and submit books, etc., for scrutiny. The Registrar under the British act has no such powers.

UNITED STATES SECURITIES ACT OF 1933—con.

counts of any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by the issuer, or any person under direct or indirect common control with the issuer; but insofar as they relate to any common carrier subject to the provisions of section 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, the rules and regulations of the Commission with respect to accounts shall not be inconsistent with the requirements imposed by the Interstate Commerce Commission under authority of such section 20. The rules and regulations of the Commission shall be effective upon publication in the manner which the Commission shall prescribe.

(b) For the purpose of all investigations which, in the opinion of the Commission, are necessary and proper for the enforcement of this title, any member of the Commission or any officer or officers designated by it are empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpena witnesses, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, or other documents which the Commission deems relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States or any Territory at any designated place of hearing.

Injunctions and prosecution of offenses

SEC. 20. (a) Whenever it shall appear to the Commission, either upon complaint or otherwise, that the provisions of this title, or of any rule or regulation prescribed under authority thereof, have been or are about to be violated, it may, in its discretion, either require or permit such person to file with it a statement in writing, under oath, or otherwise, as to all the facts and circumstances concerning the subject matter which it believes to be in the public interest to investigate, and may investigate such facts.

(b) Whenever it shall appear to the Commission that any person is engaged or about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of the provisions of this title, or of any rule or regulation prescribed under authority thereof, it may in its discretion, bring an action in any district court of the United States, United States court of any Territory, or the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to enjoin such acts or practices, and upon a proper showing a permanent or temporary injunction or restraining order shall be granted without bond. The Commission may transmit such evidence as may be available concerning such acts or practices to the Attorney General who may, in his discretion, institute the necessary criminal proceedings under this title. Any such criminal proceeding may be brought either in the district wherein the transmittal of the prospectus or security complained of begins, or in the district wherein such prospectus or security is received.

(c) Upon application of the Commission the district courts of the United States, the United States courts of any Territory, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, shall also have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus commanding any person to comply with the provisions of this title or any order of the Commission made in pursuance thereof.

Hearings by Commission

SEC. 21. All hearings shall be public and may be held before the Commission or an officer or officers of the Commission designated by it, and appropriate records thereof shall be kept.

Jurisdiction of offenses and suits

SEC. 22. (a) The district courts of the United States, the United States courts of any Territory, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction of offenses and violations under this title and under the rules and regulations promulgated by the Commission in respect thereto, and, concurrent with State and Territorial courts, of all suits in equity

BRITISH COMPANIES ACT OF 1929—con.

COMMENTS—con.

Under the United States act the Commission may institute proceedings for an injunction to prohibit practices which are in violation of the act or may refer the matter to the Attorney General for a criminal prosecution. Under the British act the registrar has no such powers.

UNITED STATES SECURITIES ACT OF 1933—CON.

and actions at law brought to enforce any liability or duty created by this title. Any such suit or action may be brought in the district wherein the defendant is found or is an inhabitant or transacts business, or in the district where the sale took place, if the defendant participated therein, and process in such cases may be served in any other district of which the defendant is an inhabitant or wherever the defendant may be found. Judgments and decrees so rendered shall be subject to review as provided in sections 128 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U.S.C., title 28, secs. 225 and 347). No case arising under this title and brought in any State court of competent jurisdiction shall be removed to any court of the United States. No costs shall be assessed for or against the Commission in any proceeding under this title brought by or against it in the Supreme Court or such other courts.

(b) In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena issued to any person, any of the said United States courts, within the jurisdiction of which said person guilty of contumacy or refusal to obey is found or resides, upon application by the Commission, may issue to such person an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission, or one of its examiners designated by it, there to produce documentary evidence, if so ordered, or there to give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by said court as a contempt thereof.

(c) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, contracts, agreements, and other documents before the Commission, or in obedience to the subpena of the Commission or any member thereof or any officer designated by it, or in any cause or proceeding instituted by the Commission, on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him, may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no individual shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

Unlawful representations

SEC. 23. Neither the fact that the registration statement for a security has been filed or is in effect nor the fact that a stop order is not in effect with respect thereto shall be deemed a finding by the Commission that the registration statement is true and accurate on its face or that it does not contain an untrue statement of fact or omit to state a material fact, or be held to mean that the Commission has in any way passed upon the merits of, or given approval to, such security. It shall be unlawful to make, or cause to be made, to any prospective purchaser any representation contrary to the foregoing provisions of this section.

Penalties

SEC. 24. Any person who willfully violates any of the provisions of this title, or the rules and regulations promulgated by the Commission under authority thereof, or any person who willfully, in a registration statement filed under this title, makes any untrue statement of a material fact or omits to state any material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statement therein not misleading, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

BRITISH COMPANIES ACT OF 1929—CON.

(5) If a prospectus is issued without a copy thereof being so delivered, the company, and every person who is knowingly a party to the issue of the prospectus, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding £5 for every day from the date of the issue of the prospectus until a copy thereof is so delivered (sec. 34 (5)).

If any person acts in contravention of the provisions of this subsection, he shall be liable to a fine not exceeding £500 (sec. 35 (3)).

COMMENTS—CON.

The "so delivered" appearing in this subsection of the British act refers to the requirement of section 34 that a copy of the prospectus must be filed with the registrar.

"This subsection" here referred to in the British act provisions is (3) of section 35, which makes it unlawful to issue a form of application for shares unless accompanied by a prospectus.

UNITED STATES SECURITIES ACT OF 1933—CON.

Jurisdiction of other governmental agencies over securities

SEC. 25. Nothing in this title shall relieve any person from submitting to the respective supervisory units of the Government of the United States information, reports, or other documents that are now or may hereafter be required by any provision of law.

Separability of provisions

SEC. 26. If any provision of this act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance, shall be held invalid, the remainder of this act, or the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

SCHEDULE A

(9) A statement of the capitalization of the issuer, including the authorized and outstanding amounts of its capital stock and the proportion thereof paid up, the number and classes of shares in which such capital stock is divided, par value thereof—or, if it has no par value, the stated or assigned value thereof—a description of the respective voting rights, preferences, conversion, and exchange rights, rights to dividends, profits, or capital of each class, with respect to each other class, including the retirement and liquidation rights or values thereof.	16. If the prospectus invites the public to subscribe for shares in the company and the share capital of the company is divided into different classes of shares, the right of voting at meetings of the company conferred by, and the rights in respect of capital and dividends attached to, the several classes of shares respectively (fourth schedule, pt. I, 16). 2. The number of founders or management or deferred shares, if any, and the nature and extent of the interest of the holders in the property and profits of the company (fourth schedule, pt. I, 2).
(10) A statement of the securities, if any, covered by options outstanding or to be created in connection with the security to be offered, together with the names and addresses of all persons, if any, to be allotted more than 10 percent in the aggregate of such options.
(11) The amount of capital stock of each class issued or included in the shares of stock to be offered.
(12) The amount of the funded debt outstanding and to be created by the security to be offered, with a brief description of the date, maturity and character of such debt, rate of interest, character of amortization provisions, and the security, if any, therefor. If substitution of any security is permissible, a summarized statement of the conditions under which such substitution is permitted. If substitution is permissible without notice, a specific statement to that effect.
(13) The specific purposes in detail and the approximate amounts to be devoted to such purposes, so far as determinable, for which the security to be offered is to supply funds, and if the funds are to be raised in part from other sources, the amounts thereof and the sources thereof, shall be stated.	5. Where shares are offered to the public for subscription particulars as to— (i) the minimum amount which, in the opinion of the directors, must be raised by the issue of those shares in order to provide the sums, or, if any part thereof is to be defrayed in any other manner, the balance of the sums, required to be provided in respect of each of the following matters: (a) the purchase price of any property purchased or to be purchased which is to be defrayed in whole or in part out of the proceeds of the issue; (b) any preliminary expenses payable by the company, and any commission so payable to any person in consideration of his agreeing to subscribe for, or of his procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions for, any shares in the company; (c) the repayment of any moneys borrowed by the company in respect of any of the foregoing matters; (d) working capital; and (ii) the amounts to be provided in respect of the matters aforesaid otherwise than out of the proceeds of the issue and the sources out of which those amounts are to be provided (fourth schedule, pt. I, 5).
(14) The remuneration, paid or estimated to be paid, by the issuer or its predecessor, directly or indirectly, during the past year and ensuing year to (a) the directors or persons performing similar functions, and (b) its officers and other persons, naming them wherever such remuneration exceeded $25,000 during any such year.	3. The number of shares, if any, fixed by the articles as the qualification of a director, and any provision in the articles as to the remuneration of the directors (fourth schedule, pt. I, 3).	The British act requires a statement of any provisions in the charter of a company as to the remuneration of directors but does not require that the amounts actually paid be shown.
(15) The estimated net proceeds to be derived from the security to be offered.	(ii) In paragraph 3 of part I of the said Fourth Schedule a reference to the constitution of the company shall be substituted for the reference to the articles; and (sec. 355 (1))— (a) the net amount of the consideration received or to be received by the company in respect of the shares or debentures to which the offer relates; and (sec. 38 (3) a)—	This provision of the British act applies only as respects companies organized outside of Great Britain (sec. 355).
(16) The price at which it is proposed that the security shall be offered to the public or the method by which such price is computed and any variation therefrom at which any portion of such security is proposed to be offered to any persons or classes of persons, other than the underwriters, naming them or specifying the class. A variation in price may be proposed prior to the date of the public offering of the security, but the Commission shall immediately be notified of such variation.	The amount payable on application and allotment on each share * * * (fourth schedule, pt. I, 6).	Under the British act this need be shown only where the securities have been allotted to one or a few persons with a view to their disposing of the securities to the public (sec. 38).
(17) All commissions or discounts paid or to be paid, directly or indirectly, by the issuer to the underwriters in respect of the	10. The amount, if any, paid within the 2 preceding years, or payable, as commission (but not including commission to sub-sale of the security to be offered. Commissions shall include all cash, securities, contracts, or anything else of value, paid, to be set aside, disposed of, or understandings with or for the benefit of any other person in which any underwriter is interested, made, in connection with the sale of such security. A commission paid or to be paid in connection with the sale of such security by a person in which the issuer has an interest or which is controlled or directed by, or under common control with, the issuer shall be deemed to have been paid by the issuer. Where any such commission is paid, the amount of such commission paid to each underwriter shall be stated.

(18) The amount or estimated amounts, itemized in reasonable detail, of expenses, other than commissions specified in paragraph (17) of this schedule, incurred or borne by or for the account of the issuer in connection with the sale of the security to be offered or properly chargeable thereto, including legal, engineering, certification, authentication, and other charges.

(19) The net proceeds derived from any security sold by the issuer during the 2 years preceding the filing of the registration statement, the price at which such security was offered to the public, and the names of the principal underwriters of such security.

(20) Any amount paid within 2 years preceding the filing of the registration statement or intended to be paid to any promoter and the consideration for any such payment.

(21) The names and addresses of the vendors and the purchase price of any property, or goodwill, acquired or to be acquired, not in the ordinary course of business, which is to be defrayed in whole or in part from the proceeds of the security to be offered, the amount of any commission payable to any person in connection with such acquisition, and the name or names of such person or persons, together with any expense incurred or to be incurred in connection with such acquisition, including the cost of borrowing money to finance such acquisition.

(22) Full particulars of the nature and extent of the interest, if any, of every director, principal executive officer, and of every stockholder holding more than 10 percent of any class of stock or more than 10 percent in the aggregate of the stock of the issuer, in any property acquired, not in the ordinary course of business of the issuer, within 2 years preceding the filing of the registration statement or proposed to be acquired at such date.

(23) The names and addresses of counsel who have passed on the legality of the issue.

(24) Dates of and parties to, and the general effect concisely stated of every material contract made, not in the ordinary course of business, which contract is to be executed in whole or in part at or after the filing of the registration statement or which contract has been made not more than 2 years before such filing. underwriters) for subscribing or agreeing to subscribe, or procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions, for any shares in, or debentures of, the company, or the rate of any such commission (fourth schedule, pt. I, 10).

11. The amount or estimated amount of preliminary expenses (fourth schedule, pt. I, 11).

6. The amount payable on application and allotment on each share, and, in the case of a second or subsequent offer of shares, the amount offered for subscription on each previous allotment made within the 2 preceding years, the amount actually allotted, and the amount, if any, paid on the shares so allotted (fourth schedule, pt. I, 6).

7. The number and amount of shares and debentures which within the 2 preceding years have been issued, or agreed to be issued, as fully or partly paid up otherwise than in cash, and in the latter case the extent to which they are so paid up, and in either case the consideration for which those shares or debentures have been issued or are proposed or intended to be issued (fourth schedule, pt. I, 7).

12. The amount paid within the 2 preceding years or intended to be paid to any promoter, and the consideration for any such payment (fourth schedule, pt. I, 12).

8. The names and addresses of the vendors of any property purchased or acquired by the company, or proposed so to be purchased or acquired, which is to be paid for wholly or partly out of the proceeds of the issue offered for subscription by the prospectus, or the purchase or acquisition of which has not been completed at the date of issue of the prospectus, and the amount payable in cash, shares, or debentures, to the vendor, and where there is more than one separate vendor, or the company is a subpurchaser, the amount so payable to each vendor (fourth schedule, pt. I, 8).

9. The amount, if any, paid or payable as purchase money in cash, shares, or debentures, for any such property as aforesaid, specifying the amount, if any, payable for good will (fourth schedule, pt. I, 9).

15. Full particulars of the nature and extent of the interest, if any, of every director in the promotion of, or in the property proposed to be acquired by, the company, or, where the interest of such a director consists in being a partner in a firm, the nature and extent of the interest of the firm, with a statement of all sums paid or agreed to be paid to him or to the firm in cash or shares or otherwise by any person either to induce him to become or to qualify him as a director, or otherwise for services rendered by him or by the firm in connection with the promotion or formation of the company (fourth schedule, pt. I, 15).

13. The dates of and parties to every material contract, not being a contract entered into in the ordinary course of the business carried on, or intended to be carried on, by the company or a contract entered into more than 2 years before the date of issue of the prospectus, and a reasonable time and place at which any such material contract or a copy thereof may be inspected (fourth schedule, pt. I, 13).

COMMENTS—CON.

The United States act requires a concise statement of the general effect of every material contract and also requires (sec. 30 of schedule A) a copy of the contracts to be filed. The British act requires only the dates and the parties with a statement of where and when the contracts may be inspected.

UNITED STATES SECURITIES ACT OF 1933—CON.

every material patent or contract for a material patent right, and every contract by or with a public-utility company or an affiliate thereof, providing for the giving or receiving of technical or financial advice or service (if such contract may involve a charge to any party thereto at a rate in excess of $2,500 per year in cash or securities or anything else of value), shall be deemed a material contract.

(25) A balance sheet as of a date not more than 90 days prior to the date of the filing of the registration statement showing all of the assets of the issuer, the nature and cost thereof, whenever determinable, in such detail and in such form as the Commission shall prescribe (with intangible items segregated), including any loan in excess of $20,000 to any officer, director, stockholder, or person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by the issuer, or person under direct or indirect common control with the issuer. All the liabilities of the issuer in such detail and such form as the Commission shall prescribe, including surplus of the issuer showing how and from what sources such surplus was created, all as of a date not more than 90 days prior to the filing of the registration statement. If such statement be not certified by an independent public or certified accountant, in addition to the balance sheet required to be submitted under this schedule, a similar detailed balance sheet of the assets and liabilities of the issuer, certified by an independent public or certified accountant, of a date not more than 1 year prior to the filing of the registration statement, shall be submitted.

(26) A profit-and-loss statement of the issuer showing earnings and income, the nature and source thereof, and the expenses and fixed charges in such detail and such form as the Commission shall prescribe for the latest fiscal year for which such statement is available and for the 2 preceding fiscal years, year by year, or, if such issuer has been in actual business for less than 3 years, then for such time as the issuer has been in actual business, year by year. If the date of the filing of the registration statement is more than 6 months after the close of the last fiscal year, a statement from such closing date to the latest practicable date. Such statement shall show what the practice of the issuer has been during the 3 years or lesser period as to the character of the charges, dividends, or other distributions made against its various surplus accounts, and as to depreciation, depletion, and maintenance charges, in such detail and form as the Commission shall prescribe and if stock dividends or avails from the sale of rights have been credited to income, they shall be shown separately with a statement of the basis upon which the credit is computed. Such statement shall also differentiate between any recurring and nonrecurring income and between any investment and operating income. Such statement shall be certified by an independent public or certified accountant.

(27) If the proceeds, or any part of the proceeds, of the security to be issued is to be applied directly or indirectly to the purchase of any business, a profit-and-loss statement of such business certified by an independent public or certified accountant, meeting the requirements of paragraph (26) of this schedule, for 3 preceding fiscal years, together with a balance sheet, similarly certified, of such business, meeting the requirements of paragraph (25) of this schedule of a date not more than 90 days prior to the filing of the registration statement or at the date such business was acquired by the issuer if the business was acquired by the issuer more than 90 days prior to the filing of the registration statement.

(28) A copy of any agreement or agreements (or, if identic agreements are used, the forms thereof) made with any underwriter, including all contracts and agree-

BRITISH COMPANIES ACT OF 1929—CON.

1. A report by the auditors of the company with respect to the profits of the company in respect of each of the 3 financial years immediately preceding the issue of the prospectus, and with respect to the rates of the dividends, if any, paid by the company in respect of each class of shares in the company in respect of each of the said 3 years, giving particulars of each such class of shares on which such dividends have been paid and particulars of the cases in which no dividends have been paid in respect of any class of shares in respect of any of those years, and, if no accounts have been made up in respect of any part of the period of 3 years ending on a date 3 months before the issue of the prospectus, containing a statement of that fact (fourth schedule, pt. II, 1).

2. If the proceeds, or any part of the proceeds, of the issue of the shares or debentures are or is to be applied directly or indirectly in the purchase of any business, a report made by accountants who shall be named in the prospectus upon the profits of the business in respect of each of the 3 financial years immediately preceding the issue of the prospectus (fourth schedule, pt. II, 2).

(b) The place and time at which the contract under which the said shares or debentures have been or are to be allotted may be inspected (sec. 38 (3) (b).

COMMENTS—CON.

Under the British act this need be shown only where the securities have been allotted to one or a few persons with a view to their disposing of the securities to the ments referred to in paragraph (17) of this schedule.		public. The British act does not require copies to be filed, but only that they be available for inspection (sec. 38).

(29) A copy of the opinion or opinions of counsel in respect to the legality of the issue, with a translation of such opinion, when necessary into the English language.
(30) A copy of all material contracts referred to in paragraph (24) of this schedule, but no disclosure shall be required of any portion of any such contract if the Commission determines that disclosure of such portion would impair the value of the contract and would not be necessary for the protection of investors.
(31) Unless previously filed and registered under the provisions of this title, and brought up to date, (a) a copy of its articles of incorporation, with all amendments thereof and of its existing bylaws or instruments corresponding thereto, whatever the name, if the issuer be a corporation; (b) copy of all instruments by which the trust is created or declared, if the issuer is a trust; (c) a copy of its articles of partnership or association and all other papers pertaining to its origanization, if the issuer is a partnership, unincorporated association, joint-stock company, or any other form of organization.	1. Except where the prospectus is published as a newspaper advertisement, the contents of the memorandum, with the names, descriptions, and addresses of the signatories, and the number of shares subscribed for by them, respectively (fourth schedule, pt. I, 1). * * * Particulars with respect to—	Under the British act this information is not required in a prospectus of a company organized outside Great Britain (sec. 355 (b)). Under the British act this need be shown only in a prospectus of a company organized outside Great Britain (sec. 355). The British act does not require copies to be filed but only that they be available for inspection. These provisions do not apply to a prospectus issued "more than 2 years after the date at which the company is entitled to commence business" (proviso to sec. 355 (1) (a)).
	(ii) the instrument constituting or defining the constitution of the company; (iii) the enactments, or provisions having the force of an enactment, by or under which the incorporation of the company was effected; (iv) an address in Great Britain where the said instrument, enactments, or provisions, or copies thereof, and if the same are in a foreign language, a translation thereof certified in the prescribed manner, can be inspected (sec. 355 (1)). 17. In the case of a company which has been carrying on business, or of a business which has been carried on for less than 3 years, the length of time during which the business of the company or the business to be acquired, as the case may be, has been carried on (fourth schedule, pt. I, 17).
(32) A copy of the underlying agreements or indentures affecting any stock, bonds, or debentures offered or to be offered. In case of certificates of deposit, voting-trust certificates, collateral-trust certificates, certificates of interest or shares in unincorporated investment trusts, equipment-trust certificates, interim or other receipts for certificates, and like securities, the Commission shall establish rules and regulations requiring the submission of information of a like character applicable to such cases, together with such other information as it may deem appropriate and necessary regarding the character, financial or otherwise, of the actual issuer of the securities and/or the person performing the acts and assuming the duties of depositor or manager.		Under the United States act the Federal Trade Commission can make rules and regulations as to the information which must be stated in a registration statement covering securities of other than corporations. There are no similar provisions in the British act, as that act only covers securities of "companies."
	PART III PROVISIONS APPLYING TO PARTS I AND II OF SCHEDULE
	1. The provisions of this schedule with respect to the memorandum and the qualification, remuneration, and interest of directors, the names, descriptions, and addresses of directors or proposed directors, and the amount or estimated amount of the preliminary expenses, shall not apply in the case of a prospectus issued more than 2 years after the date at which the company is entitled to commence business. (iii) Paragraph I of part III of that schedule shall have effect as if the reference to the memorandum were omitted therefrom (sec. 355 (1)).	The provisions of part III of the fourth schedule of the British act clarify and qualify to a certain extent the previously quoted provisions of parts I and II of that schedule. Part III is here given in its entirety instead of splitting provisions up and placing these provisions under the provisions of parts I and II to which part III applies.
	2. Every person shall for the purpose of this schedule be deemed to be a vendor who has entered into any contract, absolute or conditional, for the sale or purchase, or for any option of purchase, of any property to be acquired by the company, in any case where— (a) the purchase money is not fully paid at the date of the issue of the prospectus; (b) the purchase money is to be paid or satisfied wholly or in part out of the proceeds of the issue offered for subscription by the prospectus; (c) the contract depends for its validity or fulfillment on the result of that issue.	Under the British act this applies only where the prospectus is of a company organized outside of Great Britain.

UNITED STATES SECURITIES ACT OF 1933—CON.

SCHEDULE B

(1) Name of borrowing government or subdivision thereof.

(2) Specific purposes in detail and the approximate amounts to be devoted to such purposes, so far as determinable, for which the security to be offered is to supply funds, and if the funds are to be raised in part from other sources, the amounts thereof and the sources thereof, shall be stated.

(3) The amount of the funded debt and the estimated amount of the floating debt outstanding and to be created by the security to be offered, excluding intergovernmental debt, and a brief description of the date, maturity, character of such debt, rate of interest, character of amortization provisions, and the security, if any, therefor. If substitution of any security is permissible, a statement of the conditions under which such substitution is permitted. If substitution is permissible without notice, a specific statement to that effect.

(4) Whether or not the issuer or its predecessor has, within a period of 20 years prior to the filing of the registration statement, defaulted on the principal or interest of any external security, excluding intergovernmental debt, and, if so, the date, amount, and circumstances of such default, and the terms of the succeeding arrangement, if any.

(5) The receipts, classified by source, and the expenditures, classified by purpose, in such detail and form as the Commission shall prescribe for the latest fiscal year for which such information is available and the 2 preceding fiscal years, year by year.

(6) The names and addresses of the underwriters.

(7) The name and address of its authorized agent, if any, in the United States.

(8) The estimated net proceeds to be derived from the sale in the United States of the security to be offered.

(9) The price at which it is proposed that the security shall be offered in the United States to the public or the method by which such price is computed. A variation in price may be proposed prior to the date of the public offering of the security, but the Commission shall immediately be notified of such variation.

(10) All commissions paid or to be paid, directly or indirectly, by the issuer to the underwriters in respect of the sale of the security to be offered. Commissions shall include all cash, securities, contracts, or anything else of value, paid, to be set

BRITISH COMPANIES ACT OF 1929—CON.

3. Where any property to be acquired by the company is to be taken on lease, this schedule shall have effect as if the expression "vendor" included the lessor, and the expression "purchase money" included the consideration for the lease, and the expression "subpurchaser" included a sublessee.

4. For the purposes of paragraph 8 of part I of this schedule where the vendors or any of them are a firm, the members of the firm shall not be treated as separate vendors.

5. If in the case of a company which has been carrying on business, or of a business which has been carried on for less than 3 years, the accounts of the company or business have only been made up in respect of 2 years or 1 year, part II of this schedule shall have effect as if references to 2 years or 1 year, as the case may be, were substituted for references to 3 years.

6. The expression "financial year" in part II of this schedule means the year in respect of which the accounts of the company or of the business, as the case may be, are made up, and where by reason of any alteration of the date on which the financial year of the company or business terminates the accounts of the company or business have been made up for a period greater or less than a year, that greater or less period shall for the purpose of the said part of this schedule be deemed to be a financial year.

COMMENTS—CON.

The British act does not require a prospectus in connection with securities of foreign governments or subdivisions thereof, being limited to companies, and has no provisions corresponding to schedule B of the United States act.

aside, disposed of, or understandings with or for the benefit of any other persons in which the underwriter is interested, made, in connection with the sale of such security. Where any such commission is paid, the amount of such commission paid to each underwriter shall be stated.

(11) The amount or estimated amounts, itemized in reasonable detail, of expenses, other than the commissions specified in paragraph (10) of this schedule, incurred or borne by or for the account of the issuer in connection with the sale of the security to be offered or properly chargeable thereto, including legal, engineering, certification, and other charges.

(12) The names and addresses of counsel who have passed upon the legality of the issue.

(13) A copy of any agreement or agreements made with any underwriter governing the sale of the security within the United States.

(14) An agreement of the issuer to furnish a copy of the opinion or opinions of counsel in respect to the legality of the issue, with a translation, where necessary, into the English language. Such opinion shall set out in full all laws, decrees, ordinances, or other acts of Government under which the issue of such security has been authorized.

PART II—SHARE CAPITAL AND DEBENTURES

Prospectus

34. (1) A prospectus issued by or on behalf of a company or in relation to an intended company shall be dated, and that date shall, unless the contrary is proved, be taken as the date of publication of the prospectus.

(2) A copy of every such prospectus, signed by every person who is named therein as a director or proposed director of the company, or by his agent authorized in writing, shall be delivered to the registrar of companies for registration on or before the date of its publication, and no such prospectus shall be issued until a copy thereof has been so delivered for registration.

(3) The registrar shall not register any prospectus unless it is dated, and the copy thereof signed, in manner required by this section.

(4) Every prospectus shall state on the face of it that a copy has been delivered for registration as required by this section.

(5) If a prospectus is issued without a copy thereof being so delivered, the company, and every person who is knowingly a party to the issue of the prospectus, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding £5 for every day from the date of the issue of the prospectus until a copy thereof is so delivered.

35. (1) Every prospectus issued by or on behalf of a company, or by or on behalf of any person who is or has been engaged or interested in the formation of the company, must state the matters specified in part 1 of the fourth schedule to this act and set out the reports specified in part II of that schedule, and the said parts I and II shall have effect subject to the provisions contained in part III of the said schedule.

(2) A condition requiring or binding an applicant for shares in or debentures of a company to waive compliance with any requirement of this section, or purporting to affect him with notice of any contract, document, or matter not specifically referred to in the prospectus, shall be void.

(3) It shall not be lawful to issue any form of application for shares in or debentures of a company unless the form is issued with a prospectus which complies with the requirements of this section:

Provided, That this subsection shall not apply if it is shown that the form of application was issued either—

(a) In connection with a bona fide invitation to a person to enter into an underwriting agreement with respect to the shares or debentures; or

(b) In relation to shares or debentures which were not offered to the public.

If any person acts in contravention of the provisions of this subsection, he shall be liable to a fine not exceeding £500.

(4) In the event of noncompliance with or contravention of any of the requirements of this section, a director or other person responsible for the prospectus shall not incur any liability by reason of the noncompliance or contravention, if—

(a) as regards any matter not disclosed, he proves that he was not cognizant thereof; or

(b) he proves that the noncompliance or contravention arose from an honest mistake of fact on his part; or

(c) the noncompliance or contravention was in respect of matters which in the opinion of the court dealing with the case were immaterial or was otherwise such as ought, in the opinion of that court, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, reasonably to be excused:

Provided, That in the event of failure to include in a prospectus a statement with respect to the matters specified in paragraph 15 of part I of the fourth schedule to this act, no director or other person shall incur any liability in respect of the failure unless it be proved that he had knowledge of the matters not disclosed.

(5) This section shall not apply to the issue to existing members or debenture holders of a company of a prospectus or form of application relating to shares in or debentures of the company, whether an applicant for shares or debentures will or will not have the right to renounce in favor of other persons, but subject as aforesaid, this section shall apply to a prospectus or a form of application whether issued on or with reference to the formation of a company or subsequently.

(6) Nothing in this section shall limit or diminish any liability which any person may incur under the general law or this act apart from this section.

36. (1) A company limited by shares or a company limited by guarantee and having a share capital shall not previously to the statutory meeting vary the terms of a contract referred to in the prospectus, or statement in lieu of prospectus, except subject to the approval of the statutory meeting.

(2) This section shall not apply to a private company.

37. (1) Where a prospectus invites persons to subscribe for shares in or debentures of a company—

(a) every person who is a director of the company at the time of the issue of the prospectus; and

(b) every person who has authorized himself to be named and is named in the prospectus as a director or as having agreed to become a director either immediately or after an interval of time; and

(c) every person being a promoter of the company; and

(d) every person who has authorized the issue of the prospectus, shall be liable to pay compensation to all persons who subscribe for any shares or debentures on the faith of the prospectus for the loss or damage they may have sustained by reason of any untrue statement therein, or in any report or memorandum appearing on the face thereof, or by reference incorporated therein or issued therewith, unless it is proved—

(i) that having consented to become a director of the company he withdrew his consent before the issue of the prospectus and that it was issued without his authority or consent; or

(ii) that the prospectus was issued without his knowledge or consent, and that on becoming aware of its issue he forthwith gave reasonable public notice that it was issued without his knowledge or consent; or

(iii) that after the issue of the prospectus and before allotment thereunder, he, on becoming aware of any untrue statement therein, withdrew his consent thereto, and gave reasonable public notice of the withdrawal, and of the reason therefor; or

(iv) that—

(a) as regards every untrue statement not purporting to be made on the authority of any expert, or of a public official document or statement, he had reasonable ground to believe, and did up to the time of the allotment of the shares or debentures, as the case may be, believe, that the statement was true; and

(b) as regards every untrue statement purporting to be a statement by an expert or contained in what purports to be a copy of or extract from a report or valuation of an expert, it fairly represented the statement, or was a correct and fair copy of or extract from the report or valuation; and

(c) as regards every untrue statement purporting to be a statement made by an official person or contained in what purports to be a copy of or extract from a public official document, it was a correct and fair representation of the statement or copy of or extract from the document:

Provided, That a person shall be liable to pay compensation as aforesaid if it is proved that he had no reasonable ground to believe that the person making any such statement, report, or valuation as is mentioned in paragraph (iv) (b) of this subsection was competent to make it.

(2) Where the prospectus contains the name of a person as a director of the company, or as having agreed to become a director thereof, and he has not consented to become a director, or has withdrawn his consent before the issue of the prospectus, and has not authorized or consented to the issue thereof, the directors of the company, except any without whose knowledge or consent the prospectus was issued, and any other person who authorized the issue thereof, shall be liable to indemnify the person named as aforesaid against all damages, costs, and expenses to which he may be made liable by reason of his name having been inserted in the prospectus, or in defending himself against any action or legal proceedings brought against him in respect thereof.

(3) Every person who, by reason of his being a director or named as a director or as having agreed to become a director, or of his having authorized the issue of the prospectus, becomes liable to make any payment under this section may recover contribution, as in cases of contract, from any other person who, if sued separately, would have been liable to make the same payment, unless the person who has become so liable was, and that other person was not, guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation.

(4) For the purpose of this section—

The expression "promoter" means a promoter who was a party to the preparation of the prospectus, or of the portion thereof containing the untrue statement but does not include any person by reason of his acting in a professional capacity for persons engaged in procuring the formation of the company.

The expression "expert" includes engineer, valuer, accountant, and any other person whose profession gives authority to a statement made by him.

38. (1) Where a company allots or agrees to allot any shares in or debentures of the company with a view to all or any of those shares or debentures being offered for sale to the public, any document by which the offer for sale to the public is made shall for all purposes be deemed to be a prospectus issued by the company, and all enactments and rules of law as to the contents of prospectuses and to liability in respect of statements in and omissions from prospectuses, or otherwise relating to prospectuses, shall apply and have effect accordingly, as if the shares or debentures had been offered to the public for subscription and as if persons accepting the offer in respect of any shares or debentures were subscribers for those shares or debentures, but without prejudice to the liability, if any, of the persons by whom the offer is made, in respect of misstatements contained in the document or otherwise in respect thereof.

(2) For the purposes of this act it shall, unless the contrary is proved, be evidence that an allotment of, or an agreement to allot, shares or debentures was made with a view to the shares or debentures being offered for sale to the public if it is shown—

(a) that an offer of the shares or debentures or of any of them for sale to the public was made within 6 months after the allotments or agreement to allot; or

(b) that at the date when the offer was made, the whole consideration to be received by the company in respect of the shares or debentures had not been so received.

(3) Section 34 of this act as applied by this section shall have effect as though the persons making the offer were persons named in a prospectus as directors of a company, and section 35 of this act as applied by this section shall have effect as if it required a prospectus to state in addition to the matters required by that section to be stated in a prospectus—

(a) the net amount of the consideration received or to be received by the company in respect of the shares or debentures to which the offer relates; and

(b) the place and time at which the contract under which the said shares or debentures have been or are to be alloted may be inspected.

(4) Where a person making an offer to which this section relates is a company or a firm, it shall be sufficient if the document aforesaid is signed on behalf of the company or firm by two directors of the company or not less than half of the partners, as the case may be, and any such director or partner may sign by his agent authorized in writing.

PART XII. RESTRICTIONS ON SALE OF SHARES AND OFFERS OF SHARES FOR SALE

354.—(1) It shall not be lawful for any person—

(a) to issue, circulate or distribute in Great Britain any prospectus offering for subscription shares in or debentures of a company incorporated or to be incorporated outside Great Britain, whether the company has or has not established, or when formed will or will not establish, a place of business in Great Britain, unless—

(i) before the issue, circulation or distribution of the prospectus in Great Britain a copy thereof, certified by the chairman and two other directors of the company as having been approved by resolution of the managing body, has been delivered for registration to the registrar of companies;

(ii) the prospectus states on the face of it that the copy has been so delivered;

(iii) the prospectus is dated;

(iv) the prospectus otherwise complies with this part of this act; or

(b) to issue to any person in Great Britain a form of application for shares in or debentures of such a company or intended company as aforesaid, unless the form is issued with a prospectus which complies with this part of this act;

Provided, That this provision shall not apply if it is shown that the form of application was issued in connection with a bona fide invitation to a person to enter into an underwriting agreement with respect to the shares or debentures.

(2) This section shall not apply to the issue to existing members or debenture holders of a company of a prospectus or form of application relating to shares in or debentures of the company, whether an applicant for shares or debentures will or will not have the right to renounce in favor of other persons, but, subject as aforesaid, this section shall apply to a prospectus or form of application whether issued on or with reference to the formation of a company or subsequently.

(3) Where any document by which any shares in or debentures of a company incorporated outside Great Britain are offered for sale to the public would, if the company concerned had been a company within the meaning of this act, have been deemed by virtue of section 38 of this act to be a prospectus issued by the company, that document shall be deemed to be, for the purposes of this section, a prospectus issued by the company.

(4) An offer of shares or debentures for subscription or sale to any person whose ordinary business or part of whose ordinary business it is to buy or sell shares or debentures, whether as principal or agent, shall not be deemed an offer to the public for the purposes of this section.

(5) Section 37 of this act shall extend to every prospectus to which this section applies.

(6) Any person who is knowingly responsible for the issue, circulation, or distribution of any prospectus, or for the issue of a form of application for shares or debentures, in contravention of the provisions of this section shall be liable to a fine not exceeding £500.

(7) In this and the next following section the expressions "prospectus", "shares", and "debentures" have the same meanings as when used in relation to a company incorporated under this act.

355. (1) In order to comply with this part of this act a prospectus in addition to complying with the provisions of subparagraphs (ii) and (iii) of paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of the last foregoing section must—

(a) contain particulars with respect to the following matters—

(i) the objects of the company;

(ii) the instrument constituting or defining the constitution of the company;

(iii) the enactments, or provisions having the force of an enactment, by or under which the incorporation of the company was effected;

(iv) an address in Great Britain where the said instrument, enactments or provisions, or copies thereof, and if the same are in a foreign language a translation thereof certified in the prescribed manner, can be inspected;

(v) the date on which and the country in which the company was incorporated;

(vi) whether the company has established a place of business in Great Britain, and, if so, the address of its principal office in Great Britain:

Provided, That the provisions of subparagraphs (i), (ii), (iii), and (iv) of this paragraph shall not apply in the case of a prospectus issued more than 2 years after the date at which the company is entitled to commence business.

(b) Subject to the provisions of this section, state the matters specified in part I of the fourth schedule to this act (other than those specified in paragraph I of the said part I) and set out the reports specified in part II of that schedule subject always to the provisions contained in part III of the said schedule:

Provided, That—

(i) where any prospectus is published as a newspaper advertisement, it shall be a sufficient compliance with the requirement that the prospectus must specify the objects of the company if the advertisement specifies the primary object with which the company was formed; and

(ii) in paragraph 3 of part I of the said fourth schedule a reference to the constitution of the company shall be substituted for the reference to the articles; and

(iii) paragraph I of part III of that schedule shall have effect as if the reference to the memorandum were omitted therefrom.

(2) Any condition requiring or binding any applicant for shares or debentures to waive compliance with any requirement of this section, or purporting to affect him with notice of any contract, document, or matter not specifically referred to in the prospectus, shall be void.

(3) In the event of noncompliance with or contravention of any of the requirements of this section, a director or other person responsible for the prospectus shall not incur any liability by reason of the noncompliance or contravention, if—

(a) as regards any matter not disclosed, he proves that he was not cognizant thereof; or

(b) he proves that the noncompliance or contravention arose from an honest mistake of fact on his part; or

(c) the noncompliance or contravention was in respect of matters which, in the opinion of the court dealing with the case, were immaterial or were otherwise such as ought, in the opinion of that court, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, reasonably to be excused:

Provided, That in the event of failure to include in a prospectus a statement with respect to the matters contained in paragraph 15 of part I of the fourth schedule to this act, no director or other person shall incur any liability in respect of the failure unless it be proved that he had knowledge of the matters not disclosed.

(4) Nothing in this section shall limit or diminish any liability which any person may incur under the general law or this act, apart from this section.

356. (1) It shall not be lawful for any person to go from house to house offering shares for subscription or purchase to the public or any member of the public.

In this subsection the expression "house" shall not include an office used for business purposes.

(2) Subject as hereinafter provided in this subsection, it shall not be lawful to make an offer in writing to any member of the public (not being a person whose ordinary business or part of whose ordinary business it is to buy or sell shares, whether as principal or agent) of any shares for purchase, unless the offer is accompanied by a statement in writing (which must be signed by the person making the offer and dated) containing such particulars as are required by this section to be included therein and otherwise complying with the requirements of this section, or, in the case of shares in a company incorporated outside Great Britain, either by such a statement as aforesaid, or by such a prospectus as complies with this part of this act:

Provided, That the provisions of this subsection shall not apply—

(a) where the shares to which the offer relates are shares which are quoted on, or in respect of which permission to deal has been granted by, any recognized stock exchange in Great Britain and the offer so states and specifies the stock exchange; or

(b) where the shares to which the offer relates are shares which a company has allotted or agreed to allot with a view to their being offered for sale to the public; or

(c) where the offer was made only to persons with whom the person making the offer has been in the habit of doing regular business in the purchase or sale of shares.

(3) The written statement aforesaid shall not contain any matter other than the particulars required by this section to be included therein, and shall not be in characters less large or less legible than any characters used in the offer or in any document sent therewith.

(4) The said statement shall contain particulars with respect to the following matters—

(a) whether the person making the offer is acting as principal or agent, and if as agent the name of his principal and an address in Great Britain where that principal can be served with process;

(b) The date on which and the country in which the company was incorporated and the address of its registered or principal office in Great Britain;

(c) the authorized share capital of the company and the amount thereof which has been issued, the classes into which it is divided and the rights of each class of shareholders in respect of capital, dividends, and voting;

(d) the dividends, if any, paid by the company on each class of shares during each of the 3 financial years immediately preceding the offer, and if no dividend has been paid in respect of shares of any particular class during any of those years, a statement to that effect;

(e) the total amount of any debentures issued by the company and outstanding at the date of the statement, together with the rate of interest payable thereon;

(f) the names and addresses of the directors of the company;

(g) whether or not the shares offered are fully paid up, and, if not, to what extent they are paid up;

(h) whether or not the shares are quoted on, or permission to deal therein has been granted by, any recognized stock exchange in Great Britain or elsewhere, and, if so, which, and, if not, a statement that they are not so quoted or that no such permission has been granted;

(i) where the offer relates to units, particulars of the names and addresses of the persons in whom the shares represented by the units are vested, the date of and the parties to any document defining the terms on which those shares are held, and an address in Great Britain where that document or a copy thereof can be inspected.

In this subsection the expression "company" means the company by which the shares to which the statement relates were or are to be issued.

(5) If any person acts, or incites, causes or procures any person to act in contravention of this section, he shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months or to a fine not exceeding £200 or to both such imprisonment and fine, and in the case of a second or subsequent offense to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding £500, or to both such imprisonment and fine.

(6) Where a person convicted of an offense under this section is a company (whether a company within the meaning of this act or not), every director and every officer concerned in the management of the company shall be guilty of the like offense unless he proves that the act constituting the offense took place without his knowledge or consent.

(7) In this section, unless the context otherwise requires, the expression "shares" means the shares of a company, whether a company within the meaning of this act or not, and includes debentures and units, and the expression "unit" means any rights or interest (by whatever name called) in a share, and for the purposes of this section a person shall not in relation to a company be regarded as not being a member of the public by reason only that he is a holder of shares in the company or a purchaser of goods from the company.

(8) Where any person is convicted in England of having made an offer in contravention of the provisions of this section, the court before which he is convicted may order that any contract made as a result of the offer shall be void and where it makes any such order may give such consequential directions as it thinks proper for the repayment of any money or the retransfer of any shares.

Where the court makes an order under this subsection (whether with or without consequential directions) an appeal against the order and the consequential directions, if any, shall lie to the high court.

380. (1) In this act, unless the context otherwise requires, the following expressions have the meanings hereby assigned to them (that is to say):

"Company" means a company formed and registered under this act or an existing company.

"Existing company" means a company formed and registered under the joint stock companies acts, the companies act, 1862, or the companies (consolidation) act, 1908, but does not include a company registered under the said enactments in Northern Ireland or the Irish Free State.

* * * * * * *

"Debenture" includes debenture stock, bonds, and any other securities of a company whether constituting a charge on the assets of the company or not;

"Director" includes any person occupying the position of director by whatever name called;

* * * * * * *

"Prospectus" means any prospectus, notice, circular, advertisement, or other invitation, offering to the public for subscription or purchase any shares or debentures of a company;

* * * * * * *

"The registrar of companies", or, when used in relation to registration of companies, "the registrar", means the registrar or other officer performing under this act the duty of registration of companies in England or Scotland, or in the stannaries, as the case requires;

"Share" means share in the share capital of a company, and includes stock except where a distinction between stock and shares is expressed or implied.

FOURTH SCHEDULE

PART I. MATTERS REQUIRED TO BE STATED IN PROSPECTUS

1. Except where the prospectus is published as a newspaper advertisement, the contents of the memorandum, with the names, descriptions, and addresses of the signatories, and the number of shares subscribed for by them respectively.

2. The number of founders or management or deferred shares, if any, and the nature and extent of the interest of the holders in the property and profits of the company.

3. The number of shares, if any fixed by the articles as the qualification of a director, and any provision in the articles as to the remuneration of the directors.

4. The names, descriptions, and addresses of the directors or proposed directors.

5. Where shares are offered to the public for subscription, particulars as to—

(i) the minimum amount which, in the opinion of the directors, must be raised by the issue of those shares in order to provide the sums, or, if any part thereof is to be defrayed in any other manner, the balance of the sums, required to be provided in respect of each of the following matters:

(a) The purchase price of any property purchased or to be purchased which is to be defrayed in whole or in part out of the proceeds of the issue;

(b) any preliminary expenses payable by the company, and any commission so payable to any person in consideration of his agreeing to subscribe for, or of his procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions for, any shares in the company;

(c) the repayment of any moneys borrowed by the company in respect of any of the foregoing matters;

(d) working capital; and

(ii) the amounts to be provided in respect of the matters aforesaid otherwise than out of the proceeds of the issue and the sources out of which those amounts are to be provided.

6. The amount payable on application and allotment on each share, and, in the case of a second or subsequent offer of shares, the amount offered for subscription on each previous allotment made within the 2 preceding years, the amount actually allotted, and the amount, if any, paid on the shares so allotted.

7. The number and amount of shares and debentures which within the two preceding years have been issued, or agreed to be issued, as fully or partly paid up otherwise than in cash, and in the latter case the extent to which they are so paid up, and in either case the consideration for which those shares or debentures have been issued or are proposed or intended to be issued.

8. The names and addresses of the vendors of any property purchased or acquired by the company, or proposed so to be purchased or acquired, which is to be paid for wholly or partly out of the proceeds of the issue offered for subscription by the prospectus, or the purchase or acquisition of which has not been completed at the date of issue of the prospectus, and the amount payable in cash, shares, or debentures, to the vendor, and where there is more than one separate vendor, or the company is a subpurchaser, the amount so payable to each vendor.

9. The amount, if any, paid or payable as purchase money in cash, shares, or debentures, for any such property as aforesaid, specifying the amount, if any, payable for goodwill.

10. The amount, if any, paid within the 2 preceding years, or payable, as commission (but not including commission to subunderwriters) for subscribing or agreeing to subscribe, or procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions, for any shares in, or debentures of, the company, or the rate of any such commission.

11. The amount or estimated amount of preliminary expenses.

12. The amount paid within the 2 preceding years or intended to be paid to any promoter, and the consideration for any such payment.

13. The dates of and parties to every material contract, not being a contract entered into in the ordinary course of the business carried on or intended to be carried on by the company, or a contract entered into more than 2 years before the date of issue of the prospectus, and a reasonable time and place at which any such material contract or a copy thereof may be inspected.

14. The names and addresses of the auditors, if any, of the company.

15. Full particulars of the nature and extent of the interest, if any, of every director in the promotion of, or in the property proposed to be acquired by, the company, or, where the interest of such a director consists in being a partner in a firm, the nature and extent of the interest of the firm, with a statement of all sums paid or agreed to be paid to him or to the firm in cash or shares or otherwise by any person either to induce him to become, or to qualify him as, a director, or, otherwise for services rendered by him or by the firm in connection with the promotion or formation of the company.

16. If the prospectus invites the public to subscribe for shares in the company and the share capital of the company is divided into different classes of shares, the right of voting at meetings of the company conferred by, and the rights in respect of capital and dividends attached to, the several classes of shares respectively.

17. In the case of a company which has been carrying on business, or of a business which has been carried on for less than 8 years, the length of time during which the business of the company or the business to be acquired, as the case may be, has been carried on.

PART II. REPORTS TO BE SET OUT IN PROSPECTUS

1. A report by the auditors of the company with respect to the profits of the company in respect of each of the 3 financial years immediately preceding the issue of the prospectus, and with respect to the rates of the dividends, if any, paid by the company in respect of each class of shares in the company in respect of each of the said 3 years, giving particulars of each such class of shares on which such dividends have been paid and particulars of the cases in which no dividends have been paid in respect of any class of shares in respect of any of those years, and, if no accounts have been made up in respect of any part of the period of 3 years ending on a date 3 months before the issue of the prospectus, containing a statement of that fact.

2. If the proceeds, or any part of the proceeds, of the issue of the shares or debentures are or is to be applied directly or indirectly in the purchase of any business, a report made by accountants who shall be named in the prospectus upon the profits of the business in respect of each of the 3 financial years immediately preceding the issue of the prospectus.

PART III. PROVISIONS APPLYING TO PARTS I AND II OF SCHEDULE

1. The provisions of this schedule with respect to the memorandum and the qualification, remuneration, and interest of directors, the names, descriptions, and addresses of directors or proposed directors, and the amount or estimated amount of the preliminary expenses, shall not apply in the case of a prospectus issued more than 2 years after the date at which the company is entitled to commence business.

2. Every person shall for the purposes of this schedule be deemed to be a vendor who has entered into any contract, absolute or conditional, for the sale or purchase, or for any option of purchase, of any property to be acquired by the company, in any case where—

(a) the purchase money is not fully paid at the date of the issue of the prospectus;

(b) the purchase money is to be paid or satisfied wholly or in part out of the proceeds of the issue offered for subscription by the prospectus;

(c) the contract depends for its validity or fulfillment on the result of that issue.

3. Where any property to be acquired by the company is to be taken on lease, this schedule shall have effect as if the expression "vendor" included the lessor, and the expression "purchase money" included the consideration for the lease, and the expression "subpurchaser" included a sublessee.

4. For the purposes of paragraph 8 of part I of this schedule where the vendors or any of them are a firm, the members of the firm shall not be treated as separate vendors.

5. If in the case of a company which has been carrying on business, or of a business which has been carried on for less than 3 years, the accounts of the company or business have only been made up in respect of 2 years or 1 year, part II of this schedule shall have effect as if references to 2 years or 1 year, as the case may be, were substituted for references to 3 years.

6. The expression "financial year" in part II of this schedule means the year in respect of which the accounts of the company or of the business, as the case may be, are made up, and where by reason of any alteration of the date on which the financial year of the company or business terminates the accounts of the company or business have been made up for a period greater or less than a year, that greater or less period shall for the purpose of the said part of this schedule be deemed to be a financial year.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, my amendment was prepared from a photostatic copy of the British companies act, an act which, in my opinion, is far superior to the United States Securities Act of 1933. The United States Securities Act has been found unworkable; it has been found impractical; it has been found to be detrimental to the recovery of business; and it is nothing but a hindrance to business. It has prevented practically any public issues of securities being made. My firm in New York has had public issues of securities offered to it, and I have said that I would not consent to take any issue so long as this statute is on the books.

The British companies act goes further than our act does. There is great complaint about the hawking of securities from house to house by what is called supersalesmanship. That has been a continual menace to the public. When a man dies and leaves his widow an insurance fund from which she receives $5,000 or $10,000, she is immediately besieged by people she never heard of before who try to get the money away from her. Under my amendment it is specified that securities may not be hawked from house to house; that people may not be solicited in their homes to buy securities by persons with whom they have not previously done business.

There are many features of the British companies act which are far superior to our act. The British companies act protects the public in every way, and its provisions have been tried in the courts and proven, while our act has not been tried in the courts, and there are many features of our act which are either detrimental to business or else are impossible of execution.

Therefore, I hope that my amendment will be favorably considered by the Senate. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that in substance the Securities Act is the British companies act. It is founded on the British companies act. It is practically that act, modified to come within the constitutional power of the legislative authority of the United States with respect to interstate commerce, for instance. In England they have no such question as the difference between intrastate and interstate commerce. Consequently the British companies act does not apply fully in this country. The whole United States act is founded upon the British companies act.

I wish to read from an article by Bernard Flexner entitled "The Fight on the Securities Act", appearing in the Atlantic Monthly of February 1934:

> In substance the Securities Act is the English company's act, modified to come within the constitutional power of the Federal Legislature to regulate interstate commerce and to recognize the fact that in England, except for a very unusual Hatry or Kylsant, the distribution of securities is a decorous, traditional business, offering its wares only to institutions and wary family solicitors, while in the United States it has been a high-pressure racket that jangled every housewife's doorbell.

Mr. President, there is quite a different situation in the United States from the situation existing in England.

Mr. KEAN. That is just the reason, Mr. President, why I am offering my amendment. My amendment absolutely specifies that securities may not be offered to the housewife by people unknown to her.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask for a vote on the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I should like to say further to the Senator from Florida that I have asked unanimous consent to have printed as a part of my remarks an exact comparison of the United States Securities Act of 1933 with the British companies act of 1929.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I have tried to view this whole question as sanely and as fairly as possible; I have tried to keep my feet on the ground. I have been familiar from the beginning with the investigation of the stock exchange, conducted by the Banking and Currency Committee. I am familiar with business, having been in business for a good part of my life. I am familiar with banking, having practiced banking for many years. I am familiar with the British securities act, having worked under that act for many years. I know its advantages and how fair it is to investors. I am entirely in sympathy with certain of the amendments proposed by the Senator from Florida to the Securities Act, particularly those amendments which define certain terms and then, in my opinion, considerably liberalize the present law known as the "Securities Act of 1933." However, Mr. President, in my opinion, they do not go far enough. The Securities Act, as it exists today, and the bill which we shall very likely pass in a short time, known as the "national stock exchange bill", are companion bills. I hope, if the stock exchange bill shall pass, that the two bills will be administered by the same commission, a commission other than the Federal Trade Commission.

But, Mr. President, we are confronted with a grave situation. After all, unemployment is the great peril, the great problem confronting this country. We are not going to solve it by artificial methods; we are not going to solve it by taxing people to defray the living expenses of those who do not work because they cannot obtain work. Those people must be put to work at normal employment by having a recovery in our business institutions. Our business must prosper before unemployment can very materially be reduced. That will be the test of recovery; that is always the test of society. Society can never succeed unless it can take care, at least with a meager subsistence, of the poorest and lowliest of its members. Otherwise, it breaks down; it falls, leading to riots, and even to revolution and chaos.

The Securities Act of 1933 and the pending bill are, in my opinion, too illiberal. I do not criticize in any way a proper effort to regulate stock exchanges; it seems to me that is an exceedingly useful, and, in fact, necessary undertaking. But the portion of the pending bill affecting business and the treatment accorded securities under the Securities Act are so restrictive as to give a black eye to business. They will keep business from properly financing its requirements.

Those requirements have not been pressing during the last year since the Securities Act was passed; therefore, we have not heard very much about its defects; but from now on, assuming a recovery or even a partial recovery of normal business the Securities Act is going to appear in glaring fashion as a restrictive and almost a paralyzing measure. It will so restrict business that business will not be able to finance its requirements properly. It would be difficult to get the proper personnel on a board of directors today if one were starting a new business, or to hire the proper attorneys, because the restrictions imposed upon the men holding such relations to a corporation are so great.

I hope that many of the amendments proposed by the Senator from Florida will be adopted, and I am sure they will be, as they tend to liberalize the law. I desire, however, to offer some other amendments, and I wish to offer them now for the consideration of the Senate. They have been prepared by a group of business men which is known as the "Association of Durable Industries", who met together to see whether they could not suggest reasonable amendments. I want these amendments to be passed on by this body today, if possible, before a vote is had on the Fletcher amendments, because, in my opinion, they are not only useful but they are necessary. I send the amendments to the desk and offer them now as amendments to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendments proposed by the Senator from Connecticut to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendments submitted by Mr. WALCOTT.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, may I interrupt the reading for a moment to say that the amendments submitted by me all tend to synchronize our Securities Act to a greater extent with the British securities act than does the Fletcher amendment, and, in addition, propose to furnish such protection to normal legitimate business as is needed. I think the amendments are complicated, and it is difficult to follow them carefully unless one has before him the Securities Act of 1933. I beg the Senate to pay careful attention to the reading of the amendments, because, in my opinion, if they should be ignored or passed by flippantly and without careful consideration, we would do the business of the country a great injury. I ask not only the patience and indulgence of the Senate but careful attention, and even, if necessary, the postponement of final action until Monday or Tuesday of next week, so that the committee may consider the amendments submitted by me.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALCOTT. I do.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator offers these as amendments to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida when, as a matter of fact, in some respects, they are intended to be substitutes, are they not, because they conflict in some respects with the amendment which the Senator from Florida has offered and which is now pending?

Mr. WALCOTT. I think they do not conflict in any way. The committee of the Association of Durable Industries, which prepared these amendments, has carefully considered the Fletcher amendment, and approved of the Fletcher amendment, so that the amendments offered by me merely supplement the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida and, in my opinion, clarify it.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether his amendments have been printed?

Mr. WALCOTT. No; they have not been printed; they are new amendments; and that is why I am asking that careful attention be given to the reading and that time be given for their consideration, for they are complicated, and I doubt whether there is time today adequately to consider them.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, as the amendments have been presented by the Senator from Connecticut they do not seem to be amendments to the amendment which I have offered; rather they seem to be amendments to the Securities Act, which should, obviously, be presented in the same way as the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], that is, as a substitute for my amendment. If the Senator has any amendment to the amendment which I have offered, it would be in order, of course, but it should be presented in that way.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, strictly these are not, in my opinion, amendments to the amendment which is before us at this time, but I should like to have them added to the amendment of the Senator from Florida. In other words, they are amendments to the Securities Act of 1933, and I wish to add them at the end of the amendment now under consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if they do not conflict with the amendment of the Senator from Florida but refer to other provisions of the present Securities Act not covered by his amendment, why can we not vote on the amendment of the Senator from Florida, and then let the Senator from Connecticut offer his as independent amendments to the bill and not as amendments to the amendment?

Mr. WALCOTT. I would rather have them considered as amendments to come in at the end of the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I merely want to suggest that it would seem that the amendments offered by the Senator from Connecticut relate to the same identical paragraphs of the Securities Act of 1933 as does the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida. I am not sure that I am correctly advised, but I have here on my desk a copy of the amendments which the Senator from Connecticut just sent to the desk. I suggest that he allow the amendments to be read at this time, so that we may ascertain whether or not we are correct in understanding that they relate to the same provisions of the Securities Act as does the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will proceed with the reading of the amendments offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The legislative clerk resumed the reading of the amendments submitted by Mr. WALCOTT.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the reading to submit an inquiry? I have followed the reading of the clerk, and thus far I have not seen any difference between the amendment being read by the clerk from the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida. Is the clerk reading the wrong amendment? The reading is identical, so far as I have been able to follow it, with the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there is one difference I have noted. The word "may" is inserted instead of the word "shall." So far as I can trace it, that is the only difference.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I think that is the only difference in the first amendment. It will be found by very careful comparison, however, that there are other slight changes. These are new amendments, and I have not had sufficient time to thoroughly familiarize myself with them. I believe in them all. I believe they would materially help the bill. I want them considered, and I prefer that we be given more time to consider them in some way by referring the entire matter of amendment of the Securities Act to the committee or a subcommittee, or at least take a day or two longer to consider them on the floor of the Senate. It is most important and vital to the recovery of business.

The Senator from Ohio, I think, has not followed the reading closely, because there is a change of one or two words as compared with the Fletcher amendment. Therefore my amendment could fairly be construed as a substitute.

Mr. FESS. That is the reason why I rose. If there is any difference whatever, then it should be offered as a substitute.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Connecticut a question?

Mr. WALCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the difference between the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut and the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida consists in only a few words, may I ask why he does not offer to amend the amendment of the Senator from Florida, which process would point out and make clear to the Senate the changes he proposes? It seems to me that would be the more simple procedure.

Mr. WALCOTT. I expect to do that. While that is true of the first amendment, which merely changes one word, it is not true of some of the others.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course we are only considering one amendment at a time.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; it is all one amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

Mr. FESS. That answers my question. I thought the clerk might be reading the wrong amendment. If there are other changes further on, that will become apparent as the reading proceeds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Parliamentarian advises that the amendment should be considered as an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think there is no doubt about that. I think that is the proper way to consider it.

Allow me to say to the Senator that there is not much difference, as he suggests; only a difference of a word or two here and there. The whole matter has to go to conference if our plans are followed. If we shall agree to my amendment, the Senator's suggestions and the proposal as read and placed in the RECORD will all be considered by the conferees, and we can adjust the matter in conference.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I feel so strongly about the whole matter and I deem it so vital to our recovery program that the Securities Act of 1933 be further liberalized, and liberalized to a greater extent than is proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Florida, that I am unwilling to trust the conferees with the complete liberalization of it until we have thoroughly considered the whole matter in the Senate. Therefore I feel that I should insist upon having the amendment read and placed before and considered by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be considered as an amendment in the form of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Florida. The clerk will continue the reading of the proposed substitute.

The legislative clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment submitted by Mr. WALCOTT in the nature of a substitute for Mr. FLETCHER's amendment, as follows:

On page 57, after line 9, insert the following:

"TITLE II. AMENDMENTS TO SECURITIES ACT OF 1933

"SEC. 201. (a) That paragraph (1) of section 2 of the Securities Act of 1933 is amended to read as follows:

"'The term "security" means any note, stock, Treasury stock, bond, debenture, evidence of indebtedness, certificate of interest, or participation in any profit-sharing agreement, collateral-trust certificate, preorganization certificate or subscription, transferable share, investment contract, voting-trust certificate, certificate of deposit for a security, fractional undivided interest in oil, gas, or other mineral rights, or, in general, any interest or interest commonly known as a "security", or any certificate of interest or participation temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for, or warrant or right to subscribe or to purchase any of the foregoing.'

"(b) Paragraph (4) of such section 2 is amended to read as follows:

"'(4) The term "issuer" means every person who issues or proposes to issue any security, except that with respect to certificates of deposit, voting-trust certificates, or collateral-trust certificates, or with respect to certificates of interest or shares in an unincorporated investment trust not having a board of directors (or persons performing similar functions), or of the fixed, restricted management or unit type, the term "issuer" means the person performing the acts and assuming the duties of depositor or manager pursuant to the provisions of the trust or other agreement or instrument under which such securities are issued; and except that with respect to equipment-trust certificates or like securities, the term "issuer" means the person by whom the equipment or property is or is to be used; and except that with respect to fractional undivided interests in oil, gas, or other mineral rights, the term "issuer" means the owner of any such right (whether whole or fractional) who creates fractional interests therein for the purpose of public offering.'

"(c) Paragraph (10) of such section 2 is to be amended to read as follows:

"'(10) The term "prospectus" means any prospectus, notice, circular, advertisement, letter, or communication, written or by radio, which offers any security for sale; except that (a) a communication shall not be deemed a prospectus if prior to or at the same time with such communication a written prospectus meeting the requirements of section 10 was sent, mailed, or given to the person to whom the communication was made by the person making such communication or his principal, and (b) a notice, circular, advertisement, letter, or communication in respect of a security shall not be deemed to be a prospectus if (1) it states from whom a written prospectus meeting the requirements of section 10 may be obtained and in addition does no more than (1) identify the security and state the price thereof, and (2) state by whom subscriptions will be received or orders executed or similar information.'

"(d) Paragraph (11) of such section 2 is amended to read as follows:

"'(11) The term "underwriter" means any person who has purchased from an issuer with a view to, or sells for an issuer in connection with, the distribution of any security, or participates or has a direct or indirect participation in any such undertaking. A person shall not be deemed an underwriter by reason of (a) the receipt of a commission from an underwriter or dealer not in excess of the usual and customary distributors' commission, or (b) the purchase of a security from an underwriter or dealer at a concession or discount from the price at which the security is offered to the public which is not in excess of the usual and customary distributors' commission, or (c) making an actual underwriting agreement with an issuer or underwriter or participating therein or receiving compensation therefor or purchasing, pursuant to such agreement, all or any part of such security, provided such person does not dispose of the security so purchased until more than 6 months after he shall have made payment in full for such security, or (d) performing the duties of a fiscal agent, depositary, transfer agent, or registrar, or duties of a similar nature, and receiving compensation therefor, or (e) recommending the purchase, sale, or exchange of a security, provided that any compensation which such person receives for making such recommendation from an issuer, underwriter, or dealer shall be fully disclosed. As used in this paragraph, the term "issuer" shall include, in addition to an issuer, any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by the issuer, or any person under direct or indirect common control with the issuer.'

"(e) Paragraph (12) of such section 2 is amended to read as follows:

"'(12) The term "dealer" means any person engaged in the business of buying and selling securities, as agent, broker, or principal, but does not include any person insofar as he buys or sells securities for his own account, either individually or in some fiduciary capacity, but not as a part of a regular business of distributing securities.'

"(f) Such section 2 is further amended by inserting after paragraph (12) three new paragraphs:

"'(13) An "untrue statement of a material fact" shall mean (a) a statement which is untrue of itself, or (b) a statement which though literally true is incomplete by reason of the omission of a material fact and which is misleading by reason of such omission; and (2) a material fact shall mean a fact which, if truthfully stated at the time the untrue statement was made, would have materially adversely affected the market value of the security with respect to which the statement was made.

"'(14) The terms "public offering", "new offering", "distribution", or "offered to the public" mean any offering of any security for sale to persons other than holders of securities of the issuer, or employees of the issuer, or banks, trust companies, insurance companies, or investment trusts and made by means of one or more advertisements in a newspaper of general circulation or by means of a general distribution of a prospectus, or by means of solicitation by retail salesmen. These terms shall in no event include an offering to 100 persons or less.

"'(15) The term "control", if exercised through stock ownership, shall mean the ownership by the controlling person of stock of the controlled person at the time entitled to a number of votes for the election of directors equal to or greater than 51 percent of the votes cast for such purpose at the last preceding annual meeting of the controlled person.'

"SEC. 202. (a) Paragraph (2) of section 3 (a) of such act is amended to read as follows:

"'(2) Any security issued or guaranteed by the United States or any Territory thereof, or by the District of Columbia, or by any State of the United States, or by any political subdivision of a State or Territory, or by any public instrumentality of one or more States or Territories, or by any person controlled or supervised by one acting as an instrumentality of the Government of the United States pursuant to authority granted by the Congress of the United States, or any certificate of deposit for any of the foregoing, or any security issued or guaranteed by any national bank, or by any banking institution organized under the laws of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, the business of which is supervised by the State or Territorial banking commission or similar official; or any security issued by or representing an interest in or a direct obligation of a Federal Reserve bank';

"(b) Paragraph (3) of such section 3 (a) is amended by striking out 'which arises out of a current transaction or the proceeds of which have been or are to be used for current transactions, and.'

"(c) Such section 3 (a) is further amended by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (8) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon, and by inserting immedately after such paragraph (8) the following new paragraphs:

"'(9) Any security of a person exclusively exchanged by it with, or issued by it to, the security holders or creditors of such person or of any person directly or indirectly controlled by it, or any security of a person, which is a party to a reorganization (including any merger or consolidation), exclusively exchanged by it with, or issued by it to, the security holders or creditors of such person and of any other persons which are parties to such reorganization, provided that any commission or other remuneration paid or given for soliciting such exchange or the acceptance of such issue shall be disclosed; or any security issued pursuant to a plan of reorganization or readjustment of, or a composition by, or in payment for assets of a person which is, or involving any properties which are, (a) in receivership, bankruptcy, or foreclosure, or (b) in process of reorganization, readjustment, rehabilitation, or liquidation in or pursuant to judicial proceedings or by State officials pursuant to law, including certificates of deposit issued by any committee or depositary representing the securities of or claims against any such person (but not including securities which are sold for cash and have not been or are not to be offered in exchange or for subscription to security holders or creditors of such person); or any security issued pursuant to a plan of reorganization or readjustment bona fide announced prior to July 27, 1933.

"'(10) Any security which is a part of an issue sold only to persons resident within a single State or Territory, where the issuer of such security is a person resident and doing business within, or if a corporation, incorporated and doing business within, such State or Territory.

"'(d) Section 3 (b) is amended by striking out "but no issue of securities shall be exempted under this subsection where the aggregate amount at which such issue is offered to the public exceeds $100,000." and substituting therefor "or for any other reason.'"

"SEC. 203 (a) Paragraph 1 of section 4 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"'(1) Transactions by any person other than issuer, underwriter, or dealer; transactions by an issuer not involving any public offering; or transactions by a dealer (including an underwriter no longer acting as an underwriter in respect of the security involved in such transaction), except transactions as to securities constituting the whole or a part of an unsold allotment to or subscription by such dealer as a participant in the distribution of such securities by the issuer or by or through an underwriter acting as such.'

"(b) Paragraph (3) of such section 4 is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 204. Subsection (c) of section 5 of such act is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 205. Section 7 of such act is amended by striking out the last sentence and by amending the first sentence to read as follows:

"'SEC. 7. The registration statement, when relating to a security other than a security issued by a foreign government or political subdivision thereof, shall contain the information, and be accompanied by the documents specified in schedule A; and when relating to a security issued by a foreign government or political subdivision thereof, shall contain the information and be accompanied by the documents specified in schedule B; except that to facilitate the operation of the provisions of this act and to the end that the issuance of securities may not be made unduly costly, the Commission is authorized, in its discretion, to waive and dispense with the filing with it by any applicant for the registration of securities of any papers, documents, data, and/or information which in its judgment may be unnecessary in compliance with the purpose and spirit of this act, including any papers, documents, data, or information required by schedule A or schedule B hereof.'

"SEC. 206. (a) Paragraph (1) of section 10 (a) of such act is amended to read as follows:

"'(a) A prospectus—

"'(1) when relating to a security other than a security issued by a foreign government or political subdivision thereof shall contain the same statements made in the registration statement, but it need not include the documents referred to in paragraphs (24) to (27), inclusive, of schedule A;'

"(b) Subsection (b) of section 10 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"'(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a)—

"'(1) when a prospectus is used more than 13 months after the effective date of the registration statement, the information in the statements contained therein shall be as of a date not more than 12 months prior to such use, so far as such information is known to the user of such prospectus;

"'(2) there may be omitted from any prospectus any of the statements required under such subsection (a) which the commission may designate as not being necessary for the protection of investors, and any of the statements required under such subsection (a) may be included in the prospectus in summarized form, unless the commission shall determine that it is necessary for the protection of investors to include such statement in full.'

"SEC. 207. (a) The first paragraph of section 11 (a) is amended (1) by striking out 'or omitted to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading,' and (2) by striking out 'acquiring' and inserting in lieu thereof 'who, in reliance on such registration statement or on a prospectus which complied with section 10 and contained such untrue statement, acquires', and (3) by striking out 'or omission.'

"(b) Paragraph (4) of such section 11 (a) is amended by striking out 'with respect to the statement in such registration statement' and inserting in lieu thereof 'if the untrue statement is contained in the part of the registration statement, or in any.'

"(c) Paragraph (5) of such section 11 (a) is amended to read as follows:

"'(5) Every underwriter with respect to such security, if such person purchased such security from an underwriter or dealer participating in the distribution.'

"(d) The first paragraph of subsection (b) of such section 11 is amended by striking out 'other than' and inserting in lieu thereof 'including', and clauses (A) and (B) of such subsection (b) are amended by striking out in each of such clauses 'after reasonable investigation' and by striking out in each of such clauses 'and that there was no omission to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading'; and clauses (C) and (D) of such subsection (b) are amended to read as follows: '(C) as regards any part of the registration statement purporting to be made on the authority of an expert (other than himself) or purporting to be a copy of or extract from a report or valuation of an expert (other than himself) such part was made by an expert selected after the reasonable investigation and with reasonable ground for belief in his ability for such purpose, and he had no reasonable ground to believe and did not believe, at the time such part of the registration statement became effective, that the statements therein were untrue or that such part of the registration statement did not fairly represent the statement of the expert or was not a fair copy of or extract from the report or valuation of the expert; and (D) as regards any part of the registration statement purporting to be a statement made by an official person or purporting to be a copy of or extract from a public official document, he had no reasonable ground to believe and did not believe at the time such part of the registration statement became effective that the statements therein were untrue or that such part of the registration statement did not fairly represent the statement made by the official person or was not a fair copy of or extract from the public official document.'

"(e) Subsection (c) of such section 11 is amended to read as follows:

"'(c) In determining, for the purpose of paragraph (3) of subsection (b) of this section, what constitutes reasonable investigation and reasonable ground for belief, the standard of reasonableness shall be that required of a prudent man in the management of his own property.'

"(f) Subsections (e), (f), and (g) of such section 11 are hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(e) For the purpose of subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph 3 of subsection (c) of this section, an officer, director, underwriter, or expert shall be deemed to have reasonable ground to believe any statement, if such statement is made by any officer (other than himself) or employee of the issuer or of any person controlling or controlled by or under common control with the issuer, who he believes is competent to make such statement; and for all purposes of paragraph 3 of subsection (c) of this section, any underwriter (other than the one having the largest interest in the aggregate profit or compensation, or if no one underwriter has the largest interest, then other than the several underwriters who each have the largest interests), shall be deemed to have exercised reasonable care, or to have reasonable ground to believe, if he reasonably believes the underwriter or any one of the underwriters having the largest interest as aforesaid has exercised reasonable care, or has reasonable ground to believe; any any issuer shall be deemed to have exercised reasonable care, to have reasonable ground to believe, and to believe the truth of a statement if an officer of the issuer or any person controlling, controlled by or under common control with the issuer, exercised reasonable care, had reasonable ground to believe and did believe in the truth of the statement in question.

"'(f) All or any one or more of the persons specified in subsection (a) shall be jointly and severally liable, and every person, other than an issuer who becomes liable to make any payment under this section may recover contribution as in the cases of contract from any person who, if sued separately, would have been liable to make the same payment, unless the person who has become liable was, and the other was not, guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation, and any such person may recover the entire amount of such payment, whether made directly or as contribution, from the issuer, unless such person was guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation: Provided, That the aggregate amount recoverable by any person under this paragraph as contribution and from the issuer shall not exceed the aggregate amount of the payment made by him.

"'(g) The suit authorized under subsection (a) shall be for the damage caused by the untrue statement and such damages shall in no event exceed the difference between the amount paid for the security (not exceeding the price at which the security was offered to the public) and (1) the value thereof as of the time such suit was brought, or (2) the price at which such security shall have been disposed of in the market before suit, or (3) the price at which security shall have been disposed of after suit but before judgment if such damages shall be less than the damages representing the difference between the amount paid for the security (not exceeding the price at which the security was offered to the public) and the value thereof as of the time such suit was brought. In no event shall an underwriter be liable in any suit or as a consequence of suits authorized under subsection (a) for damages in excess of the total price at which the securities underwritten by him were offered to the public, in any suit under this or any other section of this title the court may, in its discretion, require an undertaking for the payment of the costs of such suit, including reasonable attorney's fees, and if judgment shall be rendered against a party litigant, upon the motion of the other party litigant, such costs may be assessed in favor of such party litigant (whether or not such undertaking has been required) if the court believes the suit or the defense to have been without merit, in an amount sufficient to reimburse him for the reasonable expenses incurred by him in connection with such suit, such costs to be taxed in the manner usually provided for taxing of costs in the court in which the suit was heard.'

"SEC. 208. Section 12 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 12. (1) Any person who willfully sells a security in violation of section 5 shall be liable to the person purchasing such security from him.

"'(2) Any person who sells for his own account (or, if acting as agent, fails to disclose that he is not acting for his own account) a security (whether or not exempted by the provisions of section 3, other than paragraph (2) of subsection (2) thereof) by the use of any means or instruments of transportation in interstate commerce or of the mails, by means of a prospectus or oral communication, which includes an untrue statement of a material fact, and who knows or in the exercise of reasonable care should have known that such statement was untrue, shall be liable to the person purchasing such security from him if such purchaser relied on such untrue statement and did not know or in the exercise of reasonable care would not have known that such statement was untrue. If an untrue statement made by a seller is contained in a prospectus which complies with section 10 or in a registration statement, the seller shall be deemed to have exercised reasonable care in relying upon such prospectus or registration statement without further investigation provided such seller is not a person described in section 11 (a).

"'(3) The suits authorized under subsections (1) and (2) may be either at law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction, to recover the consideration paid for such security with interest thereon, less the amount of any income received thereon, upon the tender of such security, or for damages caused by such violation or untruth, if the purchaser no longer owns the security. Such damages shall not be more than the excess of the amount paid by the person suing over the amount received by the person suing.'

"SEC. 209. Section 13 of such act is amended (a) by striking out '2 years' wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof '1 year'; (b) by striking out '10 years' and inserting in lieu thereof '5 years'; and (c) by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: 'or under section 12 (2) more than 5 years after the sale.'

"SEC. 210. Section 15 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 15. Every person who, by or through stock ownership, or agency or who, pursuant to an agreement with one or more other persons by or through stock ownership, or agency, controls any person and who for the purpose of evading liability under section 11 or section 12 causes such controlled person to take any action which renders such controlled person liable under section 11 or section 12 shall be subject to liability under section 11 and section 12 to the same extent as if such controlling person had taken such action directly.'

"SEC. 211. (a) The first paragraph of section 17 (a) of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof 'willfully and with intent to deceive.'

"(b) Paragraph (2) of such section 17 (a) is amended by striking out 'or any omission to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading.

"(c) Section 17 (b) is amended to read as follows:

"'(b) It shall be unlawful for any person by the use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or by the use of the mails to publish, give publicity to, or circulate any notice, circular, advertisement, newspaper article, letter, investment service, or communication which does not offer a security for sale but describes such security in such a manner as to indicate that such person is acting in a disinterested capacity if in fact such person has or will receive consideration directly or indirectly for such services.'

"SEC. 212. Section 19 (a) of such act is amended to read as follows:

"'(a) The Commission shall have authority from time to time to make, amend, and rescind rules and regulations defining terms deemed by the Commission to be accounting, technical, and trade terms used in this title. The rules and regulations of the Commission shall be effective upon publication in the manner which the Commission shall prescribe. Acts done or omitted in good faith in compliance with the rules and regulations of the Commission authorized by this title shall be deemed, for the purpose of determining any and all liability under this title, to be in compliance with its provisions, notwithstanding the fact that such rules and regulations may, after such act or omission, be amended or rescinded or be determined by judicial or other authority to have been made by the Commission in excess of, or contrary to, the authority conferred upon it by the provisions of this title.'

"SEC. 213. Section 22 of such act is amended by inserting before the word 'jurisdiction' the word 'exclusive' and by striking out 'concurrent with State and Territorial courts.'

"SEC. 214. Section 24 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 24. Any person who willfully violates any of the provisions of this title, or any person who, in a registration statement filed under this title, willfully makes any untrue statement of a material fact, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.'

"SEC. 215. (a) Paragraphs (4) and (5) of schedule A of title I of such act are amended to read as follows:

"'(4) The names and addresses of the directors or persons performing similar functions, and the chief executive, financial, and accounting officers, chosen or to be chosen if the issuer be a corporation, association, trust, or other entity; and of all partners, if the issuer be a partnership.

"'(5) The names and addresses of the underwriters contracting directly with the issuer.'

"(b) Paragraph (6) of such schedule A is repealed.

"(c) Paragraph (7) of such schedule A is amended to read as follows:

"'(6) The amount of securities of the issuer held of record by any person specified in paragraphs (4) and (5) of this schedule, as of a date within 20 days prior to the filing of the registration statement, and the amount of the securities, for which the registration statement is filed, to which such persons have indicated their intention to subscribe.'

"(d) Paragraph (10) of such schedule A is amended to read as follows:

"'(9) A statement of the securities, if any, covered by options outstanding or to be created in connection with the security to be offered, together with the names and addresses of all persons, if any, to be allotted by the issuer or an underwriter specified in paragraph (5) more than 10 percent in the aggregate of such options.'

"(e) Paragraph (13) of such schedule A is amended to read as follows:

"'(12) The general purposes and the estimated amounts to be devoted to such purposes, for which the security to be offered is to supply funds, and if the funds are to be raised in part from other sources the amounts thereof and the sources thereof shall be stated.'

"(f) Paragraph (14) of such schedule A is repealed.

"(g) Paragraphs (17) and (18) of such schedule A are amended to read as follows:

"'(15) The aggregate amount of all commissions or discounts paid or to be paid, directly or indirectly, by the issuer to the underwriters in respect of the sale of the security to be offered. Commissions shall include all cash, securities, contracts, or anything else of value, paid, to be set aside, disposed of, or understandings with or for the benefit of any other persons in which any underwriter is interested, made, in connection with the sale of such security. A commission paid or to be paid in connection with the sale of such security by a person which is controlled or directed by, or under common control with, the issuer shall be deemed to have been paid by the issuer.

"'(16) The aggregate amount or estimated amount of expenses, other than commissions specified in paragraph (15) of this schedule, incurred or borne by or for the account of the issuer in connection with the sale of security to be offered or properly chargeable thereto, including legal, engineering, certification, authentication, and other charges.'

"(h) Paragraphs (19) and (20) of such schedule A are repealed.

"(i) Paragraph (22) of such schedule A is amended to read as follows:

"'(18) Full particulars of the nature and extent of the interest, if any, of every director or principal executive officer, in any property to be acquired, not in the ordinary course of business of the issuer, out of the proceeds of the security.'

"(j) Paragraphs (24), (25), (26), (27), and (28) of such schedule A are amended to read as follows:

"'(20) Dates of and parties to, and a brief description of any contract to be performed in whole or in part after the filing of the registration statement, or made not more than 2 years before such filing which (1) provides for special bonuses or profit-sharing arrangements for the officers or directors or (2) is made by or with a public utility company or an affiliate thereof, and provides for the giving or receiving of technical or financial advice or service (if such contract may involve a charge to any party thereto at a rate in excess of $2,500 per year in cash or securities or anything else of value).

"'(21) A balance sheet prepared in accordance with any generally accepted accounting practice as of a date not more than 90 days prior to the date of the filing of the registration statement showing all of the assets of the issuer, the nature (and cost thereof if acquired within 5 years), including any loan in excess of $20,000 to any officer, director, stockholder, or person directly or indirectly controlled by the issuer, or person under direct or indirect common control with the issuer, and all the liabilities of the issuer, including surplus of the issuer showing how and from what sources such surplus was created. If such balance sheet be not certified by an independent public or certified accountant, in addition to the balance sheet required to be submitted under this schedule, a similar detailed balance sheet of the assets and liabilities of the issuer, certified by an independent public or certified accountant, of a date not more than 1 year prior to the filing of the registration statement shall be submitted.

"'(22) A profit and loss statement, prepared in accordance with any generally accepted accounting practice of the issuer, showing earnings and income, the nature and source thereof, and the expenses and fixed charges for the latest fiscal year for which such statement is available and for the 2 preceding fiscal years, year by year, or if such issuer has been in actual business for less than 3 years, then for such time as the issuer has been in actual business, year by year. If the date of the filing of the registration statement is more than 6 months after the close of the last fiscal year, a statement from such closing date to the latest practicable date. Such statement shall show what the practice of the issuer has been during the 3 years or lesser period as to the character of the charges, dividends, or other distributions made against its various surplus accounts, and as to depreciation, depletion, and maintenance charges, and if stock dividends or avails from the sale of rights have been credited to income, they shall be shown separately with a statement of the basis upon which the credit is computed. Such statement shall also differentiate between any recurring and nonrecurring income and between any investment and operating income. Such statement shall be certified by an independent public or certified accountant.

"'(23) If the proceeds, or any part of the proceeds, of the security to be issued is to be applied directly or indirectly to the purchase of any business, a profit-and-loss statement of such business, certified by an independent public or certified accountant, meeting the requirements of paragraph (22) of this schedule, for the 3 preceding fiscal years, together with a balance sheet, similarly certified, or such business, meeting the requirements of paragraph (21) of this schedule of a date not more than 90 days prior to the filing of the registration statement or at the date such business was acquired by the issuer if the business was acquired by the issuer more than 90 days prior to the filing of the registration statement.

"'(24) A copy of any agreement or agreements (or, if identic agreements are used, the forms thereof) made by the issuer with the underwriter, including all contracts and agreements referred to in paragraph (15) of this schedule.'

"(k) The last unnumbered paragraph of such schedule A is amended to read as follows:

"'In case of certificates of deposit, voting trust certificates, collateral trust certificates, certificates of interest or shares in unincorporated investment trust, equipment trust certificates, interim or other receipts for certificates, and like securities, the Commission shall establish rules and regulations requiring the submission of information of a like character applicable to such cases, together with information of like character about the actual issuer of the securities and/or the person performing the acts and assuming the duties of depositor or manager.'

"(l) Paragraphs (8), (9), (11), (12), (16), (21), (23), (29), (30), (31), and (32) are hereby respectively renumbered (7), (8), (10), (11), (14), (17), (19), (25), (26), (27), and (28).

"SEC. 216. Upon the expiration of 90 days after the date upon which a majority of the members of the Federal Securities Exchange Commission appointed under section 4 of title I of this act have qualified and taken office, all powers, duties, and functions of the Federal Trade Commission under the Securities Act of 1933 shall be transferred to such Commission, together with all property, books, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations used by or available to the Federal Trade Commission for carrying out its functions under the Securities Act of 1933.

"On page 1, after line 2, insert:

"TITLE I. REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

"In sections 2 to 30, both inclusive, of the bill, except in section 7 (d), strike out the word 'act' wherever it appears and insert in lieu thereof the word 'title.'"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I do not want a vote on this amendment today. I have a right to ask for a division of the amendment by subjects. I do not want a record vote on any part of it. I desire to save time. I desire to have this measure move along as rapidly as possible, but I do want these suggestions preserved in connection with the bill, and I want them to go to conference with the sympathetic consideration of the conferees. I do not know who the conferees are going to be. The subject, I know, is a complicated one. These are complicated measures; and it may be wiser to stop here, with the reading of the amendment.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALCOTT. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. I am not sure that I understand the full force and effect of all the amendments embodied in this substitute. Like other Senators I have had but little opportunity to make comparisons. Apparently, the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut deals with the same sections of the Securities Act as the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida; but the proposals made by the Senator from Connecticut are more extensive and liberalize the act to a greater degree than the amendments offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. WALCOTT. That is correct.

Mr. STEIWER. The result is, if I am right in that statement, that if the Senate should agree to the amendments offered by the Senator from Florida, and the bill should go to conference with those amendments in it, the more liberal proposals suggested by the Senator from Connecticut would not be in conference. There would be no way for the conferees to consider them, either sympathetically or otherwise. If, therefore, the Senator from Connecticut earnestly desires his amendments to be considered, they must be considered here and now, else they will be entirely done away with and will receive no consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Connecticut will yield, the Senator from Oregon may not be correct about that. The House bill has nothing at all in it with reference to the Securities Act. If the amendments of the Senator from Florida should be adopted, that action would throw open to conference all the sections touched by his amendments, and the conferees would be free to consider the suggestions offered by the Senator from Connecticut; but if the suggestions of the Senator from Connecticut should be voted down in the Senate, the conferees would feel more or less bound by that result, and, in my judgment, they would not have the freedom to consider them which they otherwise would have.

Mr. STEIWER. I think the Senator's last suggestion is correct. I am entirely in accord with it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Connecticut has the floor.

Mr. WALCOTT. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Is the Senator from Kentucky clear that the committee of conference would be empowered to enlarge on the amendment that goes from this body? The amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut is broader than the one offered by the Senator from Florida. Would the conferees have it within their power to add to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think undoubtedly so, for the reason that where the Senate strikes out all the language of a House bill and inserts practically a new bill, even where there is in the Senate amendment language which is identical with that in the House bill, it has frequently occurred that the conferees have had almost carte blanche in writing a section or a proposal.

I recall that in the consideration of the Transportation Act of 1920, when the House passed the bill and the Senate struck out all the language of the bill as it passed the House and inserted the Cummins Act, it went to conference and the conferees rewrote the entire Transportation Act, as far as both Houses were concerned, and that was accepted as a proper exercise of the functions of the conferees.

Mr. CLARK rose.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I should be glad to hear the opinion of the Senator from Missouri in regard to the question.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, similar procedure was followed in the consideration of the Federal Reserve Act. The House passed a bill and the Senate struck out all after the enacting clause and inserted its own bill. While many sections were identical, it was ruled in the House, when the conferees reported, that the Senate having struck out all after the enacting clause, the whole subject was in conference, and the conferees had carte blanche to write any section they pleased.

Mr. FESS. So the opinion of the Senator from Missouri is that the conferees could consider the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. CLARK. I am very clearly of that opinion.

Mr. DILL. The same thing happened in connection with the framing of the Radio Act.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut would be in much better position in conference than if the amendment were voted down, for while the conferees could still consider the proposal which had been voted down by the Senate, they would not feel as free to do so as if there had been no adverse action on the amendment taken by the Senate. They would be somewhat bound by the action of the Senate in rejecting the amendment. The action of the Senate would be more or less in the nature of an instruction to the conferees.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the situation is this: When the Senate amends a House bill, the amendment goes to conference, the whole of it, if the House does not accept the amendment of the Senate. The question before the conferees is, then, Will the Senate recede from the amendment, or will the House recede from its dissent? The House can either accept the Senate amendment in toto or it can accept it with an amendment, and that would be the procedure in this case. The House, we hope, would recede from its disagreement with such amendments as might be recommended, and the result would go into the report of the conferees. The House need not take the whole thing or nothing. It can recede with an amendment.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit, I am aware of that, but my question was whether the conferees could enlarge upon an amendment that was adopted in the Senate. That was the only point I made.

Mr. BARKLEY. Where the Senate strikes out all the language of a bill and inserts entirely new language, the sky is almost the limit in the writing of the measure.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I want to be perfectly frank about this matter. There is not the slightest partisan feeling in my mind about it. All I am trying to do is to have some action to protect the business interests of this country by liberalizing the Securities Act, which does not protect business but injures business very seriously.

We are facing here a practical issue. I want the suggestions contained in my proposed substitute, which I know are sound, because I have studied them carefully, to have the consideration of the conferees. How can we best accomplish that end? I can see that the worst thing we could do would be to have the amendments now voted down by this body. Is there any way by which the amendments can be accepted by the Senate for the consideration of the conferees? That is all I want to accomplish, because there is no time for anything else. May I ask the Senator from Florida to consider that point? I know he seeks the same result at which I aim. He wants to modify the Securities Act in order to make it safe, and I am satisfied that these suggestions would help toward that end. The Senator from Florida has had no opportunity to study them; he does not know what they embrace, and other Senators do not. There has been no time to study them. They have just come in.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALCOTT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The committee considered this whole subject; it has been under consideration and under discussion for months.

Mr. WALCOTT. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. I would not, of course, suggest that the Senator did not offer the amendment as soon as he had it prepared, but all other amendments were offered here days ago, and printed, so that Senators could study them. The Senator comes in today with a typewritten amendment and asks that the bill go over until next week in order that Senators may study the amendment. Was there any insurmountable difficulty in the way of offering these amendments some time ago so they could have been studied?

Mr. WALCOTT. The amendments have been changed from time to time. I saw the amendments in this form possibly only 3 days ago. They have been radically modified since then. There was a good deal in them with which I did not agree, and I spent all yesterday afternoon going over them, and the hearing granted to this particular group, the Durable Industries Association, was allowed only last Tuesday; I think either Tuesday or Wednesday. There has not been much time; it has been very hurried, I admit. It is very complicated, and I am not trying to hasten the deliberations of the Senate. I should like to get the amendments before the conferees if we cannot get a favorable vote on them today.

Mr. BARKLEY. They undoubtedly will be before the conferees, regardless of the action taken here.

Mr. WALCOTT. I do not think there is a very good chance of them being before the conferees, unless that can be accomplished in a parliamentary way.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALCOTT. I yield.

Mr. FESS. In the light of the question raised a while ago, would it be proper for the Senator from Connecticut to appear before the conference committee to present these amendments? His point is, how are we to get them before the conference committee in a parliamentary way?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield to me?

Mr. WALCOTT. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I was attracted by the inquiry addressed by the Senator from Ohio to the Senator from Florida. The parliamentary situation is not complicated. If the Senator from Connecticut would not offer the amendments as a substitute, but would offer them as one amendment, to be inserted at the end of the last section of the Fletcher proposal, and it should be agreed to, the whole subject matter would go to conference, having been treated by the Senate, and there having been no action by the House. The conferees then could write, out of both the measures, that which would meet the situation. The amendments should not be offered as a substitute, but as one amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. The difficulty about that is that some of the provisions of the Senator's amendment are utterly in conflict with the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. McNARY. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. And it would put the Senate in a rather ridiculous position to adopt amendments which were contradictory within themselves.

Mr. McNARY. But that in no fashion militates against the proposal I have made. It would be the duty of the conferees to strike out all conflicting provisions, and to bring in a logical substitute for the two proposals.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I cannot consent to these amendments at all. I have not had time to examine them fully. I know something of their source and origin and have had some discussion about the views of their proponents. I cannot consent to do what is suggested, though I am willing to consider the matter.

In answer to the question of the Senator from Ohio, I think the conferees have the right to allow a Senator to appear before them and to present such matters as he may wish to present. It is my understanding that they have a right to do that.

This matter can be considered in conference, and I think much better results could be secured in that way than by now having a vote on it. We are asked to go too far. As the Senator from Kentucky has said, some of these suggestions are in absolute conflict with the proposal which I have made. I think some of them go too far.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there would be no parliamentary limitations or inhibitions against the proposal I suggest. It would be the duty of the conferees to take both of these amendments and work out something to meet the situation. If the Senator from Florida says he will not agree to it, that is the end of my proposal. It should be done, in fairness to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. We can consider these questions without adopting the amendments.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, unless there shall have been action by the Senate, when the conferees meet, they will not consider any voluntary proposal by a Senator. He would not have any standing in conference at all. If I were a conferee I would not have a Senator come before me with a proposal unless it had theretofore had Senate action. The Senator knows that if the Senator from Connecticut should go before the conferees with a mere proposal which had never had the sanction of the Senate, it would not receive careful and due consideration.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is an assumption with which I do not agree.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator think it would receive as much consideration at the hands of the conferees if the Senate had acted on it and voted it down as if the Senate had not voted on it at all?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is not the proposal of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator's proposal is that we accept these amendments. That is an impossibility.

Mr. McNARY. There is no impossibility from the standpoint of the Senate rules or procedure. I say that the amendments should not be offered as a substitute, but as an amendment at the conclusion of the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, taken to conference, where the conferees would have the whole subject matter before them, and something could be drafted that would not be inconsistent. The parts of the amendment which were inconsistent would be harmonized, and there would be brought back the compromise agreed upon by the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I should like to offer a suggestion which, it seems to me, is practical, and which would reach the objective which we all have in mind.

The Senator from Connecticut does not want to leave this suggestion in a purely nebulous status, with no Senate credentials whatever behind these proposals when the bill shall reach conference. He apparently is perfectly willing to leave the consideration to the conference, if he can be assured of an acknowledged status.

What would be the objection—and I am addressing myself to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]—to a unanimous-consent request that when the conference shall meet it consider the suggestions submitted in the amendments by the Senator from Connecticut in whatever respect they bear upon the problems of the conference? Such a request has no conclusive authority behind it, and yet it does not leave the Senator from Connecticut wholly without some acknowledgment of his right to be heard.

May I ask the Senators whether there would be any objection to taking that course?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection, so far as I am concerned, to such action by the Senate. Of course, it will not bind the House.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Certainly not. Would that comply with the wishes of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WALCOTT. Yes; I think it would. Of course, I do not want these suggestions smirched by an antagonistic vote. I do want them to be considered seriously by the conferees, because I believe they will find in them a great deal that is valuable, and that they will be of help to the conferees.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to such a suggestion as the Senator from Michigan makes.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. My understanding is that the Senator from Michigan was making a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I was suggesting such a request to see whether satisfactory results could be achieved under it.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator will further yield, I will say that I have an amendment which I had decided not to offer, but I am perfectly willing to submit the amendment to the conferees; and if the Senate will agree to the request of the Senator from Michigan that the amendments of the Senator from Connecticut be submitted to and considered by the conferees, I desire to have my amendment included in the unanimous-consent request.

My amendment is, on page 9, after line 15, to insert the following new section:

SEC. —. Section 12 (2) of such act is amended by inserting, after the words "The purchaser not knowing of such untruth or omission" and before the parenthesis, the following: "(a) and relying upon such prospectus or oral communication or statement included therein."

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask unanimous consent that both the proposed amendments submitted by the Senator from Connecticut and the proposed amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri shall be referred to the conferees, with the request that they be considered by the conferees.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, is this not rather an innovation in parliamentary procedure?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very decidedly so; but we live in an age of innovation, Mr. President.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is an innovator, I will admit. How can the Senate bind the conferees?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senate is binding no one.

Mr. CONNALLY. It seems to me this procedure will be introducing a rather troublesome precedent for the future.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield, I will state that I understand the Senator's request does not contemplate that it is in any sense to be an attempt to bind the conferees.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Not at all.

Mr. CLARK. It would be simply an expression on the part of the Senate that these are matters which may be subject to consideration by the conferees.

Mr. CONNALLY. That does not bind anyone, either. It seems to me it is a bad precedent to set. The rule with regard to conference action is well established. If the Senator desires these matters to go to conference, the way to get them there is to adopt the amendments and let them go. I think it is a dangerous thing to undertake a procedure of this kind. Another body sits at the other end of the Capitol. That body can indulge in the same sort of procedure; and the result may be that time and time again, in order to accommodate Senators or Representatives, such a procedure as the one now suggested will be indulged in for the purpose of having a record made with respect to proposed legislation, the adoption of which the Member cannot secure, with the result that all the time spent in conference may be taken up with such questions.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, has the Senator from Texas been on the floor during the last half hour, while this discussion has taken place?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas has been on the floor only a short time. The Senator came in while the Senator from Michigan was discussing the matter.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then, the Senator from Texas is uninformed with respect to the efforts which have been made during the last 30 minutes to find a way whereby we shall not be foreclosed from having in the conference a complete survey of all the various phases of the Securities Act of 1933. The sole purpose of this suggestion is to conclude the matter promptly and effectively without foreclosing anyone.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas is more concerned with legislating according to some well-established rule, and legislating by the Senate itself, rather than by the conference committee. I do not believe the conference committee ought to be the legislative branch of the Government. I shall not object, but I want my own observations with regard to a practice of this sort to appear in the RECORD.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, of course it is well known in the Senate, and has been all along, that when matters go to conference any Senator who has a suggestion to bring to the attention of the conferees is accorded the right to do so. The conferees could invite the Senator from Connecticut, or the Senator from Missouri, or any other Senator who desires to present to them a matter that is within their jurisdiction, to come before them, or the Senator could ask to be allowed to do so. We do that all the time. When conferees are considering a measure we always feel free to go to any conferee, or to all of them together, or separately, and make suggestions.

The unanimous-consent suggestion of the Senator from Michigan is irregular. It does not bind anyone. It does not bind the conferees, except to consider the matter, which they would do anyway. They can throw it out unceremoniously after they have considered it if they desire to do so. I do not think any advantage is gained for the amendment by the request of the Senator for unanimous consent, although I shall not object to it.

I think the procedure is irregular. It does not give any greater rights than the conferees have anyway. If it is going to be entered into with respect to the amendments of the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Missouri, undoubtedly there are other Senators here who have had in mind amendments they would have liked to offer, but who have not offered them, in some instances that I personally know about, because the members of the committee have assured the prospective proponents of amendments that they would be considered in conference.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, since the only purpose I had was to facilitate matters, and apparently my request is operating in the other direction, I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT]. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the noes seem to have it.

Mr. WALCOTT. I ask for a division.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	Hebert	Overton
Ashurst	Couzens	Johnson	Patterson
Austin	Dickinson	Kean	Pope
Bachman	Dill	Keyes	Reynolds
Bailey	Duffy	King	Robinson, Ark.
Bankhead	Erickson	La Follette	Schall
Barbour	Fess	Lewis	Sheppard
Barkley	Fletcher	Logan	Steiwer
Black	Frazier	Lonergan	Stephens
Bone	George	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Gibson	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Bulkley	Glass	McKellar	Thompson
Bulow	Goldsborough	McNary	Tydings
Byrd	Gore	Metcalf	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hale	Murphy	Van Nuys
Capper	Harrison	Neely	Wagner
Carey	Hastings	Norbeck	Walcott
Clark	Hatch	Norris	Walsh
Connally	Hatfield	Nye	Wheeler
Coolidge	Hayden	O'Mahoney

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] for the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. WALCOTT. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KEYES (when his name was called). I have a pair with my colleague, the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "nay." If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. I do not know how he would vote if he were present. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], who, I understand, is not present. I, therefore, transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], and vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], and vote "nay."

The roll call was completed.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], called away on official business; the absence of the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], occasioned by illness, and the absence of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], occasioned by a death in his family. I ask that this announcement remain for the day, and to add that my colleague, the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], if present, would vote "nay."

I also wish to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING], and

The Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL]. The Senator from Florida would vote "nay" and the Senator from Minnesota would vote "yea", if present.

Mr. HEBERT. I announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY]; and

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS].

I am not advised as to how the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Indiana would vote on this question if present.

Mr. STEPHENS. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 46, as follows:

YEAS—30

Adams	Dickinson	Hebert	Thomas, Okla.
Austin	Fess	Kean	Tydings
Barbour	Gibson	Lonergan	Vandenberg
Bulkley	Goldsborough	McNary	Wagner
Byrd	Gore	Metcalf	Walcott
Carey	Hale	Patterson	Walsh
Coolidge	Hastings	Reynolds
Copeland	Hatfield	Steiwer

NAYS—46

Ashurst	Connally	King	O'Mahoney

Cutting	Long	Russell	Trammell
Davis	McAdoo	Schall	White

So Mr. WALCOTT's amendment in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of Mr. FLETCHER was rejected.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In Mr. FLETCHER's amendment on page 5, after the word "first", in line 19, it is proposed to add the following:

and (3) by adding after the word "underwriter" the following words:

"As used in this paragraph, the term 'public offering' shall not be deemed to include an offering made solely to employees by an issuer or by its affiliates in connection with a bona fide plan for the payment of extra compensation or stock investment plan for the exclusive benefit of such employees."

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I may say that the amendment comes in section 4 of the Securities Act after paragraph 1.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, is this an amendment to the amendment which I have offered?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have examined the amendment, and I see no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like to say, if I may be permitted, to the chairman of the committee and his aide, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], in the matter touching the school teachers of Illinois, I desire, if I may be allowed to do so, to withdraw the amendment suggested by me and to accept the amendment which the chairman himself now proposes to offer.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the question now, as I understand, is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, early in the present session I introduced a bill proposing to liberalize the Securities Act of 1933. I realize that at that time the duties of the committee were such that they could not reach that bill for consideration. When the pending bill came before the Senate I offered the substance of my bill as an amendment to it, and it is now lying on the table.

Mr. President, I call up that amendment and offer it as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I will not ask that the amendment be read but I will ask that it be printed in the RECORD in full at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment proposed by Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of Mr. FLETCHER is as follows:

On page 57, after line 9, insert the following:

"PART II—AMENDMENT OF SECURITIES ACT OF 1933

"SEC. 1. Sections 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16 of the Securities Act of 1933 are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 2. Such act is amended by inserting after section 10 two new sections, as follows:

"'SEC. 11. To facilitate the operation of the provisions of this act and to the end that the issuance of securities may not be made unduly costly, the Commission is hereby authorized and empowered in its discretion to waive and dispense with the filing with it by any applicant for the issuance of securities any papers, documents, data, and/or information which in its judgment may be unnecessary in compliance with the purpose and spirit of this act, including any papers, documents, data, or information required by schedule A or schedule B hereof.'

"'SEC. 12. Except as provided in sections 20 and 24, the common law shall apply to any violation of the provisions of this act.'

"SEC. 3. Section 17 of such act is renumbered as section 13, and is amended by striking out, where they appear in subsection (a) (2), the following words: 'or any omission to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading'; and such section is further amended by striking out subsection (b) and by relettering subsection (c) as subsection (b).

"SEC. 4. Sections 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, and 23 of such act are hereby renumbered as sections 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19, respectively.

"SEC. 5. Section 3 (a), first sentence and paragraph (1) of said act be amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3. (a) Except as hereinafter expressly provided, the provisions of this act shall not apply to any of the following classes of securities: (1) Any security which, prior to July 26, 1933, has been sold or disposed of by the issuer or bona fide offerer to the public.'

"SEC. 6. Section 24 of such act is hereby renumbered as section 20, and is amended by inserting immediately before the word 'omits' the word 'willfully.'

"SEC. 7. Sections 25 and 26 of such act are hereby renumbered as sections 21 and 22."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, there are only one or two points I wish to take a brief time to explain. There are two objections in the main to the Securities Act of 1933. The first is that it requires mandatory reports of great volume. Some corporations in submitting their reports had to file them in volumes. I have information that one corporation has been required to file reports to such an extent that if the volumes were placed one on top of the other they would be 40 inches high. I doubt if anyone reads the reports. Of course, they are there for the purpose of reading if anyone wants to read them.

My amendment provides that the Commission in its discretion may waive the requirement for filing certain reports. If the Commission sees fit to order the reports as per the law, of course, the reports will be made. But my amendment would make it discretionary with the Commission as to whether the reports should be filed.

The second objection I have to the Securities Act is the severity of the penal clauses and the damage liability. The amendment I have submitted, instead of making the penalties as stringent as now contained in the law, would change the form of the penalties from statutory penalties to the common law. If that should prevail, then one who is damaged through false representation or misrepresentation may go into court and bring suit under the common law and get damages to the extent of his injury.

The existing law makes the company issuing the securities liable as follows:

First. A purchaser of securities may use the person named even though he purchased in the market after the securities had been sold several times.

Second. A purchaser may sue although he had never read or knew of the untrue statements or misleading statements before he purchased the securities.

Third. A purchaser need not establish a causal connection between the untruth and the loss sustained, nor is the purchaser barred if such causal connection be disproved.

Fourth. The burden of proof under the present law is on the defendant to establish the reasonableness of his investigation and belief rather than on the plaintiff to establish the contrary.

Mr. President, it is well known that because of this law the issuance of securities has practically ceased. I wish to place in the RECORD a statement of what has happened during the past 10 years. In the year 1928 the corporations of America issued and sold securities to the extent of $8,000,000,000. I shall omit the odd millions and thousands. That year corporations floated and sold $8,000,000,000 of securities, and the new money was used in the purchase of material and in the employment of labor. That was as much as our total export and import trade; in other words, the floating of securities has been of as much benefit to the United States during the past 10 years as all of our export trade and import trade combined.

In 1924 the total of securities issued was $5,500,000,000. In 1925 it was $6,220,000,000. In 1926 it was $6,000,000,000. In 1927 it was $7,000,000,000.

In 1929, the year the depression struck, companies issued $10,000,000,000 of securities. That was $10,000,000,000 for material, for transportation, and for labor in 1929. Last year, 1933, the total sum issued was $716,000,000. In other words, the money available for labor, material, and transportation last year was less than $1,000,000,000, while in 1929 it was more than $10,000,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator attribute the falling off in 1933 entirely to the Securities Act?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Of course, I have no means of knowing.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Securities Act did not go into effect until after the middle of the year. It was not passed until June, and then it took some time to set up the machinery. I doubt whether the act was in full operation for more than 3 months of the year 1933. It would not be fair to leave the implication that all the decline was due to that act.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Of course, there is much in what the Senator from Kentucky has said.

Mr. BARKLEY. We know we had in the early part of the summer——

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky kindly repeat his statement? On this side we cannot hear what he is saying.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have said that no one in fairness could attribute to the Securities Act the decline in the issuance of securities in 1933. That act was passed about the first of June and did not become effective for quite a while, until the machinery was set up. I doubt whether the act was in full effect for more than 3 months of 1933. Of course we are all familiar with the bank holiday and the collapse of credit and the whole confused situation that brought Congress into extra session and made it necessary to enact a number of laws to relieve and safeguard the situation.

It is not fair to attribute the entire decline in the issuance of securities in 1933 to the operation of the Securities Act, which as a matter of fact was in operation for only about 3 months of that year. I have no doubt if the Securities Act had not been enacted there would have been a very material decline anyway in 1933. Of course no one could say just what it would have been.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think it is also true that practically every depression has been cured primarily by a revival of the capital-issues market. Certainly today, I may say, in support of the observation of the Senator from Oklahoma, there is vast need for capital. There is a bill pending in Congress to enable the Federal Government itself to lend capital to industries. But in some of the measures we have passed we have gone so far as to prevent private investment houses from financing individuals because of the stringent restrictions thrown around them. I think the capital-issue revival has to precede any move out of the depression. Until we realize that fact, capital is not going to flow into the channels of industry and trade.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield further?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The reason why the Federal Government is lending money or preparing to lend money and why there are bills on the calendar to make direct loans to industry, is not because of any lack of issue of new securities, but because there is not now available credit for private industry through banking operations. We are all familiar with the situation. The concerns which are in need of money during the last 5 years could not sell securities in the markets if they issued them, because they could not even borrow money from banking institutions.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not want to interfere unduly with the Senator from Oklahoma, but, if he will yield further, I should like to say that we have recently enacted a law which compels private banking houses to abandon all private deposits. Many people prefer to keep their money in private banking houses, yet we have forced them within a short time to take all that money out, notwithstanding it is all in investments. We have demoralized the investments of some of the oldest concerns in America. There is one in my State which dates back 100 years which has never been connected with any questionable transaction. I cannot see how there can be any movement out of the depression until private capital has a chance to go to the rescue of some of these concerns. The atmosphere of insecurity created by Congress is stopping the revival of many businesses because capital is loath to invest in them under existing circumstances.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. KEAN. I have in my office a list of fully 100 companies which need investment capital and are anxious to obtain it, but owing to the Securities Act they cannot obtain capital at the present time. Some of them have applied to me personally for capital and I have refused to do any underwriting on account of the Securities Act.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator give the Senate the benefit of the names of some of those concerns which want to issue capital stock and will not do it because of the Securities Act?

Mr. KEAN. I shall be glad to file a list.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have been hearing there are companies which could not issue any stock because of the act referred to. I have never heard one named. If the Senator can name one, I should like to have him do so. I am not saying that to dispute what the Senator has said, but I should like to have what the lawyers call a proffer in open court.

Mr. KEAN. I have a list of about 100 of them.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma permit me to ask the Senator from New Jersey a question?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. Were any of the companies to which the Senator referred desirous of making loans in 1932?

Mr. KEAN. I do not know about that.

Mr. BONE. Can the Senator enlighten us as to why they want the money now and did not want it in 1932?

Mr. KEAN. Yes. At the present time business is such that they are borrowing too much money from the banks, and they want to get it in the form of refunded capital, permanent capital, instead of borrowing money from the banks.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, under the existing law, if a corporation desires to issue securities in the nature of bonds, the managing officers, the president, vice president, secretary, treasurer, and the directors must get out a statement or prospectus giving the financial set-up of the corporation. In the case of the larger companies, the president cannot know all about the details of the corporation. He must have his engineers, auditors, and other high-class expert assistants.

The president and the other officers must rely upon the work of the assistants in preparing these representations and prospectuses. Under existing law, if a company issues such a prospectus, relying upon the expert advice of engineers and auditors, and if the prospectus inadvertently, honestly, makes a statement of fact which later turns out to be a misstatement, the president, secretary, treasurer, and directors are personally liable. Because of that, men who have lived for some time and have acquired a competency hesitate to step out and start to finance new expansion and new development, taking a chance, where they have to rely upon their assistants for facts which they cannot secure themselves. They hesitate, and in fact refuse, to put out such prospectuses; and, because of that fact, practically nothing at present is being done in the way of flotation of securities.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I do.

Mr. DILL. Is it not a fact also that a great many corporations that are ready to abide by the law, and ready to issue prospectuses, find themselves prevented by the Federal Trade Commission from even being given permission to do so?

I desire to say to the Senator that the mining business in the Northwest, the section from which I come, has been absolutely stopped so far as new financing is concerned for the reason that the Federal Trade Commission refuses to permit even the issuance of prospectuses and makes demand after demand for more information and new information. As a result, there is not any development of the mining business in the Northwest, at least, and there will not be so long as these restrictions are contained in the law.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I do.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it not a fact that the more difficult it is to obtain capital, the higher the interest rate the borrowing concern has to pay?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. TYDINGS. I heard the other day about a concern that was called upon to refinance and had to pay 12 percent for the money, because the broker told the officers frankly that financing under existing conditions would require a heavy discount. I also know that in my own State the obligations of some of our large concerns are maturing next year, and as things are now projected there is no hope that they can refinance; and, if they do, under this bill they will get less money than they would have gotten otherwise, because the charge will be exorbitant.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator from Kentucky asked me a moment ago if there are any companies that are ready to finance if they can float their securities. Of course, I cannot answer that question definitely; but I have the name of a company that I could give, and I will give it to the Senator privately if he desires, whose officers tell me they are ready to build a pipe line from Oklahoma and Texas through the North and East. This pipe line will cost $250,000,000. That is a quarter of a billion dollars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will use time on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized on the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. This financing, if allowed, would involve the expenditure of labor to obtain the iron, the transportation of the iron ore to the smelters and to the mills to make it into pipe, the transportation of the pipe to the particular territory in which the pipe line is to be laid, the acquisition of land over many miles from farmers and others on which to lay the pipe line, the employment of labor in laying the pipe line, and then, of course, other labor that might be required in connection with it. So it seems to me that until these large concerns can float their securities and get the necessary money, there is no chance to revive the vast expenditures of this kind which we witnessed in previous years.

Mr. President, I do not desire to take the time of the Senate, because I realize that no material amendment has been adopted to this bill so far, and probably will not be. I have taken this occasion to call to the attention of the Senate, the committee, and especially the conferees, the difficulties as I see them.

The first one is the requirement as to elaborate reports. I suggest that when the conferees meet that point be considered, and that the Commission which is to administer the act be given power to waive the submission of such reports as may not be material.

The second suggestion I make is that the conferees minimize and liberalize the penalties. Of course, one who deliberately makes a misstatement of fact should be punished. No one will controvert that contention; but where presidents and corporate heads are forced to rely upon auditors and others in making out their reports it occurs to me that the common law penalty against a corporation would be ample.

With these suggestions, Mr. President, I shall not ask that the amendment be put to a vote; but I will ask the conferees to consider these features when they come to write the bill in conference, especially the amendments to the Securities Act of 1933.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withdraw his amendment?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, in line with what the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] has just been saying, there is a very interesting article from a finance writer in this morning's Washington Post analyzing the credit situation. I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD.

The article is as follows:

[From the Washington Post of Saturday, May 12, 1934]

ANALYSTS CREDIT STOCK MARKET WEAKNESS TO BAD TRADE OUTLOOK, UNCERTAINTY OVER GOVERNMENTAL POLICIES, EXCHANGE BILL

By Ralph West Robey

Among stock-market analysts in New York the decline of this week is credited on the whole to three things: First, the increasing volume of evidence that business has passed the seasonal peak and now is on the downgrade; secondly, a growing uncertainty over governmental policies of the next few months and the fear that we are faced with still more regimentation and experimentation; thirdly, the rather wide-spread, although more or less indefinite apprehension over the possible effects of the security-exchange bill.

If one could assign definite weights to these factors it appears the greatest importance would be given to the first one listed. On all sides in the New York financial district one now hears bearish prophecies as to the future of business. Insofar as I have discovered no one questions that the decline will be more than seasonal. It merely is a question of how much more than seasonal it is to be. Among the more optimistic, 5 percent is a commonly quoted figure. Others estimate it will be as much as 20 percent.

BUSINESS FIGURES STILL REFLECT BETTER CONDITIONS

To those who give only casual attention to business statistics such prophecies may appear strange, for it is true that several of the major indicators of the trend still are climbing, and the Federal Reserve Board indices continue to reflect improvement. The reason for the discrepancy between this record and the views of the analysts is partly because of unusual forces tending to hold up particular lines of business and partly because of the shortcomings in the corrections of the indices for seasonal variations.

Thus in the case of steel production it is emphasized that current buying is anticipating the needs of the third quarter to an unusual degree. This anticipation is the result of a desire of the buyers to get their orders filled before the announced price advance takes place. Steel scrap prices, which are taken as a reliable indicator of the trend in the industry, recently have shown marked weakness.

Seasonal corrections are viewed as important because the spring improvement has lasted beyond the usual date. In consequence the normal corrections give a false picture of the actual situation, tending to hold the indexes at an abnormally high figure. Later they will work in the opposite direction.

REPORTS ON GOVERNMENTAL POLICY SHOW INCONSISTENCY

The uncertainty over future governmental policies is the inevitable consequence of trying to conclude where we are headed from the inconsistent stories coming out of Washington. To some extent there has been such inconsistency from the start of this administration, but many people in the street feel that it is greater today than at almost any earlier period. Time after time recently the entire outlook has been changed over night. A notable example have been the reports this week on silver. On Monday it was stated nothing was to be done, on Tuesday the President had agreed to a far-reaching program, on Wednesday the whole program was in a deadlock.

Apprehension over the stock exchange bill probably is the least important of the three factors mentioned. So far as I can determine, it amounts in the final analysis to little more than disliking the idea of a governmental group having a whip hand over the market at all times.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the amendment has been printed, and I have made no change at all in it. I ask to have it printed in the RECORD, and that the further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. FLETCHER'S amendment is to insert at the end of the bill the following new sections:

SEC. 211. Section 2 of the Securities Act of 1933 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(13) The term 'protective committee' means any persons or group of persons who propose or purport to act, or who on the date this paragraph takes effect are acting, for and in behalf of owners or holders of securities for the purpose of protecting, preserving, and/or forwarding the common interests of owners or holders of such securities (A) in connection with a reorganization, rehabilitation, or liquidation of, or composition by, the issuer of the securities, (B) the substitution of other securities therefor, (C) a readjustment or modification of the rights or liabilities evidenced by or embodied in the securities, or (D) the assertion of any such rights other than voting rights; except that such term shall not include any person or group of persons upon whom authority so to act was or is conferred by the instrument under which the securities were originally issued or by any amendment to such instrument.

"(14) The term 'protective committee agreement' means any agreement, consent, authorization, power of attorney, or other instrument, by whatever name called, by which the owners or holders of securities confer upon a protective committee authority to act for and in their behalf.

"(15) The term 'plan of reorganization' means any plan or agreement for reorganization, rehabilitation, liquidation, or composition, or for readjustment or modification of securities, or for the assertion of rights (other than voting rights) evidenced by or embodied in any securities."

SEC. 212. (a) Section 17 of such act is amended by adding after subsection (b) thereof the following new subsections:

"(c) From and after 60 days after this subsection takes effect, it shall be unlawful for any protective committee, directly or indirectly, to make use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or of the mails in order to solicit a protective committee agreement or any amendment thereto, or in order to solicit adherence, assent, or consent to any such agreement or amendment, or in order to submit any such agreement or amendment for an expression of assent or dissent, or in order to solicit adherence, assent, or consent to any plan of reorganization or any amendment thereto, or in order to submit any such plan or amendment for an expression of assent or dissent, unless—

"(1) a statement concerning such agreement, plan, or amendment, complying with the requirements of subsection (d) shall be in effect;

"(2) at the time of filing of the statement referred to in paragraph (1), such committee shall file with the Commission (A) an undertaking to file monthly thereafter, until the Commission shall determine by appropriate order that the committee has ceased operation, a written report under oath, for the period not covered by previous reports, in such form and containing such information concerning the activities of the committee as the Commission, by rules and regulations, may require as necessary or appropriate for the proper protection of investors, and a list showing the names and the last-known addresses of any persons (other than those listed in any list previously filed) to whom any individual solicitation or submission is proposed to be addressed at the date of the filing of the list, or was addressed during the period since the filing of the last previous list; and (B) an undertaking to file with the Commission copies of any amendments thereafter made to the protective committee agreement or plan of reorganization, and copies of any plan of reorganization thereafter adopted pursuant to the provisions of the protective committee agreement, such filing to be made not later than 10 days after such amendment is made or such plan is adopted;

"(3) at or before the time of solicitation or submission by any such means, the committee shall, (A) in the case of an individual solicitation or submission, send or give to each person to whom the solicitation or submission is addressed a copy of a summary of such of the information contained in the statement required under paragraph (1) as the Commission may by rules and regulations require as necessary or appropriate for the proper protection of investors, or (B) in the case of solicitation or submission by general notice or advertisement, offer to furnish on request a copy of such summary to any member of the group to which the solicitation or submission is addressed; and

"(4) In any case in which the terms of the protective committee agreement, the composition of the protective committee, and/or the qualifications of its members, fail to conform to the recommendations which may be established by the Commission from time to time for various classes of securities and types of situations, all written communications or communications by radio, made by the committee in the course of any solicitation or submission of the character referred to in this subsection, shall contain a clear statement to that effect. In the case of a written communication, such statement shall be in print, type, or writing as legible as that used generally throughout the communication and shall be followed by a brief summary of the provisions or matters in which there is failure to conform to the Commission's recommendations.

"(d) The statement required under subsection (c) (1) shall be filed with the Commission in triplicate, shall be signed by every member of the committee, shall include such information, documents, and exhibits as the Commission by rules and regulations may require as necessary or appropriate for the proper protection of investors, comparable in character to that required in registration statements for certificates of deposit, and shall include specifically a list giving the last-known address of each person known or believed to be the owner or holder of securities to whom any individual solicitation and/or submission is, at the date of filing such statement, proposed to be addressed. A statement with respect to an amendment to a plan of reorganization or a protective committee agreement concerning which a statement has previously been filed, or with respect to a plan of reorganization adopted pursuant to any such agreement, may be filed as an amendment to such previously filed statement. The provisions of section 6 (d) and section 8 with reference to registration statements shall apply to statements required under subsection (c) (1), and the term 'issuer' as used in such sections shall apply to the protective committee. At the time of filing any statement required under such subsection the committee filing the same shall pay to the Commission a fee of $25. The filing of any such statement or of an amendment thereto shall be deemed to have taken place upon the receipt thereof if it is accompanied by a United States postal money order or certified bank check or cash for the amount of the fee required. No such statement shall be filed within the first 30 days after subsection (c) takes effect.

"(e) The provisions of subsection (c) of this section shall not apply to any protective committee which proposes or purports to act for and in behalf of (1) a group of not more than 25 persons; (2) security holders who are all persons resident in, and/or corporations incorporated by and doing business in, the the State or Territory in which the members of the committee are all resident; (3) holders of securities of the classes referred to in section 3 (a) (2) or (3); or (4) holders of securities of a value of not more than $100,000, as determined in accordance with the rules and regulations of the Commission, if the committee complies with such terms and conditions as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe as necessary or appropriate for the proper protection of investors."

(b) The last subsection of section 17 of such act is amended by striking out "(c)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(f)."

SEC. 213. Section 23 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 23. Neither the fact that a registration statement for a security or a statement required under section 17 (c) has been filed or is in effect, nor the fact that a stop order is not in effect with respect thereto, shall be deemed a finding by the Commission that such statement is true and accurate on its face or that it does not contain an untrue statement of fact or omit a material fact, or be held to mean that the Commission has in any way passed upon the merits of, or given approval to, any security, or any protective committee, protective committee agreement, or plan of reorganization. It shall be unlawful to make, or cause to be made, to any person, any representation contrary to the foregoing provisions of this section."

SEC. 214. Section 24 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 24. Any person who willfully violates any of the provisions of this title, or the rules and regulations promulgated by the Commission under authority thereof, or any person who willfully fails to carry out the terms of any undertaking filed with the Commission as required by the provisions of this title, or any person who willfully, in a registration statement, or in any statement, list, or report required to be filed under section 17 (c) (1) or (2), or in any summary required to be sent, given, or furnished under section 17 (c) (3), makes any untrue statement of a material fact or omits to state any material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both."

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a memorandum explaining the amendment, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

The memorandum is as follows:

MEMORANDUM EXPLANATORY OF THE ATTACHED PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO THE SECURITIES ACT OF 1933 OFFERED AS AMENDMENTS TO THE NATIONAL SECURITIES EXCHANGE ACT

Section 211: This section adds definitions of the terms "protective committee", "protective committee agreement", and "plan of reorganization." The definition of the term "protective committee" is based upon the definition contained in the Public Trust Commission Act of Michigan, section 2 (d) (Mich. 1933, Public Act No. 89, as amended by Act No. 205). The term is so defined as to apply to committees existing at the time of the passage of the act. It excludes therefrom a trustee under the trust indenture under which the bonds were originally issued. The term "protective committee agreement" is intended to be drawn broadly enough to include any instrument by which committees secure power from security holders. In order to avoid the provisions of the Securities Act, which apply only in case of a sale of securities, many committees have adopted the device of securing powers of attorney rather than of issuing certificates of deposit. This definition will subject such committees to the provisions of section 17 as proposed to be amended.

Section 212: This section proposes to amend section 17 of the Securities Act. Section 17 was chosen because its provisions are left untouched by the proposed amendment to the Bankruptcy Act (H.R. 5884).

This section adds three new subsections to section 17. Subsection (c) (1) requires of committees the filing of a statement with the Commission, which, as described by subsection (d), will correspond to a registration statement now required for nonexempt certificates of deposit. Paragraph (2) requires an undertaking of each committee to furnish monthly reports on its activities, to furnish supplemental lists of security holders solicited and copies of plans and of amendments to agreements and plans later adopted. Paragraph (3) requires each committee to furnish the security holders it solicits copies of a summary of the statement required by paragraph (1), which will correspond to the prospectus provided for in section 10 for registered securities. Paragraph (4) authorizes the Commission to establish recommendations as to the terms of protective committee agreements and the composition and membership qualifications of protective committees, and requires all literature and broadcasts of committees to contain statements that there is failure to conform to such recommendations if such is the case. The subsection takes active effect after 60 days.

Subsection (d) describes the statement required under subsection (c). It is to contain information corresponding to that required in registration statements for certificates of deposit. The Commission is given the power to issue stop orders against the effectiveness of any statement, as in the case of registration statements. A filing fee of $25 is charged. No statements are to be filed for the first 30 days after the subsection takes effect, so that the Commission may evolve machinery for handling the new requirements.

Subsection (e) provides exemptions which correspond, in general, to the following exemptions from registration provided in the act: Section 4 (1), second clause, exemption for nonpublic offerings; section 5 (c)—or as proposed in the amendments heretofore submitted, section 3 (a) (11)—exemption for local offerings; section 3 (a) (2) and (3), exemptions for governmental and bank securities, and for short-term obligations, here applied to protective committees acting for such securities; section 3 (b), exemptions for issues of less than $100,000, on conditions established by the Commission.

Section 213: This amendment applies the present provisions of section 23 to the statements required under new subsection (c) (1) of section 17.

Section 214: The proposed amendment to section 24 imposes criminal liability for violation of the new provisions, including misstatements in the required statements, lists, reports, or summaries, and failures to carry out any agreements required by the new provisions.

It is to be noted that enforcement of the provisions of the new subsection is left to injunction, stop order, and criminal prosecution. No civil liability attaches for any violation thereof.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will state that the purpose of the amendment is to place under the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission, so far as the Securities Act goes, bondholders' committees or protective committees. Senators know about them. I need not take the time of the Senate to tell about their operations.

Where bonds are in default, protective committees or bondholders' committees are immediately formed, very often controlled by the people who issued or distributed the bonds. Such committees call for the bonds to be sent in to them, under the representation that they will look after the interests of the bondholders. The bonds are sent in and the committees issue receipts or certificates of some kind against them, and are supposed to endeavor to realize upon the bonds and to take care of the interests of the bondholders.

I have numbers of letters from all parts of the country, from people who have put up their bonds with these committees, in which they say, "We cannot find out anything about our bonds. We understand that a receiver has been appointed, and that receivers' fees and lawyers' fees and other expenses are eating up everything, but we hear nothing as to any interest payments or prospects of realizing anything on the bonds."

Of course, a bondholder may go into court, I take it, and compel an accounting, and reach an adjustment of some kind in that way; but that is too burdensome. It is practically prohibitory, because a bondholder would have to pay out for lawyers' fees and expenses in procuring court action more than his bond would be worth; so that now the bondholders are practically helpless. They are entirely in the hands of the committees; and I think there ought to be some requirement that such committees shall file with the Federal Trade Commission their agreements with the bondholders, and shall be required to make reports there.

The amendment is a rather long one to accomplish that purpose. I thought it might be shortened; but it is very specific and leaves nothing in doubt about what the Federal Trade Commission will do and what it will require of bondholders' or protective committees. Of course, under the amendment the functions of the Federal Trade Commission are transferred to the special commission.

That is the whole proposition. I think there is need for this proposed legislation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator to say that in view of the fact that the functions of the Federal Trade Commission are transferred to the proposed special commission, such reports will be made to the special commission rather than to the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; precisely. All the duties under the Securities Act will go to the new commission if the amendment shall be agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Then this amendment takes that function away from the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. FLETCHER. It puts it under the Securities Act, and the whole matter will now go to the new commission.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, these reports are not now made to anybody. The amendment covers a situation which is not covered at present, so that it is part of the securities situation.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is a new provision.

Mr. BARKLEY. It will go to whatever commission is finally given jurisdiction.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, if the result of the conference should be that the duties under this act should devolve upon the Federal Trade Commission, jurisdiction would go to the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. The amendment, then, would simply send that question to conference?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, as I understand, the amendment simply creates the mechanism and machinery through which the committees would function.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; it gives an additional duty to the Federal Trade Commission in connection with the Securities Act.

Mr. BONE. The amendment adds nothing to the amendment, except the feature as to the machinery under which creditors and security holders can act?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Florida whether the corporation that has now been created under the laws of Delaware and is now functioning in relation to defaulted bonds would be within the purview of this amendment?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the amendment does not affect that corporation at all.

Mr. JOHNSON. Why not? Why should it not do so?

Mr. FLETCHER. I really do not know just what they are doing. We originally provided in the Securities Act for setting up some control over foreign bonds; but that was never carried out, as the Senator will remember. The corporation referred to by the Senator was organized, but I do not know just what it is doing. Does the Senator mean whether they would be required——

Mr. JOHNSON. To do the acts which are required to be done by the so-called "protective committees", and the like, under this amendment?

Mr. FLETCHER. I should think so.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wanted to get of record a statement as to whether or not, in the opinion of the chairman of the committee, that was the fact.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think so.

Mr. JOHNSON. The chairman of the committee will recall that title II was annexed to the Securities Act for the formation of a public corporation. In the conference between the two Houses there was inserted a sentence to the effect that title II should not become operative until it had been proclaimed by the President. The President has never proclaimed it.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is my understanding.

Mr. JOHNSON. In lieu of that, a private corporation was organized under the laws of the State of Delaware, and is now operating. That private corporation was designed to perform the function required under title II of the Securities Act, and I was curious to know, as I glanced hastily through this amendment, whether, under the amendment, that private corporation, now acting for bondholders throughout the country, or endeavoring to do so, would continue to act. That is the opinion of the chairman of the committee?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have one or two amendments I desire to offer. I send the first amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 30, it is proposed to strike out the words "in any material respect" wherever they appear and to insert in lieu thereof the words "with respect to any material fact."

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, in explanation of the necessity for that amendment, let me say that I find that those words appear in one or two places in the measure other than the places where they were corrected by the amendment of the Senator from Oregon and the amendment is to make the entire bill in accord with the action of the Senate with reference to those words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I send another amendment to the desk and ask that it be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 21, line 20, it is proposed to strike out the words "party to the transaction."

Mr. BYRNES. The necessity for this amendment lies in the fact that in drafting the bill there was a mistake in including the words "party to the transaction", which really is a limitation which was not intended by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I offer another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 44, beginning with the comma in line 19, it is proposed to strike out down to the word "action" in line 21, as follows:

unless the controlling person acted in good faith and did not directly or indirectly induce the act or acts constituting the violation or cause of action.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, that, too, is a clarifying amendment which it is necessary to adopt.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I send another amendment to the desk and ask for its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. 215. Section 3 (a) (10) of the Securities Act of 1933 is amended to read as follows:

"(10) Any security which is issued in exchange for one or more bona fide outstanding securities, claims, or property interests, or partly in such exchange and partly for cash, where the conditions of such issuance and exchange (including the fees or remuneration chargeable directly or indirectly to the persons to whom it is proposed to issue securities or to the issuer of such securities, in connection with the preparation or execution of the plan under which such securities are issued) are approved, after a hearing upon the fairness of such conditions of which all persons to whom it is proposed to issue securities in such exchange shall be given reasonable notice and in which all such persons shall be given an opportunity to appear, by any court, or by any official or agency of the United States, or by any State banking or insurance commission or similar authority."

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the members of the Federal Trade Commission, charged with the administration of the act, state that if the amendment of the Senator from Florida shall be adopted as to the bondholders' protective situation, which has been explained by the Senator, it will be essential to adopt this amendment in order to correct language which would be inconsistent with the language of the existing law. It is solely to clarify the situation that would arise as a result of the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, all the amendments now having been agreed to, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H.R. 9323) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I move to amend the bill now before the Senate by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof Senate bill 3420, which has been under consideration in the Senate, as it has been amended.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	Hayden	O'Mahoney
Ashurst	Couzens	Hebert	Overton
Austin	Dickinson	Johnson	Patterson
Bachman	Dill	Kean	Reynolds
Bailey	Duffy	King	Robinson, Ark.
Bankhead	Erickson	La Follette	Schall
Barbour	Fess	Lewis	Sheppard
Barkley	Fletcher	Logan	Steiwer
Black	Frazier	Lonergan	Stephens
Bone	George	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Gibson	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Bulkley	Glass	McKellar	Thompson
Bulow	Goldsborough	McNary	Tydings
Byrd	Gore	Metcalf	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hale	Murphy	Van Nuys
Capper	Harrison	Neely	Wagner
Carey	Hastings	Norbeck	Walcott
Clark	Hatch	Norris	Walsh
Connally	Hatfield	Nye	Wheeler

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-six Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], that all after the enacting clause of the House bill now before the Senate be stricken out, and that there be inserted in lieu thereof Senate bill 3420, as it has been amended in the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COPELAND (when his name was called). Upon this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]. Not knowing how that Senator would vote, in his absence I withhould my vote.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when Mr. CUTTING's name was called). I have been requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING]. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I make the same transfer as on the previous vote, and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND). I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STEPHENS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before regarding my pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. WALCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], who is detained from the Senate on account of illness. Not knowing how he would vote, I refrain from voting. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I beg to reannounce the absence of certain Senators as announced on the previous roll call, and for the reasons given, to which I add that my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH], if present and voting, would vote "yea" on this roll call.

I further wish to announce that if present and voting the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] would vote "yea." These Senators are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (after having voted in the affirmative). Announcing my general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], and making the same transfer as on the previous roll call, I will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. NEELY. I am authorized to announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would, on this roll call, vote "yea."

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] is paired with his colleague from that State [Mr. BROWN]. I am advised that if the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] were present, he would vote "nay" on this question, and the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN], if present, would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce that the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON], the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], and the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 62, nays 13, as follows:

YEAS—62

Adams	Coolidge	La Follette	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Couzens	Lewis	Schall

So the bill was passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 3420 will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD subsequently said: Mr. President, when the vote was taken on the securities bill I was unavoidably absent at the White House on official business, and could not return for the vote. I favor the bill, and if I had been here I should have voted for it. I should like to have the RECORD so show.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a communication from James M. Landis, Commissioner of the Federal Trade Commission, which bears on the so-called "Hastings amendment." It is a very instructive communication.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Washington, May 2, 1934.

MY DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: I have examined the bill introduced by Senator HASTINGS for the amendment of the Securities Act of 1933, Senate bill 3301, and am pleased to furnish you herewith certain comments on the provisions of that bill. The bill for the most part presents verbatim the amendments to the Securities Act proposed in a report of the special committee of the American Bar Association on amendments to the Securities Act of 1933, which was published last month after approval by the executive committee of the American Bar Association. Therefore, in certain instances I shall discuss the bill in the light of the comments upon its provisions contained in the foregoing report, and I shall also attempt to point out certain of the changes which have been made from the proposals contained in that report.

1. AMENDMENT TO SECTION 2 (11)

The most important change which would be made by this amendment would effect a complete elimination from the status of an underwriter under the act of all persons who are what may be termed "the traditional type of underwriter", or, as the Bar Association report states: "Actual underwriters; that is, persons who agree to take up securities if the distribution to the public is a failure." It is probably true that in many cases such persons do not openly and actively promote the sale of an issue of securities which they have underwritten. Nevertheless, they really are a vital cause of the distribution of an issue to the public, and, having assumed such responsibility, I do not believe that they should be permitted to escape legal liability for any dereliction from the responsibility which they so assume. Even though such underwriters may not openly and actively promote the sale of an underwritten issue, it is almost always to their interest to see that the issue is successfully marketed to the public and by indirect methods they frequently will attempt to promote the distribution of the issue. Even though such underwriters may not intentionally undertake any such promotion, the very fact that such a person which may be a prominent and responsible banking house has underwritten the issue will become an important factor in the public mind in the passing of judgment upon the merit of the security. Such underwriters, practically without exception, will undertake a careful examination of the terms and merits of an issue before assuming the underwriting commitment. The investing public knows this fact, and therefore the sale of the security is promoted by the mere indirect dissemination of knowledge of such underwriting. The present provisions of section 2 (11) of the act place underwriters of this type within the definition of underwriters under the act, and I believe that persons who frequently play such an important part in connection with the public distribution of a security should not be permitted to escape from all responsibility under the act.

Certain of the provisions contained in the second sentence of the proposed amendment effect changes beyond the elimination of the traditional type of underwriter. Clause (a) contains language already in the act, except insofar as a very dangerous change has been made in the introduction to this sentence. The act now provides that the term "underwriter" "shall not include a person whose interest is limited to a commission", etc. The proposed amendment would merely state: "a person shall not be deemed an underwriter by reason of * * *." While the proper effect of these two forms of phraseology would probably be the same, there is a very grave possibility that the new language would not be as specifically limiting as the old. The danger would be eliminated if the new language read: "by reason only of * * *."

The clause (b) in the second sentence simply states specifically what the Commission, by a regulation, has already interpreted clause (a) to include.

Clause (c), together with the preceding elimination in the section to which I have referred, effects the change which would eliminate the old-fashioned type of underwriter from liability. I would also point out that it effects the impractical result of having the status of an underwriter depend ex post facto upon whether the underwriter may or may not sell any part of the commitment which he takes up within 6 months.

Clause (d) simply states specifically what the Commission has consistently recognized to be a proper interpretation of the existing provisions of section 2 (11).

Clause (e) appears particularly dangerous. It is entirely unnecessary unless the recommendation for the purchase, sale, or exchange of a security is made by a person who is purchasing from or selling for an issuer in connection with distribution; while in such case an underwriter certainly should not be allowed to escape from his responsibility by reason of lack of proof of his compensation. Under the proposed language it might very likely be argued that an underwriter purchasing and reselling at a profit to himself was not receiving "compensation." Also, if an underwriter should sell as agent for an issuer or for another underwriter, it might be urged that he was not an underwriter if he received no commission directly from the issuer or other underwriter, although he should receive payment for his activities by reason of a commission from other sources.

2. AMENDMENT ADDING SECTION 3 (9)

This proposed amendment is in accordance with an interpretation which the Commission has already placed upon the existing language of section 4 (3) of the act, and to that extent is unobjectionable. Securities issued under the exemptions of the second clause of section 4 (1), however, should by no means be made exempted securities. To do so might give securities an exempt status by a transaction immediately preceding a public offering by one other than the issuer.

3. AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 4

The proposed amendment to section 4 (1) completely eliminates from the third clause thereof any duty of a dealer to furnish a prospectus in connection with the sale of a security within 1 year of its public offering. The trading activities of dealers, even though such persons are not to be classed as underwriters, are a very important factor in connection with the public distribution of a new security. It is indeed rare that an issue is sold directly to scattered investors either by the issuer or by an underwriter. Issuers and underwriters fully expect that a substantial part of the distribution of a new security will be carried out through the activities of dealers having no direct relation with them. Where a dealer undertakes to promote the distribution of a new issue, I believe that it is fully as important that he be required to furnish a prospectus conforming to the requirements of the Securities Act as it is that the issuer or an underwriter be required to furnish such a prospectus. I recognize that there has been some confusion and fear created by the present provision of the act which, in effect, requires that dealers must furnish a prospectus in connection with transactions "within 1 year after the last date upon which the security was bona fide offered to the public." Such a date might undoubtedly be practically impossible of ascertainment by particular dealers. I would, therefore, simply suggest a change in this provision so that the requirement relates to the first date upon which the security was offered.

The amendment to section 4 (2) strikes out the last clause of the present provision which withdraws from the exemption afforded by the provision the solicitation of orders by brokers. It is urged in the comments upon this proposal in the bar association report that the provision "does not tie up with the other provisions of the act" and that it merely creates confusion because of the fact that the act deals with sales of securities, whereas this provision would appear to restrict a principal-agent relation between a broker and his client. The act includes within the definition of a "sale" in section 2 (3) a "solicitation of an offer to buy a security." I do not, therefore, believe that the provision is inconsistent with the use of the term "sale" in the other provisions of the act, and I think it highly important that the act cover the activities of brokers who may be accomplishing the effective distribution of a new issue to the public. Brokers will, of course, be dealers, and the requirement for the furnishing of a prospectus imposed upon them where they solicit market orders will apply only to the extent that such a requirement is imposed upon dealers under section 4 (1).

The provisions for the amendment of section 4 (3) contained in the bill are substantially altered and less extensive than the proposals which were made in the bar association report. The change in the first clause of this section consists essentially in restricting the general language which prohibits the payment of a commission or other remuneration "in connection with" an exchange, so that only a commission or other remuneration paid "for soliciting" an exchange is forbidden. This is in accordance with the interpretation which the Commission has consistently applied to the general language now in the act, and I believe that the clarifying change is desirable. I wish to point out, however, that the bill (perhaps inadvertently, since the omission does not appear in the bar association proposal) has omitted the phrase "directly or indirectly" from the limitation against payment of remuneration. This phrase should certainly be left standing.

The second clause of section 4 (3) has been very materially changed by the proposed amendment. The change is apparently intended to extend the exemption therein contained to cover transactions in connection with various forms of court reorganizations, rehabilitations, and readjustments of outstanding securities, in addition to the issuance of securities under court supervision in connection with corporate reorganizations, to which the clause is at present limited. I am in sympathy with the apparent object of this amendment, but I do not believe that it has been properly framed, and, in particular, I desire to point out that the proposed language would actually remove entirely the requirement for court supervision over the issuance or the terms of issuance of the new securities. The provisions of the bill simply require that court proceedings be in progress. In such case any securities, including certificates of deposit issued by any protective committee, are made exempt if issued to security holders or creditors of the person which is, or the property of which is, the subject of the court proceedings. The entire basis of the exemption of the second clause of section 4 (3) rests upon the assumption that court supervision will be an adequate protection for investors in substitution for the registration requirements of the act. Such court supervision will, of course, afford protection only if the court actually supervises the terms of or the issuance of the securities. The proposed amendment contains no such requirement. I wish also to point out that the specific addition of a provision concerning certificates of deposit is unnecessary, since the existing language of the act fully covers such securities and has been so interpreted by the Commission.

There is added a final clause to section 4 (3) which would exempt the issuance of securities pursuant to a plan of reorganization or bona fide readjustment "promulgated prior to the enactment of this title." Such a provision is at most a clarifying addition to section 3 (a) (1) of the act and, if placed anywhere, should be added to that section. The provision, however, is entirely unnecessary, as section 3 (a) (1) fully covers such securities and has consistently been so interpreted by the Commission. I would point out that the proposal made in the bill is actually narrower than the exemption afforded by section 3 (a) (1), since the exemption of this last clause which would be added to section 4 (3) would apply only to securities issued pursuant to a plan promulgated prior to the enactment of the Securities Act of 1933, whereas section 3 (a) (1) covers any such securities under a plan promulgated "within 60 days after the enactment" of the act.

For your information I would point out that the bill has not included the proposal of the Bar Association report to add a new section 4 (4) to the act.

4. AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 11

The amendments to section 11 are substantial and are of two types. Certain of the amendments very materially modify and restrict the liability of various persons in connection with the registration statement. Others of the amendments are primarily of a clarifying character.

Throughout section 11 several proposed changes would predicate liability only upon "an untrue statement of a material fact" and eliminate from the basis for liability the expression, "an omission to state a material fact required to be stated in the registration statement or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading." By the terms of the proposed section 11 (h) an untrue statement is defined so that, in effect, the omission of a material fact necessary to make the facts stated not misleading is retained, by definition, as a basis for liability. The elimination of any civil liability for an omission to state a material fact required to be stated in the registration statement is, nevertheless, carried throughout this section and is not reinstated by the definition in section 11 (h). As a result, the change would leave any violation of the requirements of a registration statement in the nature of an omission solely for stop-order proceedings by the Commission or criminal prosecution under section 24 if the omission should be willful. As a result, the responsibility for compelling a full compliance with the requirements of the registration statement would be thrust entirely upon the Commission and the salutary threat of civil liability on account of an omission of required material facts would be lost.

A change has been made in the opening paragraph of section 11 (a) which was not contained in the bar association report, whereby the right of a purchaser of a security to sue is removed if such person "in the exercise of reasonable care would have known that such statement was untrue." The section as it now exists negatives the purchaser's right of action only if it is proved that at the time of acquisition of a security he knew of the existence of the untrue statement complained of. The additional restriction on the right to sue proposed by the bill would open up a very large field for the defense of actions and I do not believe that an investor should be subjected to a duty of exercising reasonable care to discover an untruth or omission in the registration statement. This might well mean that no action would be successful unless the purchaser of the security had himself undertaken to investigate the accuracy of every statement made in a registration statement.

A slight change is contained in section 11 (a) (4) which appears to be purely clarifying, except insofar as it adopts the definition of an untrue statement proposed in section 11 (h).

Section 11 (b) of the bill is new. It contains the most important change proposed and inserts a requirement of reliance upon the registration statement or the prospectus in order that a purchaser may recover under most circumstances. Section 11 (b) (1) permits a suit against the issuer without the necessity of proving reliance if a security was purchased within 6 months after its sale by the issuer. Thereafter a suit against the issuer will be successful only if the purchaser sustains the burden of proof of showing that he purchased the security in reliance on the registration statement or on a prospectus which contained the untrue statement of a material fact which was contained in the registration statement. By section 11 (b) (2) the liability of underwriters is limited to persons who can sustain the burden of proving the purchase of a security from the underwriter sued or the purchase of a security in reliance upon a prospectus published over the name of the underwriter sued. Section 11 (b) (3) requires that the purchaser can successfully bring a suit against any persons other than the issuer or underwriters covered by section 11 (b) (2), i.e., directors, officers, experts, and such other underwriters, if the purchaser sustains the burden of proving that he purchased in reliance upon the registration statement or upon a prospectus containing an untrue statement contained in the registration statement. I do not believe that the requirement of reliance is consonant with the present-day methods of distributing securities in this country.

While the proposed section 11 (b) (1) would make an issuer absolutely liable if a purchaser could sustain the burden of proof that he purchased a security within 6 months after its sale by, and the receipt of consideration therefor by, the issuer, that period is, in my opinion, entirely too short, even if any limitation is to be placed upon the period of absolute liability. It very frequently requires more than 6 months fully to distribute a new issue. Purchases made after that time from underwriters or dealers should certainly remain subject to absolute liability of the issuer where such purchases are in connection with a distribution.

I am in sympathy with a part of the apparent object of the proposed section 11 (b) (2), insofar as it is directed to restricting the liability of an underwriter to that part of an issue underwritten by him. I do not, however, believe that this object should be attained upon the basis of a requirement of reliance. A limitation of liability may be accomplished otherwise, and the requirement of reliance, especially with the burden of proof upon the purchaser, will place altogether too hopeless a burden upon any attempt at recovery by the purchaser of a security.

The proposed section 11 (b) (3) imposes the requirement of proof of reliance upon the plaintiff wherever he attempts to hold a responsible person, such as a director, officer, or expert, who may have caused to be put into circulation a statement violating the requirements of the act. There is no real justification for imposing this added burden upon a plaintiff, suing such persons as against a suit against an issuer or an underwriter from whom the plaintiff purchased a security, and the only practical object of the provision is to relieve responsible persons of the major possibility of a successful action against them.

The proposed new section 11 (c), which is the present section 11 (b) of the act, contains only changes with respect to the definition of an untrue statement and eliminating an omission to state a required material fact as a basis for liability. With regard to these changes, my previous comments are applicable, and I cannot agree that such changes are desirable.

The present section 11 (c) of the act is eliminated by the proposed amendment. The present section 11 (c) fixes as the standard of reasonableness the standard required of a person occupying "a fiduciary relationship." This definition has apparently created considerable consternation, and I would be agreeable to a change which would state the meaning of a fiduciary relationship in commonly accepted legal terminology. I do not, however, believe that a definition of the standard of reasonableness as a fiduciary standard should be omitted from this section of the act.

The proposed section 11 (d) attempts to define what constitutes a reasonable investigation within the requirements of section 11. For the most part I think that this proposed section contains a superfluous reiteration of the standard of reasonableness under particular circumstances and to such extent it is objectionable only in the sense of being unnecessary. I believe, however, that the definition also goes too far in permitting responsibility for investigations to be passed on entirely to other persons than the person who might be the defendant to an action. This section has not expressed the fiduciary character of the standard of reasonableness which the act should contain.

The present section 11 (d) of the act has been omitted. As a result of this omission an underwriter becoming such after a registration statement is effective will assume no responsibility for the accuracy of the registration statement at the time he commences distribution of the securities registered hereunder.

Under the amendments to section 11 (e), an action for rescission is limited to suits against the issuer or against an underwriter from whom the plaintiff may have purchased. Against all other persons only damages may be recovered. I should not object to the elimination from the act of a statutory cause of action for rescission, and would be content to leave rescission actions to the principles of the common law and of equity.

The amendment to section 11 (f) removes any right of contribution from an issuer and any persons controlling the issuer and liable under section 15 of the act. It also makes the issuer absolutely liable to any persons against whom a recovery may be had under the act unless such person was guilty of "fraudulent misrepresentation." I do not consider these changes desirable.

The proposed section 11 (g) contains an express statement of the basis for damages which I believe is unobjectionable.

The proposed section 11 (h) contains a definition of "an untrue statement" and a definition of "a material fact." As I have previously pointed out, I believe that the definition of an untrue statement is little different from that which would result from the present language of the act, which predicates liability upon an untrue statement or an omission to state a material fact necessary to make the statements made not misleading. I do not think that the definition of a material fact is at all satisfactory, since it defines the word "material" in its own terms.

5. AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 12

The amendment to section 12 (1) of the act inserts the word "willfully." I do not at all believe that civil liabilities resulting from a violation of the act should be limited to cases where willfulness can be proved. Innocent misrepresentations are a well-recognized ground for actions of rescission at common law, and to provide that a violation of the act shall carry similar civil liability is entirely reasonable and most essential for the protection of investors.

By an amendment at the opening of section 12 (2), the bill would insert a limitation upon liability so that only a person selling for his own account would be liable for misrepresentations. A person selling as agent for another would incur no liability if he disclosed his agency. This would entirely remove all responsibility for misrepresentations from the very person making the misrepresentation in probably the great majority of instances.

The proposed new section 12 (2) would remove the meaning of a misrepresentation as described in the act and insert the meaning of an "untrue statement" as defined in the proposed section 11 (h). A requirement of reliance is further inserted in the section. The section also limits damages to those "caused by such violation or by such untruth." I do not believe that the element of causation to be added changes the meaning of the present section. There is added to section 12 a final sentence which specifically limits damages to the amount by which the consideration paid by the person suing is greater than the consideration received by the person suing. This is probably intended to express the ordinary rule of damages which would be applied by a court and to eliminate punitive damages, but I think the definition would be extremely dangerous, since it might be subject to the interpretation that payment of a price no greater than the current market value of a security at the time of a purchase would give rise to no damages.

The proposed new section 13 reduces the period of limitation upon an action after discovery of an untrue statement or omission from 2 years to 6 months and reduces the period of limitation for the bringing of any action from 10 years to 6 years. I think the 6 months period after discovery, and particularly "after such discovery should have been made by the exercise of reasonable diligence" is entirely too short, when it must be recognized that a security issue might be distributed widely over the country and actual knowledge of the discovery of a misrepresentation might be very slow to be disseminated. For the ordinary investor, also, the institution of suit within 6 months would be a very serious requirement. I do not believe that a 10-year general limitation is unnecessarily long in the light of the periods of limitation for actions of various types generally in force under the laws of the several States.

7. AMENDMENT TO SECTION 15

According to the Bar Association report, the proposed changes which are made in section 15 are intended to make that section applicable only to prevent the use of dummies in order to evade liability. I am wholly in sympathy with this object, but I do not believe that the proposed changes are well framed for this purpose alone. The changes proposed might very likely be interpreted so narrowly as to make it almost impossible to establish liability by a controlling person.

8. AMENDMENT TO SECTION 17

In the opening clause of section 17 (a) the bill adds the words "willful and with intent to deceive." The insertion of the word "willful" is superfluous, since this section creates criminal liabilities, and section 24 of the act requires that criminal liability shall be predicated only upon a willful violation. The phrase "with intent to deceive" is probably no more than reiterative of the requirements of subsections 1, 2, and 3, but I believe it unwise insofar as it might impose any limitation upon liability extending further than the present language of the section.

Section 17 (b) is changed by making it apply only to a notice which "does not" offer a security for sale instead of a notice "not purporting to" offer a security for sale. The change is probably not one of substance, but I believe that it offers a risk of a narrowing of the requirements of the section. The concluding clause of section 17 (b) has been changed so as to omit entirely any requirement for disclosure of the amount of any consideration received for the description of a security. It also omits a requirement of full disclosure. Both of these requirements in the present section are most vital, and their purpose is obvious.

A change which has been made in section 17, without any reference thereto in the Bar Association report, and which is extremely important and most undesirable, consists of the complete elimination of the present section 17 (c). Under section 17 (c) the exemptions of section 3 of the act do not apply to the provisions of section 17 (a) and 17 (b). Therefore, transactions with respect to securities which are designated as "exempted securities" under the act, are subject to these criminal liability provisions. I do not believe that any policies sustaining the exemptions of section 3 of the act can extend to exempting from liability willful wrongdoing of the character defined in section 17.

9. AMENDMENT TO SECTION 22 (A)

The proposed new section 22 (a) eliminates the concurrent jurisdiction of State and Territorial courts for the enforcement of the Securities Act. The frequent inaccessibility, burdensome procedure and added expense of Federal court proceedings, as against State court proceedings, makes this change undesirable.

10. AMENDMENT TO SECTION 24

The proposed section 24 of the bill has omitted between the word "willfully" and the word "makes" in line 17 the phrase "in a registration statement filed under this title." This omission is not suggested in the Bar Association Report and is probably inadvertent, since it makes the following language meaningless. Assuming the reinsertion of this phrase, the only change in the section is the omission of the phrase, "necessary to make the statements therein not misleading." Thus, the definition of an untrue statement is referred back to the new section 11 (h). In addition, as I have pointed out under section 11, the criminal penalties imposed by section 24 remain as the only penalties, aside from stop-order proceedings, for an omission to state a material fact required to be stated in a registration statement.

11. NEW SECTION 24 (a)

This provision is entirely inequitable, I believe, since it provides for compensatory damages only on behalf of a defendant where a plaintiff is unsuccessful. I would be inclined to favor a provision for compensatory damages if it should work equally in proper cases in the discretion of a court in favor of either a successful plaintiff or a successful defendant.

Sincerely yours,

J. M. LANDIS.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Chairman Senate Banking and Currency Committee,

GENERAL LA FAYETTE MEMORIAL DAY

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 317, requesting the President of the United States of America to proclaim May 20, 1934, General La Fayette Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the death of General La Fayette.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all governmental buildings on May 20, 1934, and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools and churches, or other suitable places, with appropriate ceremonies in commemoration of the death of General La Fayette.

LOANS BY FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS TO INDUSTRIES

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, in my judgment only a few more minutes will be required to dispose of the business which it is my purpose to bring to the attention of the Senate today. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 901, Senate bill 3487, relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3487) relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I offer an amendment to the bill, which I understand the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is willing to accept.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an amendment pending at the present time. The Chair understands the parliamentary situation to be as follows: The banking bill (S. 3487) is now the pending business; and the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], known as the "silver amendment", is the pending question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the situation is that the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] is the pending question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the parliamentary situation, as understood by the Chair. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], therefore, could not be considered at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no desire to offer my amendment until the other matters shall have been disposed of.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, when this bill was before the Senate on a previous occasion the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] offered an amendment. To that amendment I offered a substitute. The amendment and the substitute dealt with silver. Since that time there have been several conferences between Senators interested in the silver and money questions and responsible Government officials in Washington. While no agreement in detail has been reached, yet I feel that an agreement has been reached in principle, and because we have an agreement in principle, as I understand and verily believe, and with an understanding that at a later date it will be agreeable to the leaders of the Senate to call up for consideration House bill 7581, being the Dies bill, at which time, if an agreement shall have been reached with the Treasury Department, it will be the plan to offer the agreement that may be reached as a substitute for the text of the Dies bill—with that understanding, and reserving the right to reoffer the amendment to some other bill, if no agreement shall be reached, I desire at this time to withdraw my amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I sent a telegram to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], inasmuch as he offered the amendment proposing to incorporate part 2 to the pending bill. I have no reply from the senior Senator from Louisiana, but I think I know of his interest, and I think that if he were here he would agree to the suggestion which I will make, and that is that this agreement, as I have stated it, be the understanding of the Senate; that, if the agreement shall be reached, at an opportune time we will have a chance to call up the Dies bill and consider it, and if no agreement shall be reached at some time before the session closes, the amendment will be offered to some other bill to which it will be germane. With that understanding, I am going to ask unanimous consent to withdraw, in the name of the Senator from Louisiana, the substitute or amendment offered by him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add the following:

That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 15, ch. 14), is amended by inserting before section 6 thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 5d. For the purpose of maintaining and increasing the employment of labor, when credit at prevailing bank rates for the character of loan applied for is not otherwise available at banks or at the Federal Reserve bank of the district in which the applicant is located, the Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans to any industrial or commercial business established prior to January 1, 1935. Such loans shall in the opinion of the board of directors of the Corporation be adequately secured, may be made directly, in cooperation with banks or other lending institutions, or by the purchase of participations, shall have maturities not to exceed 5 years, shall be made only when deemed to offer reasonable assurance of continued or increased employment of labor, shall be made only when, in the opinion of the board of directors of the Corporation, the borrower is solvent, shall not exceed $250,000,000 in aggregate amount at any one time outstanding, and shall be subject to such terms, conditions, and restrictions as the board of directors of the Corporation may determine. The aggregate amount of loans to any one borrower under this section shall not exceed $1,000,000.

"The power to make loans given herein shall terminate on January 31, 1935, or on such earlier date as the President shall by proclamation fix; but no provision of law terminating any of the functions of the Corporation shall be construed to prohibit disbursement of funds on loans and commitments, or agreements to make loans, made under this section prior to January 31, 1935, or such earlier date."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this amendment is the language of a bill unanimously reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency, which the Senator from Virginia, I think, is prepared to accept.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the bill having been reported unanimously, as the Senator from Kentucky has stated, I feel justified in accepting the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending bill. I may say that I desire to offer the amendment not in the form in which it is printed but to offer that part of it down to and including line 4 on page 2, omitting the last two lines on the second page.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "In exceptional circumstances" and insert in lieu thereof "For the purpose of maintaining and increasing the employment of labor."

On page 2, lines 3 and 4, to strike out "for the purpose of providing it with working capital"; and in line 6, before the period, to insert a comma and the following:

"for the following purposes: To provide it with funds for working capital, for reducing and refinancing outstanding indebtedness if such refinancing is concurrent with a substantial write-down of such outstanding indebtedness, for rehabilitating and making improvements to plants, for reopening plants not in operation on the date this section takes effect, and for new buildings and new machinery."

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I will occupy but very little time on this amendment. For some reason, which probably seems best to them, the R.F.C. Board has adopted a set of rules which have made it difficult, if not impossible, for that body to provide adequate financing for industrial plants. The section of country from which I come is notoriously undercapitalized. I have examined the record of the R.F.C., and the number of loans made to industries is, I may say, regrettably small, and their amount is likewise small. I found a statement in the New York Times of April 20 in which Mr. Jones said that the R.F.C. was doing everything in its power to expend loans to industry made through community mortgage-loan companies which groups of industries form.

He said:

One hundred and fourteen loans, aggregating $11,786,250, had been authorized; but of this little had been disbursed.

Unless there be a broadening of the policy of the R.F.C., or the rules under which the Federal Reserve banks are permitted to make loans are relaxed, there is little or no hope for private industries in the West receiving loans of the character to which they seem clearly entitled and which, I believe, they must have if they are to have any real relief.

I submitted a copy of this amendment to the Senator from Virginia a short time ago, but I do not know whether he has had time to examine it.

I did not have time to read the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], which was just submitted and which was adopted, and I am not certain whether that amendment covers the ground I have attempted to cover by my amendment. If it does, I shall be very happy. I should like to have the Senator from Kentucky advise me as to that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the amendment which I suggested, and which was adopted, authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to industries where they are unable to obtain them under the provisions of the Glass bill as it was originally reported by the committee. In other words, it makes it necessary for any industry seeking direct loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for working capital or for purposes contemplated in the amendment, which is the same as the bill reported a few days ago from the committee, to show that they have made every effort to obtain credit from member banks or from the Federal Reserve banks, as provided in the bill of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and in the case of making such showing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to make direct loans to the industry.

Mr. BONE. I should like to make a further statement before I take my seat. It is an expression of opinion, but I find a great many people in public life agree with this viewpoint. I think the Government might be more helpful in this crisis if it was willing to accept a 10- or even a 20-percent loss in the case of loans made to industry in an attempt to spiral upward the industrial trend, than to refuse such loans while it is pouring out millions and hundreds of millions of dollars in C.W.A. work from which it gets no return at all. I want the relief work to continue until its necessity disappears, but I also want to see the rule relaxed either with respect to the Federal Reserve banks or the R.F.C. and have Uncle Sam take at least some little chance of getting back 75 to 100 percent of his money. Under the present set-up very little relief is given to certain industries which I think are clearly entitled to such loans.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I wish to withdraw an amendment, and to state why I do so, with the indulgence of the able Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], in charge of the bill, and the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], who has just tendered an amendment which has been adopted. I find that an amendment proposed by myself, which I was anxious to press, and which had for its object a provision that would take care of the prospective needs of the Chicago school teachers as an organization of commerce and business based on real-estate ownership, which, under the law, is allowed, has been covered by the thoughtfulness as well as the agreement of the eminent members of the committee. I wish to say that I accept the amendment as tendered, and the proposition also presented by the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Kentucky, and beg to withdraw the amendment I had proposed touching this subject on the ground that it is now unnecessary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois withdraws his amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I could wish that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] would also withdraw his amendment and let us pass this bill, in response to the very urgent appeals from all over the country. This bill embarks the Federal Reserve System upon an entirely new and experimental form of loans. Under the existing system, the discounting bank at the Federal Reserve bank has to assume 100-percent responsibility. Now we are proposing to make a different kind of loan, and we require the financial institution obtaining the accommodation directly from the Federal Reserve bank, instead of from the member bank, to assume at least 20 percent of the loss, or in lieu thereof to put up 20 percent of the fund sought. It seems to me, as it seemed to the committee unanimously, that that was a very reasonable requirement, and I hope the Senator from Washington——

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. BONE. May I invite the attention of the Senator from Virginia to the fact that I struck out the last two lines in the amendment offered by me which left in the 20-percent provision. I felt if the amendment was to be offered that that provision should be presented separately.

Mr. GLASS. I had not noted that, but the real purpose of this bill is similar to that of the Senator's amendment. It ought only to apply in exceptional circumstances. Where there is a proposed borrowing for a going industry in order to retain employment of those engaged in the industry and in order to increase employment by the expansion of industry, where they cannot get credit accomodations at current bank rates, then they may borrow directly from the Federal Reserve banks. I think the bill ought to be safeguarded in some particulars. The committee thought so too and reported the two bills unanimously. I hope they may be passed. I hope, therefore, that the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington may either be withdrawn or rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, since the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] just adopted undoubtedly withdraws from the Senate all immediate opportunity to consider use of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation facilities for the further and extended advantage of the American people, I have no alternative but to offer at this point an amendment which I contemplated offering to the second bill which the Senator from Kentucky has attached to the Glass bill as an amendment. None of us knew until 10 minutes ago that this second bill would be disposed of in this quick fashion, and in this summary way this afternoon.

It seems to me it would be exceedingly unfortunate if this session of Congress were to be concluded without effective additional consideration of legitimate-depositor relief in respect to closed banks. I am not talking about the so-called "McLeod bill" which remains in the House, because it seems probable that this bill may not reach the Senate at this session.

I am talking about some such measure as that which was submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] a few days ago, and I am talking about the proposal with reference to which I have been in consultation with the Treasury and officers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation during the last week. Unfortunately, the matter now comes to an issue here in the Senate before I can have conclusive reports from the Treasury and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and I have no alternative except to offer, in cooperation with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], and in our joint behalf the amendment which I now tender. I submit a proposal which will release heavy additional liquidating dividends to depositors, and yet it will not risk the public credit in respect to prospective loss.

The amendment is a very simple matter. It proceeds upon the theory that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should be directed to lend to receivers of banks and kindred liquidating offices the full appraisal value of the assets which are held by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation behind those loans. It proceeds upon the theory that the Government has not discharged its full obligation to the bank depositors of this country until it has exhausted every rational recourse to recoup these depositors who trusted these banks and the Government's persistent warrant as to their solvency. It asks recognition for these depositors' rights.

At the present time the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is lending only from 60 to 75 percent of the values in this collateral behind these bank liquidation loans. The appraisals were made in the main a year ago. They should be remade. The appraisals are utterly conservative. The margin of safety is wider than necessary and the rates of interest on these loans are indefensively high. The margin of safety which would be left even if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation were directed to make loans at the rate of 100 percent of the liquidating value of the assets behind the loans as I suggest would still be ample. The margin of safety would be covered by the prospective recovery values of the future plus the stockholders' liability and plus the judgment of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in respect to the appraisals. We owe the bank depositors of the country this minimum consideration at the very least. This is not a radical plan. It is absolutely sound. It is just. It is the discharge of a public obligation. It is currency expansion of the most direct and practical sort.

Mr. President, I am offering the amendment in behalf of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] and myself. I send the amendment to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add a new section to the bill, as follows:

That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act is hereby amended by adding at the end of paragraph 1 of section 5 the following sentence:

"Notwithstanding any other provisions of law with respect to all loans as aforesaid to receivers or liquidating agents for banks and savings banks that are closed or in process of liquidation, the Corporation shall loan 100 percent of the fair estimated liquidating value of the assets tendered as security for such loans, and shall charge interest thereon at a rate not to exceed 3 percent per annum."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I merely want to say that this is a proposal which the Committee on Banking and Currency has had no opportunity to consider. No one knows what the effect would be on the Treasury or upon the funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; and certainly it ought not to be adopted.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I did not hear the Senator object to the consideration of the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] to the Securities Act on the theory that the committee had not had an opportunity to consider it.

Mr. BARKLEY. That would not have been true if I had made that observation, because the committee did consider it very carefully and in detail.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The committee also has had depositor-relief legislation before it for 3 months and has given it no consideration. There is not much time left. We cannot wait indefinitely for committee action. Depositors themselves already have waited too long. They deserve at least the fullest possible and immediate use of the maximum value of the assets which represent their deposits. If we wait for the committee, I fear we shall wait in vain..

Mr. BARKLEY. We have given consideration to urgent legislation through conferences with the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board and the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. For many weeks there has been pending in the other body of the Congress a bill, introduced by a Member of that body from the Senator's State, which has received wide publicity. No action has been taken upon it. Certainly it is not quite in keeping with the proper deliberation of matters of legislation of this kind to bring an amendment before the Senate which has never been considered by the committee or reported on by any official of the Treasury or other department of the Government and which requires a 100-percent loan upon the assets of closed banks. I think the amendment certainly ought to be rejected.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Would the Senator object to taking the amendment to conference for consideration with those officials?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I object to it's being adopted for any purpose. I do not think it ought to be adopted without the effect of it being known.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator understands he has misstated, though I am sure inadventently, the purport of the amendment. It is not a 100-percent loan against the assets of the closed banks. It is a 100-percent loan against the Reconstruction Finance Corporation's own appraisal of what the assets may be worth. Could this challenge in behalf of bank depositors be reduced to more modest terms?

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not intimate it was 100 percent of the face value of the assets.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, one who has had any experience in connection with the reopening of closed banks, as many Senators have had, must realize that the hard and fast rules which prevail in realizing on assets of closed banks have interfered seriously with the reopening of the banks and the restoration of business. What I have in mind is the experience I have had many times during the past year in my State where those of us who have been familiar with the locality and with the individuals who have made loans in the banks and with the assets back of them, have been convinced that in many instances those assets in the long run are worth 100 cents on the dollar. They have not been so treated by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or by the Treasury.

I believe that the wording of the amendment, which was prepared by the Senator from Michigan who has courteously included my name in the authorship, is a perfectly safe one. It provides merely that "the corporation shall loan 100 percent of the fair estimated liquidating value of the assets tendered as security." It is not proposed to take "cats and dogs" and lend money on them. It is simply a question of taking assets which in all human probability are worth 100 cents on the dollar, but which have not been so treated by the operation of the laws as applied in the past.

I think the committee might well consider taking the amendment to conference, because it is in the interest of humanity, in the interest of the stockholders of the banks, in the interest of the various communities which have suffered because of a deprivation of banking facilities. I hope the committee may be willing to take the matter to conference to see if some plan cannot be worked out to give the protection in the direction indicated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I think I may say for the chairman of the committee—who perhaps is too tired to say anything for himself, after the arduous duties that have been imposed upon him—that the Committee on Banking and Currency is perfectly willing to consider this matter, but it is not willing to have too much legislation go to the conferees.

As a matter of fact, if the distinguished Senator from Michigan will examine the existing Bank Act of 1933, he will see that we there authorized primarily the Insurance of Deposits Corporation to loan money to buy the assets and to wind up and liquidate the business of closed banks. They have already acquired a fund of something over $300,000,000 for that purpose; and if there is any urgent reason for doing anything of the kind, that Corporation, organized 6 months ago, could give it attention. I do not think we ought to embark upon a proposition of this kind, about which the committee has not heard anything whatever. It has not had a report from the Treasury, from the Comptroller of the Currency, or from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, having charge of these matters.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The trouble in the application of the law as it is at present has been that in the consideration of the assets of the bank, consideration has been given to the immediate value, the immediate liquidity of those assets. Here it is proposed that consideration shall be given to the possible value of the assets over a reasonable length of time. It is all left to the administrative officers of the Government.

Mr. GLASS. No; I will say to the Senator that under the existing law the transactions are not confined to the immediate assets of the banks, but the matter is left to the determination of the Insurance Corporation Board.

Mr. COPELAND. But, as a matter of fact, I may say to my friend, the only consideration that has been given, in the experience I have had with half a dozen banks in my State, is to the immediate value of the assets.

Mr. GLASS. That may be so in regard to a half dozen banks; but we ought not to pass legislation of this grave importance without knowing exactly what we are doing.

I hope very much the amendment will not be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I understand that there has been presented by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] an amendment which attaches to this bill, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation loan bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; that is true.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have an amendment which I wish to present to that bill. I did not intend to attach to the bill of the Senator from Virginia an amendment of any kind or character; but, inasmuch as this short cut to legislation is taken—of which I do not at all complain—I wish to present an amendment which I have just been advised is appropriate to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation loan bill.

Mr. GLASS. I will say to the Senator from California that there was no short cut here.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am not complaining of it.

Mr. GLASS. Both of these measures—the bill bearing my name and the amendment presented by the Senator from Kentucky—were carefully considered for days by the Banking and Currency Committee, and both of them were unanimously approved.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am not complaining of the mode of legislation; but I did not assume that to the bill of the Senator from Virginia the bill relating to the loans of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, a separate measure entirely, would be attached. That is the matter to which I referred.

Mr. GLASS. I may say to the distinguished Senator that it was attached only because it is supplemental to the bill presented by me. I may say to the Senator also that two other bills involving amendments to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act will be presented at an early day, perhaps early next week, from the Banking and Currency Committee; and the Senator then will have an opportunity to propose his amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. No; the amendment I desire to submit is an amendment that is appropriate to the bill which relates to loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It has been considered by a subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee, and on one occasion I appeared before the subcommittee—I am saying this in explanation to the Senator from Virginia—but the subcommittee has not yet acted concerning it because of the limitations of time, as I understand. It is a bill which is of extraordinary importance to the particular locality from which I come and of importance as well to other sections.

Mr. President, I offer as an amendment to the bill—I assume it must be so offered, although properly it is an amendment alone to the amendment which has been, as I understand, presented by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from California that his amendment is on a different subject and does not have to be offered as an amendment to the amendment which I have offered, and which has been agreed to. It can be offered as a separate section if the Senator so desires. It need not be attached to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In order to offer an amendment to the so-called "Barkley amendment", it will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from California can offer his amendment as a separate proposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He can.

Mr. BARKLEY. It has no relationship to the kind of loans referred to in the amendment offered by me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California can offer his amendment now as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. He can offer it as section 7 of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I do not care how the amendment may be offered so long as it may be offered and may be considered by the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. My point is that it is unnecessary to reconsider the vote by which my amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from California can offer his amendment independently.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is quite so; but it is an appropriate part of the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky. I did not think it was so appropriate to the bill of the Senator from Virginia, so I have not at any time thought of offering it as an amendment to his bill.

Mr. President, I may have been utterly in error. If so, I apologize to those who are here. When I left the Chamber for a very brief period I was laboring under the delusion that the bill of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] was to be put before the Senate, and that it would with very little debate, probably, be passed. I had no interest in that bill save to see that it was passed, and to aid as well as I could in that regard. I had not the slightest conception that the bill relating to loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was to be made a part of the bill of the Senator from Virginia. I do not deny the right of anybody to make it a part, but I had no conception that it was to be a part, and supposed that when the bill was called upon the calendar regularly I should have an opportunity to present this amendment. Indeed, when the calendar was called the other day, and the Senator from Florida asked that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill be taken up, I announced the fact that an amendment would be offered to that bill, and that it was my desire to be heard upon the amendment, and to have the amendment passed upon by the Senate.

Now, as the Senator from Kentucky had a right to do, at a time when there was no warning at all of the fact that the bill was coming up today, he presented the bill as an amendment to the bill of the Senator from Virginia. That is what makes the situation perplexing, and causes the peculiar circumstance in which I find myself.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I have no recollection of knowing that the Senator had taken that course, except that today I was told that the Senator had offered an amendment the other day.

When this bill was reported out of the Committee on Banking and Currency I stated that it was my purpose to offer it as an amendment to the Glass bill, because they are companion measures. They supplement each other. There is no complexity here. The Senator has a right to offer his amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; I shall do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no trouble about the Senator's offering the amendment. I will say that my action in offering my amendment was not based upon any desire at all to cut off the Senator. I though it was the best method of legislating. I thought originally that these two bills—the original Glass bill and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill—ought to be combined. They were combined when first introduced. Then it became necessary to consider the Reconstruction Finance Corporation prong of the matter a little more deliberately than the other. So the committee voted out the Glass bill first, and this bill second; and what I have done here is again to join them together as they were joined when first introduced by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair). The Senator from California offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert in the bill at the proper place, as a new section, the following:

That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to make loans, for periods not exceeding 20 years, to finance the acquisition of any system, plant, or works for the production, transmission, or distribution of electrical energy by such public corporations, bodies, or instrumentalities as are referred to in section 201 (a) (1) of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932 which enter into contracts with the United States or any department, agency, or instrumentality thereof for the purchase of electrical energy, or for the use of any property, rights, or facilities employed in the production, transmission, or distribution of electrical energy. No loan shall be made except with the approval of the department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States with which such contract is entered into. The provisions of title II of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, as amended, and of acts supplementary thereto, applicable to loans to such public corporations, bodies, or instrumentalities, so far as consistent with the terms hereof, shall apply to loans made under the terms of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I ask if the amendment cannot be accepted. In order to save time, so that I shall not be bothersome on a bill which I should like to see passed, I ask whether it is not possible for the Senator from Kentucky to accept my amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that, as he suggested awhile ago, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY]——

Mr. JOHNSON. This is not the amendment of my colleague [Mr. MCADOO].

Mr. BULKLEY. I was misinformed.

Mr. JOHNSON. This is not the same amendment at all.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. GLASS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California has the floor. Does he yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	Johnson	Patterson
Ashurst	Couzens	Kean	Pope
Austin	Dill	Keyes	Reynolds
Bachman	Duffy	King	Robinson, Ark.
Bailey	Erickson	La Follette	Schall

Connally	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Coolidge	Hebert	Overton	Wheeler

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to announce the absence of the Senators whose names I have heretofore given, and the reasons for their absence as heretofore stated, to which I add the name of my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH], called to his State on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I have for a very brief period the attention of the Senate to this amendment, first apologizing for taking up the time of the Senate with respect to it, and stating that, so far as I am concerned, it is now before the Senate by reason of the facts which I detailed before the quorum call was made.

This little amendment authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—

To make loans for the production, transmission, or distribution of electrical energy by such public corporations, bodies, or instrumentalities as are referred to in section 201 (a) (1) of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932 which enter into contracts with the United States through any department, agency, or instrumentality thereof for the purchase of electricity—

And so forth.

The amendment is safeguarded by every provision which now attaches to loans which are made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

It is, let me first emphasize, a mere authorization to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It is not mandatory, but it confers on the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the right, only if it sees fit, to grant the loans which are asked. It provides that such loans may be made to those public agencies which are today really customers of the United States, and, being customers of the United States, it asks that loans may thus be made to enable them to acquire the plants or works of another corporation.

Concretely, I may be able to make plain just the reason for this measure. The bureau of water and power of the city of Los Angeles is a public utility owned by the municipality. It furnishes to the people of the city of Los Angeles water and power, and has been a very successful institution. It is now something over 20 years old. It has grown with the years, and grown with the city, and grown with the territory until it is today a very remarkable instance of a publicly owned, municipally operated public utility, furnishing water, light, and power to the citizens of that great community.

The Boulder Dam, as Senators will recall, is a structure now in process of completion under the aegis of the Government of the United States. The act which created the Boulder Dam project required that before there could be any expenditure on the part of the United States Government, the Government had to have firm contracts for the sale of its electrical power, which would ultimately pay every dollar which might be expended by the Government of the United States on that great undertaking at Boulder Dam. It is one of the projects which are being paid for and will be paid for out of the electricity and water generated by the project itself.

The chief contracting party with the Government of the United States for power delivered and generated at Boulder Dam is the bureau of water and power of the city of Los Angeles. So that the public agency which now furnishes water and power to the city of Los Angeles is in this peculiar relationship, as well, with the Government of the United States in being the United States Government's chief customer for the power generated at Boulder Dam.

It happens that in the city of Los Angeles there are private power companies as well as this publicly operated institution. One of the private power companies is situated in one of the parts of the city of Los Angeles, and it parallels the lines of the publicly owned utility, so that a portion of the city of Los Angeles, 60 percent in reality, is served with electricity by the bureau of water and power and the other portion, 40 percent, by a privately owned utility.

Necessarily, in the first place, this situation is uneconomic. Necessarily, in the second place, it leads to controversy and difficulty. There has been constant bickering between the privately owned power company and that which is operated by the municipality, the publicly owned power company.

Recently the two have come together, so that the city may acquire, if it be possible, the privately owned company. Thus the controversies which have existed in the past will be eliminated; uneconomic methods of furnishing the people of that particular territory with electric power will be done away with as well; and the city, with its bureau of water and power, may do all the business that is required to be done in that whole territory.

It happens, of course, that in these days the bonds of the bureau of water and power cannot be sold with profit, and, I imagine, can hardly be sold at all. It is in most excellent financial shape. No one questions its solvency in the slightest degree; if it shall do what it desires to do, and what the privately owned utility wishes to do, it is essential that it obtain the money to make the trade which the private utility and the public utility are ready to make at this time and thus aid all parties and have an economically sound arrangement in that particular part of the city of Los Angeles.

That, concretely, is one thing which it is desired shall be done by this bill.

Is there any logical reason on the face of the earth why the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should not make a loan that is perfectly safe and sound, the making of which is left wholly in its discretion, under circumstances such as I have detailed? I fail to see that there can be any objection logically, legally, from any standpoint of any kind or of any character at all, to the making of such a loan.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I should like to have a statement from the Senator from Califorpia as to what reason now exists if the security is good—as perhaps it is—why the Reconstruction Finance Corporation cannot now—under the present law—make such loans. I understand they have made similar loans in the past.

Mr. JOHNSON. No; I understand they have no power to make such loans. It is the assertion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that they have no power to make them. That is the reason for this proposed legislation.

Mr. LEWIS. It is the theory that they have no power; and is this amendment to give power where under the old law it does not now exist?

Mr. JOHNSON. The R.F.C. says the power does not exist. That is their assertion; and, necessarily, we have to bow to that assertion. I am endeavoring to remedy what thus they say exists.

It is not alone this particular territory that is interested. Since the bill has been pending I received a letter from Mr. Lilienthal, of the T.V.A. That is the Tennessee Valley Administration; is it not?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; it is conducting the Muscle Shoals project. I was surprised to find from his letter that he was interested in the bill, although I did not know it when the bill was introduced, and he is very anxious for it to pass. I think other localities are interested in it as well.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. As a matter of equity and of justice to all sections of the country, what is the justification for the framing of a law which will allow Los Angeles, or any other community that happens to have a contract with some governmental agency, to borrow money for the purpose of constructing a public-utility plant and deny to the people of every city which may want to construct a public-utility plant the right to borrow money from the R.F.C. for that purpose? Why does the existence of a contract with the Government or some agency of the Government give such a community a sacred right to borrow money from the Government while it is denied to all other communities which might, regardless of any contract, wish to embark upon the construction of public-utility plants?

Mr. JOHNSON. That is a perfectly legitimate question, I grant. The Senator is quite right. There is no sacred right in that; but it does make the situation a little clearer and a little better, and it does curtail to a minimum the loans which may be made. It is quite true, as well, that a particular corporation or a particular entity which stands in a relationship to the United States Government, and is contracting with it, may have a little better reason for a loan to be made to it than some other.

Let the measure be broadened if the Senator desires. I am not objecting to broadening it. I have limited it just as much as I could in order to meet and relieve every objection that may be made.

When the bill was first presented someone said, "It will take so much money to do this; and there is not any reason why the Government, in a case where it is not interested, should do a thing of this sort." That is the reason why the qualifying clauses will be found in the bill—first, because they answer the objection that it will take too much money; and, second, they answer the objection that the Government is not interested, because the Government is interested today in the contracts that it has made with any agency, for power or otherwise.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I see no limitation in the amendment as to any amount of loan that may be made, if one should be made. To what did the Senator refer when he said he had hedged the amendment about with limitations?

Mr. JOHNSON. The latter limitation which the Senator spoke of as a sacred right; the limitation that it was dealing with the United States Government in a contractual relationship.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, the situation is that the Government has provided the money for the construction, we will say, of Boulder Dam, which in turn is to furnish power to the city of Los Angeles?

Mr. JOHNSON. Oh, no; not that alone.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course it has a good many other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON. It has a good many other purposes—power and other things.

Mr. BARKLEY. What the Senator is really asking is that the Government also loan the city of Los Angeles the money which will enable it to take advantage of the facilities the Government is building at Boulder Dam?

Mr. JOHNSON. I am asking no such thing, and the amendment admits of no such construction. I am asking that the Government be permitted to make loans of the character indicated in the amendment; and in order that Senators might understand the situation exactly I put forward the concrete example in which I am deeply interested.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, I appreciate that; but, as a matter of fact, if the Government were not building the dam at Boulder Canyon there would be no occasion for the legislation which the Senator is seeking, because it would not apply.

Mr. JOHNSON. There might be no occasion for the legislation with respect to the city to which I have referred, but there might be occasion for it with relation to projects in the Northwest, in relation to the T.V.A., and the like.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. That still bears out my suggestion that the ultimate object is to allow communities to borrow money in order to take advantage of the facilities which the Government is erecting in the sections where those communities are located.

Mr. JOHNSON. Not a bit of it. The purpose is not to enable them to take advantage of the facilities which the Government has erected. I state that as an incident of the relationship which exists, in order that there may be a stronger case in behalf of the particular recipient of the loan; not upon the theory which the Senator suggests at all.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I will say to the able Senator from California that in behalf of my own constituency I have before the R.F.C. a proposition very similar to that suggested by the Senator; and I ask the Senator, upon what theory does he assume that the board as at present constituted can say that it has no power, even though the security be good, to grant relief to the institution to which he has referred, and a similar one that I am representing, in the face of the wording of section 201 (a) (1) of the act with regard to the power of the R.F.C. "to aid in financing projects authorized under Federal, State, or municipal law which are self-liquidating in character"? Why is not the enterprise of which he speaks one which has been organized under the State or city, and "self-liquidating in character"?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the reason is because the R.F.C. says that it cannot loan under those circumstances. The logic of the contention I will not discuss with the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. Despite this section?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes. The logic I will not discuss. There might be 152 reasons why the loan ought to be made; but the group of men who determine the fact give one reason why it should not be made, and that is that they will not make it under the law; and that ends it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. BONE obtained the floor.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. First speaking to the question of procedure, I will say that I had no knowledge whatsoever of this proposed amendment. So far as I know, it has never been discussed in the general Banking and Currency Committee. It may have been discussed in some subcommittee thereof, but I do not recall that the matter has been reported to the general committee. Therefore, no discourtesy whatsoever was ever intended toward the Senator from California in not apprising him of the fact that the Barkley bill, which is purely supplemental to the so-called "Glass bill", was to be presented as an amendment to the Glass bill.

As a matter of fact, nothing whatsoever may be done under the provisions of the Barkley bill until first every effort to obtain credit is exhausted under the Glass bill. Therefore, the two bills having been unanimously reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency after full consideration, I very readily accepted the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky to my bill.

In the second place, it always genuinely distresses me to have to appear in opposition to anything which the Senator from California proposes. I imagine, however, the Senator has learned, as other colleagues of mine have learned, that I am fundamentally opposed to the Government of the United States constituting itself a central bank to be loaning money to every sort of enterprise which may be conceived of.

I was opposed to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill, and warned the Senate that I was only going along with it because I did not care to be classified among those who were unwilling to cooperate with the then President of the United States in rescuing us from the emergency; but it is a well-known fact that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was intended to be, and was at every stage of the procedure represented to be, purely an emergency organization. This is not an emergency proposition. It does not involve the employment of anybody who is not now employed. It is a mere community loan to one of the greatest cities in this country which, in common with other cities, has the taxing power. If it wants to engage in facilities of this sort, it ought not to come to the Federal Treasury to borrow money; it ought to tax its own people.

I advert to the objection raised by the Senator from Kentucky. I think the bill constitutes a privileged class, making Government loans only to people who have been fortunate enough to enter into a contract with the Government. I think the fact that they have been enabled to enter into a contract ought to give them complete satisfaction without wanting, in addition to that, to come here and take the taxpayers' money. I do not think government was instituted to tax all the people and take their money and loan it to special enterprises. I do not think that was ever the conception of government on the American Continent, and I do not think it ought to be.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was erected as an emergency measure, to give employment to people, to help get us out of the depression, and its loans were limited to a period of 10 years. Now it is here proposed to permit them to make a peculiar sort of loan for a period of 20 years.

Mr. President, it is not particularly apposite, but I wish again to express the view that we have made mendicants of 48 States of this Union and of nearly every community in every State of the Union. We have practically by statute extended engraved invitations to people to rush here to Washington and to borrow money through the Federal Treasury—the taxpayers' money, for that is the only sort of money the Federal Treasury has or ought ever to have.

We do not even know, unless the distinguished Senator from California may assure us, whether the Reconstruction Finance Corporation wants this additional power. We have had no report from them; we do not know what that Corporation may say as to the soundness of the proposition.

I am perfectly willing to assure the Senator from California, so far as I am individually concerned, and I can assure him for the committee, that we shall be glad to take the bill up in committee and have the members of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation come before us and let us have their view of this matter, and to report the bill back, either favorably or adversely, so that the Senator may have ample opportunity to present it and have it passed, if the Senate wishes to pass it; but I very earnestly wish that the Senator would not offer the bill as an amendment to my pending bill.

We do not even know, we have had no intimation in the world, at least, I have not, that the proposition would meet with Executive approval. Suppose it should not, then the whole bill would go down, and many hundreds, if not thousands, of industries of this country now seeking aid through banking agencies and procedure would be denied these loans. Therefore, I very regretfully decline to accept the amendment presented by the Senator from California, and I hope the Senate may take that view.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I can only express regret that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] entertains any objection to annexing Senate bill 3246 by Mr. JOHNSON, to the pending bill, although I can understand his attitude as a matter of parliamentary procedure, and I take it that he is opposed fundamentally to the purpose that underlies this bill. I cannot, however, quite bring myself to agree with him that the United States Government has made mendicants of 48 States.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, there may be one or two exceptions, but I do not remember them.

Mr. BONE. My reason for saying that is that the people of the States were made mendicants long before the United States Government, through its Congress, tendered any financial relief to them. They were the victims of conditions over which they had no control. They turned to the only agency they knew and to which they could turn, with any assurance of getting relief, and that agency was the Government.

I am as painfully aware of the implications of this type of legislation as is the Senator from Virginia; I think I understand his philosophy and his attitude toward proposals such as this; but in a great crisis such as confronted the people of this country they were made to realize nationally that economic necessity knows no law except the law of self-preservation.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator wherein consists any crisis? As the Senator from California presented his views on this bill, what is the crisis?

Mr. BONE. I had not intended to expand my remarks and make a speech about the financial crisis that attracts the attention of everyone. This bill is, however, a part and parcel of the whole program of reconstruction. We are not beginning this program; we are in the midst of it. If I may briefly refer to the policy of the Government as adopted in recent years, I want to try to show, if I can, why it is now necessary to have this sort of legislation, because of the fact that the Government has deliberately adopted certain policies with respect to the creation of great hydroelectric developments in this country.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BONE. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. In that connection it ought to be said they were not necessarily emergency propositions; they were not brought forward to meet a particular emergency. It might be said that the Muscle Shoals law was hastened by conditions and probably some consideration was given to the question of unemployment in its passage at the last session of Congress, but many of us had been seeking that legislation for years, ever since the war, and we were seeking it even in the most prosperous times of 1928 and 1929. The Boulder Dam was not constructed as an emergency measure, but as a permanent improvement.

I wish to say that I do not know whether I would be against this proposal or not if the committee and the interested Government agencies were permitted to confer about it. I might be for the Senator's bill; I certainly am sympathetic to almost anything he proposes; but to add an amendment here under the guise of an emergency because of a permanent improvement that Congress provided for long before the depression, or certainly not because of the depression, is to me a little bit unfair to the Senate. We do not know whether we are going up a blind alley in this instance.

I join with the Senator from Virginia, so far as I am concerned, in giving assurance that we will be glad to consider this subject independently. I do not think the committee is guilty of any negligence in not having considered it heretofore. The committee has been overworked for many weeks and months, but we do now begin to see a little daylight, and I wish that we might consider this question independently. It might be that after the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and other Government agencies came down and conferred about it there might not be any opposition, but none of us now knows anything about just what we are doing here.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the able Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with reference to the attitude of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation toward the statute which was enacted by the Congress conferring upon it certain powers and, I think along with them, duties, I want to read the law under which that agency of the Government operates in the field we are now discussing. It is section 201 (a) and reads:

> The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered—
> (1) to make loans to, or contracts with, States, municipalities, and political subdivisions of States, public agencies of States, of municipalities, and of political subdivisions of States, public corporations, boards and commissions, and public municipal instrumentalities of one or more States, to aid in financing projects authorized under Federal, State, or municipal law which are self-liquidating in character, such loans or contracts to be made through the purchase of their securities, or otherwise, and for such purpose the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to bid for such securities: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in carrying out the provisions of this paragraph, from purchasing securities having a maturity of more than 10 years.

That might mean from 10 years to infinity. Frankly I am at a loss to understand upon what sort of legal authority or advice the Reconstruction Finance Corporation acts when it says that a loan of the character authorized by the amendment of the Senator from California may not be made, and refuses to make loans to municipalities of the character described in his amendment. The statute I have read seems to clearly authorize such loans.

Sometimes when I see that sort of an attitude taken, and a set of regulations issued based on what seems to be a misconception of the plain provisions of the law, I am reminded of Bassanio, in the Merchant of Venice, where he said:

> His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in 2 bushels of chaff. You shall seek all day ere you find them, and when you have them they are not worth the search.

I am reminded of that rather pungent statement of Shakespeare's character when I see the effect of the legal advice given to some of the departments by lawyers connected with them.

Getting down to the fundamental thing that underlies this matter, I would not presume to rise and write into the RECORD what I am about to say unless I had in mind a picture of what the future is going to offer concerning the legislation that has been passed by this body and the body at the other end of the Capitol. By authority of acts of Congress the United States Government is now beginning to build a great power plant in the State of Washington, a tremendous enterprise. On the Columbia River, farther down toward the city of Portland, another great publicly owned plant is under construction, known as the "Bonneville plant." A plant capable of developing over 600,000 horsepower of electric energy is to be developed there. These plants may ultimately develop in the neighborhood of 2,000,000 horsepower when fully completed. There is to be a market developed for that power somehow somewhere. Is that market to be a public market or a private market? I presume to say what I am saying now because I want to write my own convictions into cold type before that thing happens which I fear may happen unless proper steps are taken.

The United States Government is either going to sell that power through publicly owned agencies or it is going to be compelled to distribute it through privately owned agencies. Let me say to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] that if there is a repetition of the Muscle Shoals fiasco, a thing which I think reflected discredit on the country—the sale of huge blocks of power to the Alabama Power Co. and its affiliates for as low as 2 mills per kilowatt-hour, afterward redistributed and supplied to customers at rates as high as 12, 14, and 16 cents per kilowatt-hour, 50 or 60 or 70 times what the company paid the United States Government for the power—if there be in my section of the country a repetition of that scandal, then every man in Congress from that section of the United States will have to tell the people sometime why he did not protest against private exploitation of his Government.

How is the Government going to handle that problem? It must be in just one of two ways, either through publicly owned distribution systems or through private power systems. If we build these great plants out there only to distribute the current through privately owned power companies, then we have made more laws here that will serve only to enrich private power companies. There is not a man in the Senate who can prove otherwise. I say to all the Members of this body that if we put more handcuffs on the wrists of the Government, then there will follow the only remaining method of distributing the power, which is through private agencies. In such case the profit, instead of being reflected in cheap rates and cheap power for the people, will be reflected in dividends and enormous salaries to the people operating and owning private power systems.

The purpose of the bill of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is to enable cities and other public agencies to borrow the money to enable them to take over certain distribution systems now privately owned. There was a complaint registered in the State of New York recently in a power controversy that raged there, in which it was asserted that the bill presented and offered did not require a municipality, when it went into the power business, to acquire the existing privately owned systems. That was one of the arguments made against the bill. There is nothing in the pending amendment that raises that question. There is a calm invitation here in the legislation itself for the city to acquire the existing facilities and to pay for them.

I say to my friends in this body if there is any type of business on earth that is self-liquidating it is the electric-power business. I know. I have seen my own city indulge in that business for 40 years. I saw it build a fine hydroelectric plant which cost $2,000,000, and in 12 years, out of the earnings of that plant, in addition to giving us the cheapest light and power in the country, pay off and retire every dollar of the bonded debt representing the cost of the plant. I saw a thing as remarkable in the world of finance as was the financial wizardry of Aladdin's lamp. And yet that venture rested on the solid rock of financial soundness in every particular.

Today my city will give to the householder in that city for $4 an amount of electric energy for which the Westchester Electric Co., in the State of New York, privately owned, charges $20, or five times as much. My city has made as much as almost a million dollars net profit in 1 year on that beautiful publicly owned system, giving its people at the same time the cheapest light and power in this country and paying the prevailing standard of union wages.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. BONE. Certainly.

Mr. GLASS. That is what every community ought to do which wants to build an electric plant. It ought to tax its own people and not the people of some other State.

Mr. BONE. I agree with the Senator, but I think he perhaps misunderstands the purpose behind this amendment. It is not proposed to tax anyone. The building of the Tacoma plant, which is a publicly owned power development, did not make it necessary to tax the people. This plant retired its bonded or funded debt from earnings. In the pending amendment, it is proposed that public bodies be permitted to borrow money from the Government and to pay that money back; not to make the taxpayers of the United States pay the bill.

But unfortunately some of the legislation which has passed the Congress of the United States has not provided for loaning money but has given it away to wealthy private corporations; millions and millions; aye, billions of dollars. We enacted laws under which men came to Washington and bought billions of dollars' worth of Government property for as low as 1½ cents on the dollar.

I recall the so-called "sale" of fine steamships which cost $2,250,000, for $30,000. Who pays for that? The lash is laid on the back of every taxpayer in the country to pay the difference between the cost and the sale price, and that lash will continue for years to be laid on his back because we have enacted that kind of legislation.

We are not satisfied even with that. We wrote and enacted another law under which the company that bought that steamship for one seventieth of its cost could get $24,000 for carrying a letter across the ocean—one trip, one letter, $24,000—which almost paid for a beautiful Government steamer which cost the taxpayers $2,250,000. That cost is reflected in the Government's bonds now outstanding and which generations to come must pay.

But to return to the amendment before us. Mr. President, if there is any agency on earth that is a self-liquidating agency, it is the power business. I want to say to the Members of the Senate that there is no business on earth that hires so few men for the amount of money invested. One can walk into a great modern hydroelectric plant, as I have done time after time, where fifty, seventy-five thousand horsepower of energy is being unleashed and sent out over the wires, and what does he find? One or two or three men walking around the plant, dressed as well as any Member of the Senate. The plant is automatic. If anything goes wrong with it, the plant automatically shuts off. When the cause of the shut-down is corrected, the plant automatically goes on. Fifty—seventy-five thousand horsepower is controlled there by a tiny little device locked up in a little iron box. Such are the marvels of science.

From the States of the Northwest there come many Members of this body representing States that are tied in with these great power developments. The municipalities of those States want the cheap power that will be so generously produced at Bonneville and Grand Coulee and at other places. I have a list of many of the public generating plants out in the West shown on a map prepared by Mr. Scattergood, chief engineer of the Los Angeles Light & Power System, showing the great proposed electrical intertie along the Pacific coast that will turn out millions and millions of horsepower of electric energy. The time is coming when these Western cities will want to buy their distributing systems, and there is no reason why they should not be permitted to come to the Government and borrow the money to acquire these systems. The loans are certainly legitimate and safe. I quite thoroughly agree with the Senator from California that the bond market is such that it is almost an impossibility at present for a city to borrow money; and Senate bill 3246, introduced by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], permits the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to cities that desire to acquire their own distribution systems in cases where they intend to purchase power from Government power plants. If it is wrong for a city to distribute power, it is wrong for the United States Government to manufacture power. The Government should make it possible for Western cities to utilize its own product. That is the purpose of this amendment.

The time we are to be here is passing rapidly, and I know that some relief should be given. I want every city in the Northwest to have the right to enjoy the same privileges we now accord private corporations.

It is almost like loaning money to the United States Government to loan it to a city to acquire its own power system. No better or safer security exists in our economic system. Private companies have moved heaven and earth to prevent cities from going into the power business. They have not hesitated to debauch institutions of learning and to come down here and even use the Smithsonian Institution as a foil for the celebrated Wyer attack on Ontario. They have not hesitated to corrupt men in public life all over the country in their efforts to throttle public ownership. That is one field where we need have no fear about the financial solvency of a plant. Public ownership of power is profitable.

We shall have to meet this question, and I do not want the time to come when the people of my State can point to a great governmental agency that is turning the power produced by the Government into power lines to be distributed and sold by private power companies for private profit. If that time comes we shall confront a thing that in itself is a disgrace—the money of the people of the United States being used to build a great social instrumentality only to enrich the Power Trust, and not to bring cheap electric energy into the homes of the people.

God forbid that that time shall come! I want to write my protest into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I intend to write it later if there is any effort out in my part of the country to pervert the functions of those great plants so that they shall be instruments to enrich private power companies.

We have too long utilized governmental agencies to enrich private concerns, instead of making these agencies serve the people.

I know that I can make no such contribution, nor even a fragment of the great contribution, made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] in his battles in the power fields; but out in my part of the country the Government is now going into the power business on a greater scale than even in this great thing which was the dream and the vision of the Senator from Nebraska, the Muscle Shoals plant. I do not want to see the great electrical giants out there harnessed for the benefit of the Electric Bond & Share Corporation and the Stone & Webster power monopoly of Boston; and I may add that I do not intend to see it so long as I can register an effective protest in this body. I trust we shall adopt the amendment of the Senator from California. I want to see it written into law, because the Government ought to give aid, as far as it can with no loss to itself, to cities so that they may take advantage of these great agencies that we are now building with public money.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, when I moved the consideration of this bill, I had not understood that the question of loans for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was to be raised. It was my understanding then that the bill of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] would be disposed of probably in 5 or 10 minutes. The discussion has been prolonged, however, and the statement is made that it will be continued.

For this reason, and for the further reason that there is scarcely a quorum of Senators present, and it would be difficult to obtain a quorum, I shall presently move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, and that it then take a recess until Monday.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, on behalf of the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and myself, I offer an amendment to the pending measure, the Glass bill. This amendment is to be an additional section. I ask that the amendment be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table, so that it may be brought up on Monday.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from New York would indicate, so that there will be no misunderstanding about the matter and everyone will be on notice, that the amendment he has offered is the amendment which has been offered in the House with respect to broadening the powers of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation for the purpose of the further liquidation of bank deposits and the relief of bank depositors.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will lie on the table and be printed, and also will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. COPELAND's amendment is to add to the pending bill as an additional section the following:

That section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act is amended—

(1) by striking out the word "three" in subsection (o) and inserting in lieu thereof the word "five";

(2) by adding after subsection (y) a new subsection to read as follows:

"(z) The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is hereby authorized and directed to purchase, or to make a loan on, the assets of any bank, savings bank, or trust company or any part of such assets, upon such terms and conditions as the Corporation may, by regulations, prescribe. The Corporation is further authorized and directed, in case the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has made a loan to any such closed bank, to negotiate with the liquidating agent or receiver of such bank for an appraisal of its assets and the purchase thereof or the making of a loan thereon to take up the loan or any part thereof made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, if the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation deems it desirable in the public interest and the loan will be reasonably secured. In making any purchase of or loan on assets of any closed bank, the Corporation shall appraise such assets at such value as they would be appraised under normal business conditions and in anticipation of an orderly liquidation over a period of years, rather than on the basis of forced-selling values in a period of business depression. The Corporation is authorized and empowered to sell any assets acquired under this subsection and shall, with respect to such selling and to the liquidation of assets of closed banks, pursue and encourage a policy of extending the period of liquidation so as best to conserve the values of such assets and to prevent unreasonable sacrifice thereof."

RELIEF TO HOME OWNERS

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I have received a communication on the subject of loan associations from Hon. Roy Fitzgerald, a former Representative in Congress from Ohio, with special reference to the situation in Ohio. As it is very illuminating, I am sure Senators will be interested in what the writer says. The letter is as follows:

APRIL 20, 1934.

Hon. SIMEON D. FESS,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: The alarming loss of mortgaged homes by thousands of Ohio people prompts me to direct your attention to the deplorable conditions of the Ohio building associations, and the barrier which tends to prevent in large measure the relief which the National Government is apparently anxious to give.

The building association as originally conceived and operated was the organization of a limited group of thrifty individuals contributing to a common fund to be loaned to its members for the construction or purchase of homes. Each member subscribed for such number of shares, usually $100 par, as he felt able and disposed to pay for at the rate of 25 cents per share per week and was entitled to borrow from the fund as it accumulated such amount as could be secured by first mortgage on real estate, not in excess of the total par value of the shares to which he had subscribed. The priority of members to borrow from the fund was determined by an auction and the one bidding the highest premium in addition to the rate of interest fixed by the mutual association got the loan. The membership was limited by the total shares of stock. The association was not permanent. It was intended to be and was self-liquidating. The management was economical. Financial troubles were unknown except in the few instances of embezzling officers. Each member, borrower or other, continued to pay on his stock or subjected himself to fines and forfeiture. When the borrowing member had paid for his stock in full, his mortgage was released and his stock canceled. Dividends were paid from surplus earnings derived from interest, premiums, and fines, and when there were no more members to borrow, final liquidation commenced. During the course of the years from 1875, such associations served a great public need. There were few savings banks. People were enabled and encouraged to save, and hundreds of thousands came to own their homes, who never could have acquired them otherwise. So great was the contribution to good and stable citizenship that the associations became popular, and they were favored by legislation, State and national.

Then innovations were introduced. The original capital stock was permitted to be increased. Persons were permitted to pay in full for shares of stock. They had no desire, perhaps no need, of building or acquiring homes. "Paid-up" stock certificates were issued, almost invariably earning attractive dividends. Associations accumulated idle funds. These were permitted to be loaned on apartment houses, on office buildings, on churches, and on manufacturing buildings. "Straight loans" at a fixed rate of interest payable quarterly were permitted. Mutuality was impaired. The unpopular fines and premiums were abolished, and the process of making loans standardized in accordance with general commercial practice.

The idea of permanency known nationally as the "Dayton plan" was established. Rivalries among building associations for increase in size and opportunity for more than meager compensation for the officers and employees developed. Opportunities to make profitable loans beyond available funds were presented. Building associations sought money and were permitted not only to borrow money but receive money on deposit at rates of interest definitely fixed from nonshareholders. The amounts of deposits were not restricted to any proportion of the capital stock. Competition for money to loan at certain periods became intense. An association would attract money in large sums from another by offering higher rates of interest and by paying larger dividends than to those others seemed wise. At other periods, when money was plentiful, there was competition for loans. Borrowers shopped from one association to another for interest rates, but especially for increased amounts. Enterprising speculators were occasionally able to borrow the entire cost of the property and perhaps in a few instances more. Loans were made to corporations with no other assets. The unrestrained competition was demoralizing.

The conservative or better-managed associations were handicapped in the struggle. They strove to avoid deposit money. They resisted "straight loans." They tried to keep down unsafe dividend rates and unsafe interest rates on deposits. Large sums of money were transferred from them to their more aggressive rivals. When money was plentiful, the more ambitious associations were willing to loan more money to applicants on the security offered and on more desirable terms.

These aggressive building associations at Dayton, the great building association center of the United States, are now all in the hands of the State authorities for liquidation.

The others, which in the unrestrained struggle for existence, had been compromised to a greater or less extent have ceased for more than 3 years to function normally. No loans have been made. Depositors and stockholders have been unable to withdraw but pittances, though in the aggregate considerable, and the large depositors and stockholders protest against even this "bread line" distribution which helps thousands in distress. They believe that their ultimate security is thereby impaired. This relief is immediately denied when an association is taken over by the State superintendent of building associations.

Here is a clipping from a daily paper showing the market prices of the stock and deposits of the building associations in Dayton and vicinity which are not in State liquidation, as well as the others, marked with an "X."

The associations have been compelled to foreclose upon and buy in millions of dollars' worth of real estate. There are no other bidders. Thousands have lost their homes. The unfortunate mortgagors not only have lost their property, but their hopes for the future are blighted by judgments for deficiencies which hang over them.

People, faced with foreclosure, petition the association to accept deeds for the mortgaged properties. Unfortunates have compromised the deficiency judgments and others, besides their deeds, have paid what they could and even given their, for the present, worthless notes.

Some unproductive property because of accumulation of taxes and heavy assessments must be abandoned to the State by both mortgagor and mortgagee; for with no market nor prospective market, the building association can better take the total loss of its loan than pay the taxes and assessments, and continue to pay them for years in addition to the foreclosure expense. This does not help our insolvent county.

Directors have reduced their compensation and all expenses. They remain in session until late hours. They are compelled to exercise discretion and bear responsibilities from which large stockholders when asked to take places on the board shrink and refuse.

They and the officers and employees are cursed alike by two great masses of our citizens, those who are importuned to pay what they owe, and those who cannot withdraw the money for which they have desperate need, because the others do not pay.

The associations have acquired millions of dollars of real estate. The taxes, assessments, and repairs are burdensome. The income is meagre. New organizations have had to be made to meet the new conditions efficiently. Sales of this real estate have been possible for but small amounts of each and the depreciated securities of the associations. If such securities were not accepted in payment, there could be no sales. The State superintendent of building associations permits it. Several millions of dollars' worth have been sold with but small loss.

In this city of 200,000, where for a half a century the building associations have been universally used as savings banks, there is scarcely a soul not effected and exasperated by the conditions. Few understand and all are resentful.

Suddenly relief was offered by the Federal Government through the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Building associations were offered bonds secured by real estate with interest guaranteed to maturity by the United States in exchange for "distressed" loans, loans with impaired security on property with delinquent taxes. The bonds today are selling above par. Of course, the amount of bonds offered was almost invariably only a fraction of the amount due on the loans, but if the bonds could be sold as real estate was permitted to be exchanged for the depreciated securities of the associations on the open market, the losses to the associations could be made good or reduced to a trifle.

The way to recovery in Dayton seemed assured. The plan was ideal. The distressed home owner, whose property was no longer worth the mortgage and taxes, was to have his taxes paid, his mortgage reduced, and his home restored with a real value to him above the reduced mortgage, and all without any expense to him nor loss to the building association and all through the benevolent intervention of Uncle Sam.

For example, a family before 1929 had bought their home, supposed to be worth $7,500, with the aid of a building-association loan of $5,000. Because of unemployment they still owe the $5,000. The property is no longer worth $7,500. They also owe delinquent taxes of $200 and delinquent interest of $200, a total owing of $5,400. The Federal Government, however, thinks the home worth $4,800 and will loan 80 percent of $4,800, or $3,840, on it in bonds, if the building association will allow the $200; taxes to first be paid and accept the rest of the bonds, $3,600 worth, in full of the amount, $5,200, due on its mortgage. As the $3,840 of bonds would buy more than $5,200 worth of the depreciated securities of the building association, the association is eager to get rid of the bad loan without loss and so cooperate with the Federal Government and help the family save the home.

One association in Dayton alone agreed to accept $981,307.37 in these H.O.L.C. bonds from the Federal Government and cancel mortgages on Dayton homes totaling $1,306,403.25, knowing that by exchanging the bonds for its own depreciated stock it would lose less than $500, and that out of interest which it never could have collected. It sold its foreclosed real estate for stock; it would sell the bonds for stock. If it did not, it would sustain the tremendous loss of $325,095.88, and this was but the beginning. Such losses would mean ruin.

THE BARRIER TO RECOVERY

Even more sudden and disastrous than the flood of 1913, on February 10, came from the State superintendent of building associations rule III forbidding building associations throughout the State to purchase their depreciated securities with the proceeds of the Home Owners' bonds.

The State superintendent apparently followed a mistaken policy of emphasized tenderness toward large investors and actually against their best interests and a misconception of the law giving fancied priorities to those who had given early notice of a desire to withdraw their stock or other deposits. Such priorities have invariably been denied by the courts when the affairs of associations have come to them for administration.

Protests and arguments have been presented at Columbus. The attorney general of the State seems to view neither the policy nor legality of rule III with approval, but nothing apparently can shake the conviction of the State superintendent of building associations that the rule is lawful, wise, and desirable.

In the meantime Uncle Sam stands waiting on the border of Ohio with bags of money to pay into our insolvent county treasuries and to save the homes of our distressed. We may well ask, "How long will he stand there waiting?"

Very truly yours,

ROY FITZGERALD.

HOSTILITY TO THE JEWS IN GERMANY

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on the 23d of January, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] offered a resolution (S.Res. 154), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. That committee has not acted upon the resolution. In my opinion it should have received consideration at its hands. The chairman of the committee is absent from the city for a few days, but upon his return I shall inquire of him what, if any, action will be taken by the committee on the resolution referred to. If no action is to be taken by the committee, I shall take the liberty of asking that the committee be discharged from further consideration of the resolution and that the resolution be laid before the Senate for action. The resolution in substance declares that the present government of the German Reich has deprived certain groups of its citizens of many of their civil and political rights and has imposed upon them restrictions, pains, and penalties, harsh and severe in nature.

It particularly refers to the discrimination against 600,000 Jewish citizens and a great number of Christians of partly or wholly Jewish descent. The resolution further declares that actual causes for the discriminations against the groups and persons referred to are their religious beliefs or professions, and their racial origin, and then adds that there are no grounds reasonably affecting their rights and privileges as citizens of a modern state. The resolution refers to occasions when there have been intercessions by our Government on behalf of the citizens of other countries who are oppressed or persecuted, and further states that for nearly 100 years the traditional policy of the United States has been to take cognizance of such invasions of human rights. The resolution asks that the Senate express its feelings of profound surprise and pain as representatives of the people of the United States upon learning of the discriminations and oppressions imposed by the Reich upon its minority groups including its Jewish citizens and expresses the earnest hope that this policy will be speedily changed so that the minority groups may have restored to them the civil and political rights of which they have been deprived.

Mr. President, since offering this resolution there has been no change in the attitude of the German Government toward its Jewish citizens as well as other German citizens who have not subordinated their religious and political views to the will of the governing regime of that country.

In the New York Times of this date appears an article dated May 11 in Berlin which indicates that there will be no abatement of the persecution to which the Jews have been subjected, but, upon the contrary, that they are to be the victims of further discriminations, persecutions, and oppressions. The article further states that Dr. Goebbels, who speaks for Hitler and for the German Government, "was almost as unsparing if not as contemptuous of Catholicism." Following this article and in the same issue of the Times is a wireless dispatch from Munich which further shows the hostile attitude of the German Government to the Jews.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD the article to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

GOEBBELS UTTERS THREATS TO JEWS—GERMANS WILL VENT RAGE IF THE BOYCOTT CONTINUES, HE SAYS IN "LAST WARNING" SPEECH—ASSAILS CATHOLICS ALSO—HIS NEWSPAPER ASKS READERS TO REPORT CASES OF JEWISH "SHAMELESSNESS" TO IT

BERLIN, May 11.—The heavy artillery in the new Nazi campaign against "killjoys", grumblers, and "critic bugs" was unlimbered by Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels, the Minister of Propaganda, tonight with a speech in the Sportpalast, but it was not at all what was to be expected from advance notices of the campaign.

The new drive had been foreshadowed as a joyous drumfire, continuing for weeks with speeches, broadcasts, newspaper articles, and flying columns of minute men swooping down on cafes and restaurants in their hours of relaxation to exercise grousing and carping and preach the Nazi brand of optimism.

Dr. Goebbels did point out that if there were spots on national socialism, as there are on the sun, it was unbecoming to talk of them and that the ruling powers would not stand for carping criticism. But the burden of his address was an apology for national socialism's not having done better, especially with regard to wages, as promised in his "socialist plans", and a bitter attack on the Jews and the Catholics.

LAYS BOYCOTT TO GERMAN JEWS

He told his audience that all Germany was "aware of the fact that if part of the outside world continues the anonymous boycott against German goods, this is due to our own Jewish fellow citizens", and he warned that part of the outside world, and especially foreign Jews, that they were doing the worst service possible to the German Jews. He declared:

"If the boycott were carried to lengths, actually endangering our economic situation, it would not mean that we would let the Jews go free. No! The hatred, rage, and despair of the German people would first of all vent itself on those who can be grabbed in the homeland.

"If the Jews imagine that the bloodless course of the German revolution gives them right to disport themselves again in their habitual impudence and arrogance and provoke the German people, let them be warned not to tax our patience too severely.

"We have spared the Jews, but if they think they can therefore reappear on the stage and in the editorial office, if they imagine they can again stroll along the Kuerfurstendamm as if nothing at all had happened, let them take my words as a last warning."

This evoked tremendous applause from the audience.

German Jews must conduct themselves in Germany in a manner befitting "guests", Dr. Goebbels declared, and they had better place no hope on any move of their coreligionists abroad.

BARS EQUAL RIGHTS

"German Jews will be left alone by us if they will quietly and modestly retire within their four walls and if they will refrain from putting forth a claim to equal worth and equal rights with Germans", he said. "If they do not, they will have to blame themselves for the consequences."

Dr. Goebbels was almost as unsparing, if not as contemptuous, of Catholicism.

He charged that Catholic pulpits were being used as screens for "Centrist politics", and he admonished "militant churchmen" to have regard how their activities were viewed by the German people.

He thus paid his compliments to Cardinal Michael von Faulhaber of Munich:

"I never once could discover that the cardinal ever raised a protest (before the Nazi regime) against the demoralization of the German people through the theater and the film. Now, all at once, he finds his heart oppressed with concern for Christianity. This comes a bit late."

Toward the end of his speech Dr. Goebbels disavowed any intention of Nazifying France.

"We must prefer a democratic to a National Socialist France", he said, "for national socialism makes a nation stronger."

WATCH ON JEWS ASKED

Previous evidence that a second Nazi wave of active anti-Semitism was getting under way was furnished today by Der Angriff, the organ of Dr. Goebbels. It calls upon all its readers and all party members to report to it any examples of "Jewish shamelessness."

The text of the declaration is as follows:

"The brazen fashion in which many Jews have begun once again to behave themselves has attracted general attention in the last few months. Last year they got thoroughly frightened and became as still as mice. Now that they have discovered that the Germans are gentle people, they seem to think that they can indulge again their usual arrogant behavior.

"Numberless Jews have returned from abroad, many have found new positions and new contracts. They appear not only in business life but in society wholly undisguised, in the noisy and insolent fashion with which we are acquainted and which has played a considerable role in making them generally unpopular.

"We do not ask a pogrom, and we are not asking for persecution of the Jews, but we intend to show how the Jew is behaving once again and how he should behave. Our purpose is simply to give our tolerated and protected Jewish citizens lessons in proper manners.

We have already received a mass of material on this subject. We are constantly adding to it.

We expect every reader, party member, storm trooper, and worker to report to us every case of Jewish shamelessness in the last months and weeks, so that we can publish it in Der Angriff.

Let no one lay a hand on the Jews. But let every man watch them on the street, in the open, in cafes and restaurants, in their professions, and on voyages, every place where the Jew is to be found individually, but especially where they appear in crowds. You cannot possibly miss them.

And report to Der Angriff what is happening.

A warning of the same kind for Jews who might regard themselves as the equals of other citizens was contained in a recent address by Julius Streicher, the Nazi party leader in Nuremberg.

STUERMER PURSUES ATTACKS

MUNICH, May 11 (London Times dispatch).—Despite the indignation aroused by its special "ritual murder" number, the two issues of the Stuermer that have since appeared show no signs of any modification in the attitude of its editor, Julius Streicher.

Both numbers are as full of anti-Jewish hatred as their predecessors and contain the usual caricatures and epithets. Christ's denunciation of the scribes and Pharisees is interpreted as a "curse on the Jews", and commented on with the words:

"The defenders of Christ's murderers still live among us, yet there are people who are not ashamed to defend the Jews."

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations and a convention, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 588) to amend the Judicial Code by adding a new section to be numbered 274D, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1005) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 339. An act for the refundment of certain countervailing customs duties collected upon logs imported from British Columbia (Rept. No. 1006); and

H.R. 7353. An act granting the consent of Congress to any two or more States to enter into agreements or compacts for cooperative effort and mutual assistance in the prevention of crime, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1007).

Mr. LOGAN also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 9370) to authorize an appropriation of money to facilitate the apprehension of certain persons charged with crime, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1008) thereon.

Mr. STEIWER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3291) providing for a reimbursable loan to the Klamath and Modoc Tribe of Indians and the Yahooskin Band of Snake Indians, State of Oregon, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1010) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 12th instant that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 752. An act to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States over suits relating to orders of State administrative boards; and

S. 2671. An act repealing certain sections of the Revised Code of Laws of the United States relating to the Indians.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmaster, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

(Mr. FLETCHER introduced Senate bill no. 3603, which appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. BONE:

A bill (S. 3604) to authorize the Bainbridge Island Chamber of Commerce, a corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Agate Pass connecting Bainbridge Island with the mainland in Kitsap County, State of Washington; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A bill (S. 3605) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to sell the old Tenley School to the duly authorized representative of St. Ann's Church of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (S. 3606) to amend section 3 of the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies", approved July 2, 1890;

A bill (S. 3607) to authorize the incorporated town of Seward, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $60,000 for the purpose of constructing and installing a municipal light and power plant in the town of Seward, Alaska;

A bill (S. 3608) to authorize the incorporated town of Fairbanks, Alaska, to undertake certain municipal public works, including construction, reconstruction, and extension of sidewalks; construction, reconstruction, and extension of sewers, and construction of a combined city hall and fire-department building, and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $50,000; and

A bill (S. 3609) to authorize the incorporated town of Douglas, Alaska, to undertake certain municipal public works, including construction, reconstruction, enlargement, extension, and improvements of its water-supply system; and construction, reconstruction, enlargement, extension, and improvements to sewers, and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $40,000; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 3610) to provide for the creation of a commission to examine into and report the clear height above the water of the bridge authorized to be constructed over the Hudson River from Fifty-seventh Street, New York, to New Jersey; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. AUSTIN:

A bill (S. 3611) authorizing payment of full compensation to the Chief Justice of the Court of Claims for life in the event of his resignation due to ill health; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 3612) to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act so as to extend the provisions thereof to private corporations to aid in constructing and maintaining facilities for the marketing, storing, warehousing, and/or processing of forest products; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 3613) amending subsection (a), section 23, of the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 118) to harmonize the treaties and statutes of the United States with reference to American Samoa; and

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 119) authorizing a preliminary examination or survey of a ship canal across Prince of Wales Island, Alaska; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. LOGAN, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 3583) for the relief of Roy Alvey Jones, and it was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REGULATION OF COMMUNICATIONS BY WIRE AND RADIO—AMENDMENT

Mr. KING submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3285) to provide for the regulation of interstate and foreign communications by wire or radio, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

INTER-AMERICAN HIGHWAY

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the proposed unanimous-consent order, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request for unanimous consent submitted by the Senator from Oregon will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Ordered, by unanimous consent, That the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads be discharged from the further consideration of the message from the President of the United States transmitted to Congress on March 6 last, enclosing report concerning a survey of an inter-American highway, and that it, with the accompanying report, be referred to the Committee on Printing with a view to their being printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I understand that the object of the Senator from Oregon is to have the document printed?

Mr. McNARY. The object of the Senator from Oregon is to procure an estimate from the committee so that the committee may determine whether it is justified in spending the amount of money required for printing the document. The unanimous consent is asked in order to obtain an estimate of the cost of printing.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator repeat his request? I happened to be out of the Chamber for just a moment.

Mr. McNARY. On the 6th of March of the present year the President of the United States submitted to the Congress, and there was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, a reconnaissance survey of a proposed road or highway from the United States through Central America to Panama. The report is embodied in six volumes. I think it would be well to publish it as a public document in order to excite interest in the completion of the highway.

To enable that to be done it is necessary first to have the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads discharged from the further consideration of the message and report in order that they may be referred to the Committee on Printing for an estimate of cost. After the estimate of cost shall have been made, then the Congress will determine whether it is of sufficient importance to justify the expenditure. I am proceeding in that way.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think it is a matter that properly should be referred to the Committee on Printing, and they should consider the cost.

Mr. McNARY. That is what I am asking.

Mr. McKELLAR. We have been so busy in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads that we have not as yet taken up the matter, but I shall be glad to look into it.

Mr. McNARY. I am not proposing finally to discharge the committee. I am only asking that the Committee on Printing make an estimate of the cost so the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads may determine whether it should be printed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not see any objection to the request. It is being made for the purpose of having an estimate secured.

Mr. McNARY. The request was prepared by Mr. Ives, the printing clerk, and is in accordance with the rules of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REVISION OF IMMIGRATION AND DEPORTATION LAWS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the need for humane revision of our immigration and deportation laws has been obvious for some time—not in the interests of any relaxation of our present well-founded and justified philosophy of sharply restricting general immigration into the United States, but in the interests of fair play and decent human considerations in behalf of the families of our foreign-born citizens and in behalf of perfectly sound and useful foreign-born citizens who run foul of some crucifying technicality in the law.

I have personally known many of the cases where the existing laws are not only insufferably cruel but also where they run counter to elementary common sense. The gravest of all existing difficulties seems to be that the existing laws allow no discretion to immigration authorities when technicalities call for deportation and ordinary justice points to permission for a family or alien to remain here. The same lack of discretion also frequently forbids the entry to citizenship of perfectly good and useful aliens who have long been residents in the United States, but who fail to meet all the involved requirements which trail through our multiplicity of laws upon the subject.

The whole subject matter has been recently surveyed by an estimable committee. I heartily subscribe to its findings. The committee wants to remedy accumulated abuses. So do I. The committee, incidentally, wants to make deportations more effective for alien criminals, racketeers, and gangsters. So do I. In other words, the objective is to make the laws more stringent respecting undesirables and more humane in respect to worthy foreign-born residents in the United States. Congress should act in these directions.

There was a particularly illuminating article on this subject in the Washington Post of last Sunday from the pen of Robert T. DeVore. I wish that all Members of Congress would study these demonstrated proofs of the need for reforms. I ask that the article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Sunday, May 13, 1934]

CONGRESS ASKED TO REVISE ABUSIVE DEPORTATION LAWS—CRIMINALS SHIELDED, HONEST LIVES SHATTERED, SAY EXPERTS—UPSTANDING IMMIGRANTS OFTEN THROWN OUT ON TECHNICALITIES

By Robert T. DeVore

The heavy hand of the law sometimes bears a striking resemblance to a mailed fist, a fist that smashes blindly.

Such a fist, according to many critics, has been a little group of statutes circumscribing the alien—and frequently the citizen—within these shores. Mailed, blind, and indifferent, it has struck often and hard, they say. Families have been shattered, lives broken, and the possibilities of producing worth-while citizens have been routed, all without reason.

The statutes referred to are the deportation laws of the existing immigration and naturalization code. Sprouting in indifference, for years they have been inflicting senseless toll on the innocent while sheltering the criminal.

The faults that permitted the scattering of decent, upstanding families of immigrants after years of residence here have not been unknown to the socially minded. As with many such matters, there has been plenty of speechmaking and little action.

INVESTIGATORS REPORT GRAVE ABUSES

Accumulative abuses, however, have finally brought results. Under the chairmanship of Carlton Palmer, of New York, a committee of citizens, aided by technicians of the Immigration and Naturalization Bureau, undertook a study of the Nation's immigration and deportation situation.

What they discovered was not pleasant. Deportation laws allowed the alien criminal with a string of convictions to remain in this country and rooted out his worthy brother on technicalities. The fruit of the investigation was five bills, now pending in Congress, revising the procedure of deportation on the basis of justice and common sense.

Present laws have worked to good effect in producing selective, restrictive immigration, the committee found, but have failed to be effective in ridding the country of the worst types of alien habitual criminals, racketeers, and gangsters. Their rigidity in forcing deportation on technical charges, the committee declared, works against the very end they set out to achieve.

To overcome such faults, the five bills have been introduced. They are aimed against the criminal, the alien smuggler, and the illegal entrant. They place in nonquota classes fathers and mothers over 60 years of age where their children are citizens of this country. They permit registration of aliens here who would suffer religious or political persecution if deported.

Chiefly they are aimed at remedying that inconsistency which forbids discretion to immigration authorities when technicalities call for deportation and ordinary justice points to permission for a family or alien to remain here.

That the inconsistency is sharp no one could question. Already some 465 cases where deportation would result in separation of families and breaking up American homes have accumulated, awaiting the outcome of the bills in Congress. Immigration officials want to be reasonable, and they postponed action on these cases until July 1, in the hope that new powers of discretion would be granted them by that time.

These case histories have been segregated. Each is a human document testifying to the inepitude of justice as applied to deportation laws. Each bears the imprint of the mailed fist, where the guiding hand of justice is cried for. Of these cases, typical is the affair of George Grenier, one-time French aviator.

As a French lad of 16, Grenier learned to fly an airplane. A year later the war broke and Grenier volunteered, was assigned to an aviation unit, and fought for 2 years. Then his torn nerves broke.

He set out one day on a scouting expedition and did not put down his plane until he was in a remote section of Italy. Grenier made his way to the sea, bought the papers of a Greek seaman and took up a fear-haunted existence. Finally, in 1921, he slipped ashore in an American port.

Life began anew. He made his way to Chicago, married, and settled down to a useful place in society. Then in 1926, with friends, he visited Niagara Falls. Someone suggested they view the falls from the Canadian side. Grenier drove his car across the International Bridge and unwittingly opened the way to his deportation.

For 5 years later, his first wife, divorced, informed immigration authorities of her former husband's illegal status in the United States. Then, because he had lived in this country before passage of the Immigration Act of 1924, it developed he was not deportable for any other cause than his sightseeing trip to the Canadian side of Niagara Falls. That trip had broken his continuous residence and subjected him to deportation. His case is among those awaiting the outcome of the deportation bills.

Casimir Dratch presents a similar case. Dratch, a native of Galicia, entered the country illegally from Canada in 1922, but was not deportable because of his continuous residence. He reared a family, bought a home. He took an active part in the local Ukrainian National Benefit Association at Muskegon, Mich., where he lived.

TOOK A TRAIN VIA CANADA

Dratch served seven terms as secretary of the Ukrainian group, and that led to his undoing. Dratch attended a convention of his association at Rochester, N.Y., and unwittingly took a Michigan Central train to get from Detroit to Rochester.

The Michigan Central Railroad runs east from Detroit through southern Canada to Niagara Falls. Dratch rode this route, and the fact that he was a passenger on a train which passed through Canada broke the continuity of his residence and made him deportable. His family—he has four children—lack the funds to support themselves while he might await a chance to return under a quota.

In the hands of 435 Members of the House and 96 Senators lies the destiny of Natalia Branjinikoff Odlin, who is as pretty as her first name sounds and 22 years old.

If the 531 men pass one of the five liberalizing amendments to the immigration laws now before them, Natalia may continue to live in happiness with her American husband, Clifford Odlin, and their son on a ranch in El Dorado County, Calif.

If the Congress does nothing at all about immigration this session, deportation to Manchuria—virtual exile from her husband, child, and home—await her.

Natalia's story begins with the first awakening in her of an ambition to study medicine. She was living in Harbin, China, with her parents, white Russian refugees. There she met an American woman, Mrs. Henry G——, who agreed to guarantee her education in the United States. Natalia came to this country under a nonquota status relating to students.

For 2 years Natalia studied. Then for some unexplained reason Mrs. G—— withdrew her financial support. Ambition undampened, Natalia worked during the third year, and 3 months during one summer, sending Mrs. G—— her earnings.

In 1931 Natalia met Odlin, then 25. They were married. The early estrangement of Natalia and her American benefactress became a definite break. Through marriage Natalia had relinquished her student status, and Mrs. G—— reported her to the immigration authorities. She was arrested in May 1933.

Under the law, Natalia, married and no longer studying medicine, lives in this country illegally. She must leave, enter legally, and reside here a year before becoming eligible for permanent residence. There is no other recourse. The law makes no exceptions.

The Odlins are poor, else Natalia might avail herself of her privilege of leaving the country voluntarily and reentering from Canada or Mexico. The law will compel the Immigration Bureau to deport her to Manchuria, unless Congress changes the law.

Upon no class of immigrant, perhaps, has the mailed fist fallen harder than it has upon the white Russian. Take, for instance, the case of Nicolas Ivanoff, one-time lieutenant in the Russian Imperial Navy, whom an unyielding, indiscriminating law is about to snatch from his family and their pleasant little home in Bridgeport, Conn.

Ivanoff has no country. Russia, the new Russia, above all is not his. There a death warrant awaits his return.

It was in 1919 that Ivanoff committed the offense for which a warrant for his arrest and execution was issued. He took a transport ship of 7,000 tons capacity, of which he was the first officer, to evacuate 4,500 white Russians from Odessa.

Had Ivanoff remained ashore after entering the United States in 1924, the shadow of the mailed fist would not lie across the pleasant little house in Bridgeport. But Ivanoff returned to sea in 1925, making several trips from Miami to Cuba and return. And in 1926 he married Wilhelmine Rohmfeld, a naturalized American citizen.

Ivanoff claims that there was no landing in Cuba in 1925 and that his action cannot therefore be construed as a departure from the country. The Immigration Bureau thinks otherwise. The law says deportation.

Abdullah Cheour, born 30 years ago in north Africa, a son of the prophet, sent former Secretary of the Treasury Ogden Mills $5 to help balance the Budget.

And when Democrats replaced Republicans in Washington Abdullah Cheour, a son of the prophet, sent $2 to President Roosevelt for his White House swimming pool.

But Abdullah Cheour failed to reckon with a guileless law.

Abdullah Cheour has been a good husband, a patriotic citizen, and apparently he has understood politics. But he has not been an American. He must be deported.

"To Mexico I will not go", said the wife of Miguel Bueno. And to Mexico she did not go, thereby making things very difficult for Miguel and the immigration authorities.

Miguel's case is just another of the thousands of examples to be found in the files of the Bureau of Immigration, where human ambitions and hopes and loves clash with the law and where the law invariably wins.

Miguel unavailingly sought work in Silver City, N.Mex. He went to his native Old Mexico and found it. Then came Mrs. Bueno's ultimatum and Miguel's return to the United States.

The law says the continuity of Miguel's stay in this country has been broken. Deportation must exile him from wife and family.

And George Arctic has discovered that implicit obedience to the law's command is no insurance of security from the mailed fist.

George was told he must leave the country. He did. But he forgot to notify immigration authorities of his leaving. His subsequent return was held illegal, and deportation has been ordered.

Once more the mailed fist struck out, this time against one whose will it had already bent, against the sentiments, the very instincts of those who wield it.

George Arctic is young, 20 years old. In Bridgeport, Conn., a business career with his uncle awaits him, life, richest happiness call him. In Syria there is nothing.

"FORWARD, MARCH, SCHOOLS OF AMERICA"—ADDRESS BY JOSEPH MILLER, JR.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address by Joseph Miller, Jr., president of the National Association of Public School Business Officials, entitled "Forward, March, Schools of America."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FORWARD, MARCH, SCHOOLS OF AMERICA

"Forward, March, Schools of America" will be the keynote of the Twenty-third Annual Convention of the National Association Public School Business Officials to be held August 15–24, in Commerce Hall, Port Authority Building, New York City. In addition to the convention itself, the association is arranging the first national schoolmart exposition.

During the forced economies of the World War our schools did not suffer nearly as much as they have during these years of economic depression. You can patiently wait for national recovery to restore normal activity in almost every other field, but you dare not permit millions of school children to grow up either mentally or physically starved. Childhood cannot wait. Nothing offered in later years can possibly fill the void caused by malnutrition of mind or body during the tender formative years of the growing child. Amidst the hue and cry for balanced budgets and lower taxes some of our leading citizens have forgotten entirely the very vital factor of life—that both the number and the problems of children are constantly increasing.

School boards, officials, superintendents, administrative staffs, and teachers have patiently floated with the economic tide; they have assumed a far greater share of the burden of economic depression than they should have ever been called upon to accept.

For the best interests of humanity the backward march of education must be halted. Our Nation can survive only so long as we are true to the basic ideals of universal education. We cannot be loyal to our Nation if we suffer our schools to be destroyed any further.

We must be alive to the problems of the school of tomorrw. If the nursery school is to take its place next to the kindergarten, if the high schools are to be called upon to assume the full burdens of training both for vocations and for leisure, and if adult education is to become a vital social necessity, then our schools must be ready to assume these functions for the benefit of society and for the preservation of our Nation.

The exposition will tell the story to the millions of mothers and fathers of America's school children. It will be the story of education concretely presented in a manner that will inspire them with a courageous determination to save the American school system. "Forward, march, schools of America" will be the keynote. Thousands and thousands of school executives, administrators, teachers, students, and leaders in the educational world will visit the exposition to view the displays.

More than 60,000 persons interested in education attend the summer sessions of the universities in the metropolitan area of the Empire City. To afford these students a full opportunity to visit the exposition and to attend the sessions of the convention, the executive committee of the National Association Public School Business Officials has advanced the dates usually set for the convention. The exposition will open on Wednesday, August 15, and will continue for 10 days, ending with the sessions of the convention, which will be held this year on August 21, 22, 23, and 24.

The morning sessions of the convention will be devoted to public meetings, at which important addresses will be delivered by men and women of national prominence in the educational and public life of the Nation.

These public meetings will be followed by round-table conferences extending through the luncheon periods each day during the convention. Vital problems of school administration will be discussed. I might mention the following subjects now under consideration for these round-table conferences as evidence of the plan and scope of this important work:

Sources and protection of school funds.

Our schools in relation to the N.R.A. and other national programs.

Selection, purchase, storage, and distribution of public-school supplies.

Economic and efficient maintenance of the school plant.

Modern problems in the construction of school buildings.

The sound system for handling students' funds in the high schools.

Financing the school building in the future.

Economic equipment for visual education.

Modern inventions, new materials, and industrial improvements that will add efficiency and economy for the school of tomorrow.

Causes and prevention of accidents in the schools.

The need for a national testing laboratory for school materials, equipment, and supplies.

Efficiency and safety in the transportation of school children.

Modern business methods in economic school administration.

Each round-table conference will be under the leadership of a chairman, assisted by a secretary, both of whom will be recognized authorities in the subject of the conference.

During the afternoons there will be official visits to the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the American Museum of Natural History, and other points of educational interest in the city of New York. And, on the evening of Thursday, August 23, the entire convention will assemble at the annual banquet of the association, to be held in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor.

The association has appointed Theodore Fred Kuper, executive manager of the Board of Education of the city of New York, as the national director of the exposition and convention, at which the new deal in education will be on parade for the benefit of the American public.

Frederick D. Chambers, auditor of the Board of Education of the city of New York, has consented to act as treasurer. Both of these officials and all chairmen and members of the various committees have undertaken these duties without any compensation whatsoever.

Furthermore, we have the assurance of the cooperation of Teachers' College, Columbia University; the School of Education, New York University; Manhattan College; and other leading universities, colleges, and school authorities.

The association has persuaded Thomas J. Watson to lend his aid to this important undertaking. He is president of the International Business Machines Corporation, a former president of the Merchants' Association of New York City, and he is one of the leading forces in the most important work of the United States Chamber of Commerce. We are grateful to Mr. Watson, who has undertaken to form a national advisory committee of leading citizens throughout the country, and he has consented to act as chairman of the committee. Under such leadership there can be no question of the ultimate success of this united effort for the best interests of the school children of America.

LOANS BY FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS TO INDUSTRIES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3487) relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, when we recessed on Saturday there were but few Senators present, and I feel it essential very briefly to recapitulate what then was said in respect to the amendment I have offered to the pending bill. In order that those who were not present during the Saturday afternoon session may understand, I want to state what transpired in relation to the pending measure on Saturday.

The bill which was introduced by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] was taken up for consideration. After being heard for a brief period it was amended by the adoption of the second bill relating to loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The bill of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] relates to loans by the Federal Reserve System to business and to industry. The bill which was pending upon the calendar, introduced and reported by the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [Mr. FLETCHER], related to loans to be made to industry by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The latter was offered as an amendment to the former and was adopted on Saturday last.

Thereafter there was presented the amendment which is now before the Senate, which relates to a particular class or a particular sort of loans which may be authorized by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. In order that the amendment may be understood—for all I want to do is to get an expression of the Senate in respect to it—I desire to call again the attention of the Senate to it.

First, it is permissive. There is no mandatory provision respecting it, but it authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, under certain circumstances, to make certain loans. It does it in this language:

> The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to make loans, for periods not exceeding 20 years, to finance the acquisition of any system, plant, or works for the production, transmission, or distribution of electrical energy by such public corporations, bodies, or instrumentalities as are referred to in section 201 (a) (1) of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, which enter into contracts with the United States or any department, agency, or instrumentality thereof for the purchase of electrical energy.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, from what is the Senator reading?

Mr. JOHNSON. I am reading from a bill which was introduced by me, and which has been offered as an amendment to the bill which is now pending before the Senate. The bill which I have offered as an amendment was originally S. 3246 and has been before the Finance Committee for a considerable period of time.

I recited on Saturday a complete instance which renders the particular amendment not only right but generally appropriate. I recite it again in order that the Senate may understand it.

In the city of Los Angeles there is a municipal lighting and water plant which is under the jurisdiction of what is known as the "Bureau of Water and Power", the city, of course, having the control, supervision, and the like. The city of Los Angeles has become the greatest contracting factor for power from the Boulder Dam construction. Today it has contracts for power with the United States Government of a very considerable extent involving a tremendously large sum of money. Boulder Dam, by the way—and I say this to correct some misrepresentations and some misapprehensions which have been indulged in respecting it—is a self-liquidating project, after all, for we provided in the measure itself that there should not be a shovelful of earth turned until the Government of the United States had firm contracts which would enable it to repay every penny that might be appropriated by the Government for that monumental construction.

The contracts which were made related in the main to power, although some related to water, but those I eliminate from this particular statement. They related principally to power, and the contract for the largest value of power from the Boulder Dam is with the city of Los Angeles. Of course, the city of Los Angeles will carry out, and must carry out, that contract, and it desires to do so, of course, with meticulous care. There can be no question ultimately in respect to it.

It happens now, however, that in a certain part of the city of Los Angeles there is a privately owned utility furnishing to the people of that particular part power and light. The city furnishes to the particular part as well light and power, and it is in direct competition with the privately owned plant.

It is an uneconomical situation which presents itself. It is one which inures neither to the benefit and the welfare of the people nor of the utilities which are thus operated. Sixty percent of the power is furnished by the municipally owned plant, and 40 percent, as related to me, is furnished by the privately owned plant. Necessarily there have been constant bickerings and many controversies. The opportunity is presented at last to reach a conclusion respecting the controversies and the difficulties.

It is the desire of the city to purchase the privately owned plant and thus not only eliminate the controversies of the past but serve economically and at much smaller cost the inhabitants of that particular part of the city of Los Angeles. From the standpoint of the welfare of the people, there could be no objection to the acquisition by the city of that particular plant. From the standpoint of eliminating difficulties and controversies, of course, it is an appropriate thing to do. The only objection that is made to a loan being made by the United States Government through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was not originally designed for any such purpose. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, however, is now entering upon a field entirely new and different from that which was ever contemplated when we created that particular organization by edict of the Congress of the United States.

Today the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, by the amendment that has been attached to the bill of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], is going into the lending of money to industry and the lending of money, wherever it shall be appropriate to lend it by virtue of the provisions of the particular amendment, to those who may require it and who are today engaged in business in different parts of the country. If that be so, it could not render a greater service merely to people than to authorize a loan and receive the adequate security from a publicly owned utility that is situated as this publicly owned utility is in the city of Los Angeles.

It was said to me on Saturday last that this measure had never been considered by the Banking and Currency Committee. I said in response, and I now repeat, that it has been pending before the Banking and Currency Committee since last March. It has had a hearing before a subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee during that period; and in that hearing the facts were presented to the subcommittee, which, I assume, because of the limitations of time, has not had the opportunity, perhaps, to report to the full committee; but there is a perfectly good precedent established for favorable action by the Senate upon the bill that is presented here as an amendment. First, as I say, it has been pending since March. Secondly, it has been before the Banking and Currency Committee during that period. Thirdly, it has been submitted to a subcommittee that heard arguments with respect to it some 2 weeks ago, and presumably many of the members, at least of the Banking and Currency Committee, are fairly familiar with it. Only last Saturday, however, there were presented from the floor here by the Senator from Florida

[Mr. FLETCHER] amendments to the stock control bill, amendments which Senators on the other side of the Chamber tell me never were presented to the full Banking and Currency Committee at all, but they were presented here on the floor relating to another subject matter on Saturday last, and were adopted by the Senate.

If I am in error in the statement—because I must rely upon that which has been told me by members of the committee—I regret it exceedingly; but they advised me that those amendments never came before the full Banking and Currency Committee. So of what avail is it to say to me, when I have had pending before the committee for 2 months this measure of mine, that there is something further that ought to be done in the presentation of this particular amendment to the Banking and Currency Committee?

Thus, these two arguments that were originally advanced on Saturday afternoon last become of no avail at all.

One argument that has been made here is that the whole system of giving money to cities or giving money to people in the fashion that we have is wrong. Perhaps it is. I do not know. I doubt very much this statement; but, at any rate, it is a policy which has been adopted and which we are pursuing; and I ought not to be, with this amendment of mine, subjected now to a determination against the amendment because somebody thinks that the policy originally adopted was entirely erroneous.

There is another aspect in relation to this amendment. It is an emergency measure. It does afford employment. I have here some of the statements which have been made by those in Los Angeles who are familiar with the subject, who insist that the taking over of the privately owned plant will of necessity require rehabilitation, reconstruction, employment, just as much as if they had started in the beginning with the construction of the particular works. So it is that from every standpoint an amendment of this sort ought to be permitted and ought to be put upon this bill.

I insist that it is appropriate, first, because it relates to a loan to be made only permissively by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I insist, secondly, that it is appropriate because it relates to the acquisition, in behalf of the people of a great territory, of a privately owned utility; and, thirdly, it will remove a controversy and avoid litigation that has been contemplated between the two plants and enable the people of the city, without the uneconomic situation thus presented, to have furnished to them light and power. But, above all that, there is another reason why it is appropriate, and that is, it is for the benefit of the people themselves; and for that reason, if there were no other presented here, it ought to be permitted to go on as an amendment to this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I shall occupy only a minute or two.

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] says that this bill was considered by a subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee and testimony taken. I was not a member of the subcommittee; but I have very definite information to the effect that had the subcommittee voted on the bill at the time the memorandum was furnished, if that may be called testimony, the bill would have been reported adversely by an overwhelming vote of the committee. It was suggested, however, that the distinguished colleague of the senior Senator from California was interested in the bill, and was ill, and therefore that consideration of the bill should go over until the junior Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] should have an opportunity to appear before the committee.

My objection to the bill, aside from a fundamental objection, is that it has not been considered by the Banking and Currency Committee; that it has not been considered by the departments of Government intimately affected by its provisions; and that nobody could possibly compute the amount of money that might be expended out of the Federal Treasury if the amendment should be adopted. It would open up the question of loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to every community in the United States for the purchase or construction of municipal plants.

On Saturday it was suggested by the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under existing law is authorized to make loans of this kind. It seemed so from the provision of law introduced into the RECORD by the Senator from Washington, and I asked the chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for an explanation. He told me that the authority for making all loans of this description had been transferred to the Public Works Authority, and that if this loan could be made at all under existing law it could be made by the Public Works Authority.

This morning, without any solicitation on my part, I have a letter from the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which I shall read for the RECORD:

DEAR SENATOR GLASS: The amendment to your bill offered by Senator JOHNSON carries Government financing into a field that it seems highly undesirable that we start upon. Furthermore, there is a good market at this time for high-grade municipal securities; and if the people in Los Angeles will vote these securities, they can undoubtedly be sold in the market and at fair rates.

We have had demands from all over the country for loans to municipalities, not for the purpose of buying utilities but to pay firemen, policemen, and other employees of the cities where sufficient taxes are not being collected. We have not submitted these proposals to Congress for the reason that with recovery well under way, it should not be necessary for the United States Government to help municipalities in such ways. If, however, when Congress meets again in January, it seems desirable to give further consideration to these problems, I should not hesitate to advocate them.

JESSE H. JONES,
Chairman Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

I respectfully submit to the distinguished Senator from California that we should not adopt this proposition as an amendment to the pending bill. The pending bill is designed strictly to help going concerns in their capital set-up and is designed to keep people employed, and, in the matter of expansions, to result in the employment of other people.

The measure proposed by the distinguished Senator from California is not designed to do that, or, if so designed, it seems to me it will fail of its purpose, because it will not involve the employment of another person. It may involve the discharge of many persons, because there are now two competing plants in Los Angeles, and if the city plant should take over the private plant, the only purpose in taking it over, it seems to me, would be one of economy, and the only way economy could be effected would be by consolidating the working forces of the two plants, which inevitably, I should suppose, would involve the discharge of many persons. Moreover, as I understand, when this bill was first introduced, it related to Los Angeles alone, some objection was raised to that fact, and the bill was revised so that it might relate to the whole of the United States.

It is simply appalling to me to consider what might be the result if a policy of that sort were adopted. Every municipality in the United States might be coming to Washington to get the money of the taxpayers to apply to industries of this sort, and heaven only knows in what it would result. I do not know, I am sure. I think the Senator from California might be willing to let the matter go over, and let his measure be deliberately and maturely considered in the Committee on Banking and Currency. There has been no intention of delay whatsoever in the committee. The bill went over out of deference to the Senator's colleague.

Mr. President, I hope very much the Senator will withdraw his amendment. If not, I hope the Senate will vote it down.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, let us for a moment consider the objections urged against the amendment. If I were interfering in the slightest degree with the very beneficent purpose of the two bills which have been before us since Saturday afternoon, I would very willingly withdraw the amendment. If in any degree I were interferring with either one of the bills performing its functions as indicated by the phraseology, I should be very glad to stand aside. But I am doing neither the one thing nor the other.

The first objection made by the distinguished Senator from Virginia is that the amendment has not been considered by the committee. I think as the Senator proceeded he indicated that the committee had in some fashion considered it. I was not aware that there had ever been any determination even by a subcommittee. But we need not worry with that, anyway, because if that were a hard and fast rule, a rule of thumb for legislation here, there never could be any amendment presented to a bill from the floor of the Senate, and there never could be any legislation adopted except that which a committee had reported. So I think we can dismiss that as of little or no consequence.

Next, the Senator from Virginia says it has not been considered by the departments. It has been considered by the R.F.C., and has been considered by the Interior Department. The Senator reads a letter from the R.F.C. which would indicate that it is opposed to it. The Interior Department is in favor of it, and the communications from these two instrumentalities of the Government are on file in the Committee on Banking and Currency.

I listened as well as I was able, as the Senator read the letter of the R.F.C., and it was perfectly obvious that the gentleman who wrote the letter wrote without an adequate conception at all of the provisions of the amendment, and of its safeguarding provisions.

I may say that I have a letter from the T.V.A.—Tennessee Valley Authority—which not only endorses the bill but expresses the hope that it will be passed, because it may be of value to that particular organization of the administration in days to come.

It is useless to say that it applies to Los Angeles alone. It will apply as well to some projects in the Northwest. But it is not a fact that every municipality in the whole United States would come here demanding that loans should be made by the R.F.C. under this measure, for only those are affected which have contracts with the United States, or any department, agent, or instrumentality thereof, for the purchase of electrical energy, and for the use of property, and so forth. So that all the bugaboos which have been created to the disadvantage of this amendment fall when they are considered at all. There is nothing that is presented here, except a distaste either for an amendment to the particular bill pending or a desire not to have this kind of loan made, which has, in my opinion, one scintilla of logic or argument to justify it.

For these reasons I submit to the Senate that, surrounded with safeguards as the amendment is, first, making it permissive, and, second, requiring not only the governmental agencies with which the municipality has a contract to approve but compelling as well that it shall produce security that is adequate for any loan which may be made, the amendment should be adopted. There can be no question of the ample security accorded under the amendment; no question whatever about the good it can do the people of this land. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, if I may address a question to the Senator from California, have the people of Los Angeles ever voted on the question of purchasing the private plant?

Mr. JOHNSON. I am unable to answer.

Mr. GLASS. Frankly, I ask the question because I am informed that they declined to approve the proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the Senator is in error as to that.

Mr. GLASS. I am not in error about being so informed. My informant may be in error.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator's informant I think is in error, because up to last Saturday the engineer and representative of the Bureau of Water and Power, Mr. Scattergood, was here, endeavoring to present this matter as best he could to those with whom he came in contact. I think the Senator's informant is wholly in error.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, very briefly, since the Banking and Currency Committee has been referred to, and the subcommittee of that committee mentioned in the discussion here, perhaps I should explain somewhat the history of these measures.

We are likely to be somewhat confused, perhaps, by the pending amendment practically placing before us three different bills. Senate bill 3487, which is the bill we are now considering, was reported by the Senator from Virginia under these circumstances. I introduced a bill, on the recommendation of the Federal Reserve Board, providing for loans for the benefit of industry under certain circumstances and conditions. The bill provided for the setting up of 12 regional banks. It was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and by that committee referred to a subcommittee, of which the Senator from Virginia is chairman. A report was made, and an amendment was suggested providing that the loans should be made by the Federal Reserve banks, without setting up the machinery of regional banks.

After thorough consideration, and some hearings before the committee, not public hearings or reported hearings, but in executive sessions, the committee agreed to amend the bill, and the Senator from Virginia introduced a new bill containing the amendments, which is Senate bill 3487, which was the original bill amended as the committee determined.

At the instance of the R.F.C., I introduced the original bill from which Senate bill 3520 resulted. That bill was amended by the committee. I was then requested by the committee to introduce a new bill conforming to the amendment to the original bill, which I did, and that new bill is Senate bill 3520.

These bills have been very carefully considered by the committee. Federal Reserve Board and R.F.C. officials have been before the committee. The committee finally determined, after extensive hearings and study of the subject, to report the two bills, S. 3487 and S. 3520, for action by the Senate.

The Senator from California is entirely correct in his statement concerning the introduction of his bill and its reference to the Committee on Banking and Currency. The Committee on Banking and Currency, however, has not been to blame; at least, I think it has not been dilatory in dealing with the Senator's bill. First it was referred, naturally and properly, of course, to the R.F.C. The report of the R.F.C. was practically noncommittal; that is to say, it left it to Congress to determine whether, as a matter of policy, it would enter upon this class of loans. The report was neither favorable nor unfavorable.

The bill was then referred to the Interior Department. That reference took a little time. The Interior Department's first report was unfavorable to the bill; and after further consideration and after some amendments or modifications of the bill, the Interior Department reported in favor of the bill introduced by the Senator from California involving that which he now has offered as an amendment to the pending bill.

The subcommittee which dealt with the question did consider the bill, heard the senior Senator from California, considered his argument and memorandum on the subject, and having before it the reports from the R.F.C. and the Interior Department, considered the whole matter.

Subsequently I brought the matter to the attention of the full committee. The full committee was not satisfied concerning the terms of the bill; and after discussing the subject for some little time there seemed to be a very great difference of opinion. I am inclined to think that had the matter been pressed at that time the committee would have reported adversely on the Senator's bill; but it was suggested, as the Senator from Virginia has mentioned, that the junior Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] was ill, and was very much interested in this measure, and that the committee had better have it go over until he could be heard.

That was the action which was taken. There was no formal action, no resolution adopted; but that was the final decision reached by the Committee on Banking and Currency. So the matter rested there.

Now, we have the bill of the Senator from California offered as an amendment to these measures which have been combined, because Senate bill 3520 has been adopted as an amendment to Senate bill 3487.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. DILL. Does the present law authorizing loans by the R.F.C. permit the loaning of money to a privately owned electric power company?

Mr. FLETCHER. I doubt it, unless it is for a public use.

Mr. DILL. Of course, such a company's operation is for a public use.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think every enterprise must be for the public use in order to come within those to which the R.F.C. is authorized to make loans. As was stated, however, in the letter of the chairman of the R.F.C., which has been read this morning, all the jurisdiction and power originally vested in the R.F.C. have been transferred to the P.W.A. The P.W.A. really is handling it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. If a utility plant, or a sewer system, or any public department is self-liquidating, the P.W.A., under the present law, may make loans to it. That function has been transferred from the R.F.C. to the P.W.A.

Mr. DILL. I am not talking about loans to cities for such plants or purposes. I am talking about loans to private power plants.

Mr. BARKLEY. There has been no amendment to the law authorizing it.

Mr. DILL. Does not the law allow that anyway? Are not private power plants included in "industry"?

Mr. BARKLEY. The R.F.C. can make loans only as specified in the act; that is, to railroads, banks, insurance companies, an others named in the act. The effect of the amendment which was agreed to in the Senate on Saturday will be to authorize them to make loans directly to private industry.

Mr. DILL. Then private power plants would be included?

Mr. BARKLEY. If there were no distinction between private power plants and private industry, it would include them.

Mr. DILL. I know that now the law does permit loans to public corporations, public subdivisions of States, and so forth. The law permits the buying of securities which do not mature for more than 10 years; so there is nothing particularly new in the 20-year feature of the provision offered by the Senator from California.

Mr. FLETCHER. No.

Mr. DILL. My point is that if we are to allow private companies to borrow money from the R.F.C., I do not see why we should not allow a municipality to borrow money to be used to produce electric power.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is nothing in any law specifically authorizing the R.F.C. to make loans to private power companies. The amendment to the R.F.C. Act proposed by the Senator from Florida is for the purpose of permitting the R.F.C. to loan money to small industries which have applied to the Federal Reserve banks and have not been able to get credit.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill provides for furnishing loans to industry in order to maintain and increase employment, and so forth. The main object in allowing loans to be made to private industry is to maintain employment.

I wish to say in conclusion that I desire to see these two measures, Senate bill 3520 and Senate bill 3487, passed by Congress and go into effect. There is almost unlimited demand—certainly very strong and insistent demand—for these two measures to aid industry. The cry all over the country is to have capital supplied in order that industries may be started, and that industries may be continued by virtue of this financial assistance. I desire to see that done because, as I said, there is great demand for it and great need for it.

While in sympathy with what the Senator from California desires, which he has so clearly explained, I feel that if we put the Senator's amendment in the bill it will unduly load it down, and burden it, and endanger the final passage of the bill as amended. I am afraid of that; and for that reason I shall have to vote against his amendment.

I do not desire to detain the Senate further. Let us have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I shall not take the time of the Senate to discuss the question at any length. It seems to me that the fears of the Senator from Virginia are not well founded when he says that all the cities in the country will be here applying for money. Of course this provision should not apply simply to Los Angeles. I should be opposed to allowing that right merely to some one city. Before any city of importance that I know anything about can come here and make such an application it must have some kind of authorization from the city government, and I suppose in practically all the cities there must be a vote of the people. The whole question will have to be threshed out in the community or in the city which desires to obtain the loan.

I cannot understand why we should authorize the loaning of money to private power industries and refuse to allow a municipality to borrow money to produce power. It seems to me that if one is permissible the other should be permissible. I cannot understand the reasoning of those who oppose that proposal.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Regardless of the merits of this particular amendment, it applies in a limited way only to three or four sections of the country, and in those sections to restricted territory. Does the Senator think it is fair to scores of other cities and towns in the country which do not happen to have a Government dam in their vicinity to adopt an amendment allowing communities to borrow money in order that they may take advantage of the facilities brought about by the construction of a Government dam in their neighborhood, and not enlarge it so as to give every town in the United States the same opportunity? This amendment would apply to Los Angeles, and conceivably it would apply to some communities in the Tennessee Valley, and in one or two other places.

Mr. DILL. It would apply to the entire Colorado River Valley, to the Columbia River Valley, to the Tennessee River Valley, and, if a dam should be built on the St. Lawrence River, it would apply there. To what other sections of the country would it apply?

Mr. BARKLEY. Why deny the privilege to communities which do not have a dam and never will have a dam unless they build it themselves, which they will not do? Why set up by the amendment a special class of towns near dams? Why give authority to cities which are near a dam built by the United States to borrow money to build a public plant, but deny that privilege to all the other towns of the United States? Why deny to other towns the opportunity to do the same thing?

Mr. DILL. This provision does not deny it to them. It specifically permits them to buy the plants in their communities.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not unless they have a contract with some Government agency, and that contract presupposes that a Government dam is being built in the vicinity.

Mr. DILL. Let us take the other side of this question. The Government is building these immense dams; it will have power to sell; it needs a market in these cities and communities, and thus this will in reality be an assistance to the Government in selling the power it is now producing.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is not any chance, of which I know, that it will have any better market by loaning this money to cities than it will have anyway. The cities have got to have light and power.

Mr. DILL. The difference will be that if the Government sells the power to a private company, such private company will proceed to charge such rates as it sees fit, which are always profiteering rates, while, if the Government sells to a municipal company, the power will be sold at prices simply sufficient to keep the plant in operation and take care of depreciation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am in sympathy with all these public projects and have supported them; I have helped to vote millions and hundreds of millions of dollars out of the Treasury to build them. Now, we are asked to loan to people in the neighborhood the money in order that they may take advantage of the facilities which the Government is putting at their doors, and not allow any other town that does not have a dam near it such an opportunity. It does not seem to me to be fair.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I think this amendment, if put into proper legislative form, should carry a provision that a municipality or subdivision that applies for money shall pledge its full faith and credit for the loan. The committee almost unanimously oppose the principle involved in this form of loan, but they have not attempted, in any way, to put the amendment in better legislative form. Take my own city, for instance. It applied for some $88,000,000 to build a subway; but, so far as I know, the P.W.A. has turned it down because the faith and credit of the city were not pledged. There is nothing in the proposal now before us which would require any municipality to pledge its full faith and credit for a loan outside of the liquidating pledge of the project itself. In other words, there is nothing in the proposal which requires the municipality to charge a rate that will even make the project self-liquidating. I am in full sympathy with the desires of the Senator from California, but I think the proposal ought to be amended so that the full faith and credit of the municipality will be behind such loans, outside the fees which may be charged for service.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I am not going to take more time of the Senate. I simply wanted to state my position regarding this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. GLASS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BONE (when Mr. NEELY's name was called). I desire to announce the necessary absence of the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] and to state that were he present he would vote "yea" on this amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], and vote "nay."

Mr. VANDENBERG (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. McADOO]. I am informed that if present he would vote "yea" on this amendment. As he is detained from the Senate by sickness, and as I am unable to obtain a transfer of the pair, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PATTERSON (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York. I am not informed as to how he would vote upon this question, and, therefore, I am compelled to withdraw my vote.

Mr. KEYES (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with my colleague the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN]. I understand if he were present he would vote as I have voted. So I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. STEPHENS. On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] and vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS. I reannounce at this time the absence of certain Senators whose absence I announced on the previous roll call, and, as to my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH], who also is necessarily absent, I announce that I do not know how he would vote if present.

I desire further to announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are detained from the Senate in attendance upon committees.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] has a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS].

Mr. HEBERT. I wish to announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is detained in the Committee on Education and Labor, and that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—37

Ashurst	Duffy	Logan	Shipstead
Bachman	Erickson	McGill	Steiwer
Bankhead	Frazier	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Black	Hatch	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Bone	Hatfield	Murphy	Thompson
Capper	Hayden	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Copeland	Johnson	Norris	Wheeler
Costigan	King	Nye
Cutting	La Follette	Pope
Dill	Lewis	Reynolds

NAYS—37

Adams	Connally	Goldsborough	Overton
Austin	Coolidge	Hale	Robinson, Ark.
Bailey	Couzens	Harrison	Schall
Barbour	Davis	Hebert	Stephens
Barkley	Dickinson	Kean	Townsend
Bulkley	Fess	Keyes	Walsh
Bulow	Fletcher	Lonergan	White
Byrd	George	McCarran
Carey	Gibson	Metcalf
Clark	Glass	O'Mahoney

NOT VOTING—22

Borah	Hastings	Reed	Tydings
Brown	Long	Robinson, Ind.	Vandenberg
Byrnes	McAdoo	Russell	Wagner
Caraway	Neely	Sheppard	Walcott
Dieterich	Patterson	Smith
Gore	Pittman	Trammell

So Mr. JOHNSON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, as I have previously stated, the sanitary district of my State, working with the city of Chicago, has a similar relation to the Government as the Senator from California has stated Los Angeles has to the Government. Therefore, I voted "yea."

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the Senate, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

FINANCING OF HOME CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as follows:

To the Congress:

May I draw your attention to some important suggestions for legislation which should tend to improve conditions for those who live in houses, those who repair and construct houses, and those who invest in houses?

Many of our homes are in decadent condition and not fit for human habitation. They need repairing and modernizing to bring them up to the standard of the times. Many new homes now are needed to replace those not worth repairing.

The protection of the health and safety of the people demands that this renovizing and building be done speedily. The Federal Government should take the initiative immediately to cooperate with private capital and industry in this real-property conservation. We must lay the groundwork for this effort before Congress adjourns its present session.

The purpose of the program is twofold: First, to return many of the unemployed to useful and gainful occupation; second, to produce tangible, useful wealth in a form for which there is great social and economic need.

The program consists of four major, interrelated divisions:

1. Modernization, repair, and new construction;
2. Mortgage insurance;
3. Mortgage associations; and
4. Building-and-loan insurance.

The modernization phase of the program will furnish national guidance and support for locally managed renovizing campaigns throughout the country and protection for home owners against unwarranted cost advances. For these purposes and to assure adequate financing at low cost and on moderate terms of repayment, a new governmental agency is required.

Modernization of commercial and industrial structures is envisioned, as well as residential, but the new features providing governmental assistance are confined largely to home improvements.

Loans to individuals will be made by private agencies, which will be insured by a governmental agency against loss up to a certain percentage of their advances. This insurance against loss on the rehabilitation loans will be met by the Government and will be confined to advances of credit that meet standards and conditions designed to protect both the home owners and the cooperating agencies.

To make funds available for new home construction and to improve the mortgage market, the second phase of the program is long-term mortgage financing. It provides mutual mortgage insurance under governmental direction to enable private agencies to make first-mortgage loans on newly constructed houses up to 80 percent of the appraised value of the property and to make new mortgages on existing homes up to 60 percent of the appraised value of the property. The loans will usually carry not more than 5 percent interest and will be amortized by periodic payments over 20 years. Similar insurance arrangements are provided to help finance low-cost residential projects of the slum-replacement type.

The third phase provides for the incorporation of mortgage associations under strict Federal supervision to increase the amount of mortgage funds available in regions where interest rates are unduly high because sufficient local funds are lacking. The activities of these associations will be limited almost entirely to insured residential mortgages.

Insurance for share and certificate holders in building-and-loan associations, similar to the insurance provided for bank depositors, is the fourth phrase of the program. These institutions are custodians of the funds of small savers, and it is essential that they should be given every reasonable protection. Insurance of this type is necessary in order to arrest any further drain on these institutions and to put them in a position to resume their normal useful functions.

I believe that the initiation of this broad and sound program will do much to alleviate distress and to raise perceptibly the standards of good living for many of our families throughout the land.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 14, 1934.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in pursuance of the President's message, I request unanimous consent to introduce a bill, and ask its reference to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be received and referred, as requested by the Senator from Florida.

The bill (S. 3603) to improve Nation-wide housing standards, provide employment, and stimulate industry; to improve conditions with respect to home-mortgage financing, to prevent speculative excesses in new mortgage investment, and to eliminate the necessity for costly second-mortgage financing by creating a system of mutual mortgage insurance and by making provision for the organization of additional institutions to handle home financing; to promote thrift and protect savings; to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act; to amend the Federal Reserve Act; and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5950) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The message also announced that the House had agreed severally to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the following bills of the Senate:

S. 2080. An act to provide punishment for killing or assaulting Federal officers;

S. 2249. An act applying the powers of the Federal Government, under the commerce clause of the Constitution, to extortion by means of telephone, telegraph, radio, oral messages, or otherwise;

S. 2252. An act to amend the act forbidding the transportation of kidnaped persons in interstate commerce;

S. 2253. An act making it unlawful for any person to flee from one State to another for the purpose of avoiding prosecution in certain cases;

S. 2575. An act to define certain crimes against the United States in connection with the administration of Federal penal and correctional institutions and to fix the punishment therefor;

S. 2841. An act to provide punishment for certain offenses committed against banks organized or operating under laws of the United States or any member of the Federal Reserve System; and

S. 2845. An act to extend the provisions of the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act to other stolen property.

LOANS BY FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS TO INDUSTRIES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill, S. 3487, relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, Saturday, collaborating with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], I submitted an amendment to the pending bill which contemplated additional depositors' relief for the bank depositors of the country whose funds have been tied up in closed banks. In the form in which the amendment was submitted last Saturday it directed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to loan 100 percent of the fair estimated liquidating value of the assets tendered as security for such loans and to reduce the interest rates upon the loans to 3 percent. The amendment was rejected.

I have modified the amendment, in consultation with my colleague and the Senator from New York, and with others, so as to limit the application of the new proposed authority to the receivers or the liquidating agents of banks and savings banks which have been closed since January 1, 1933. I have injected the element of discretion in respect to the use of this power by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and I have increased the rate of interest from 3 percent to 3½ percent.

In collaboration with the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], and in his behalf as well as my own, I am now offering the altered amendment. I do not want to take time to argue it. That was amply done Saturday. However, I want the Senate to understand precisely what it is that is proposed. It is proposed that receivers or other liquidating agents of closed banks and closed savings banks shall be permitted, in the discretion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to borrow 100 percent of the fair estimated liquidating value of the assets tendered to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as collateral for the loans.

It is proposed that this privilege shall be permitted only to those banks which have closed since January 1, 1933, which means, of course, the vast field which closed in respect to the general bank holiday of 1 year ago. The net result of the operation of the amendment would be simply this:

At the present time the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has made its appraisal upon these assets of the various banks. It has made the appraisal on a thoroughly businesslike, conservative basis. Against that appraisal, in turn, it has loans, let us say, of 60 or 75 percent of the appraised value of the assets. This amendment would increase the loans to 100 percent of the appraisals and reduce the interest rate to 3½ percent per annum. This amendment proceeds on the theory that the Government owes a final obligation to liquidate so far as possible the deposits that are still tied in these banks. It proceeds on the theory that if we want currency expansion and bank-credit currency expansion, the best possible way to get it is in a maximum rational distribution of the deposits that are still tied in the closed banks. It proceeds on the theory that the rate of interest charged by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation upon these loans should be only such a rate of interest as permits the Corporation to break even in respect to its operation; that there should be no profit in that aspect of the operation.

Therefore, in this amended form I submit this proposal on behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] and myself, in the hope that in this fashion we can close, so far as this particular bill is concerned, this particular phase of the legislation.

I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. Perhaps I had better read it myself in order to be sure that it is read correctly, since it is written in hasty longhand.

I move to add a further section reading as follows:

That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act is hereby amended by adding, at the end of paragraph 1 of section 5, the following sentence:

Notwithstanding any other provisions of law with respect to loans as aforesaid to receivers or liquidating agents for banks and savings banks that closed since January 1, 1933, and are in process of liquidation, the Corporation shall loan, in its discretion, 100 percent of the fair estimated liquidating value of the assets tendered as security for such loans, and shall charge interest thereon at a rate not to exceed 3½ percent per annum.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. I could not tell from hearing the amendment read whether it applies only to national banks or to banks which are members of the Federal Reserve System. Is the amendment broad enough to include State banks, not members of the Federal Reserve System?

Mr. VANDENBERG. It includes all banks and savings banks that are covered by the original bill, which, as the Senator knows, includes every bank that now has a loan with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and covers all such classifications of banks.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it does seem to me that this modified proposal which was offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] on his behalf and mine might well be accepted.

Before the Senate adjourned on Saturday night I left on the table a joint proposal of the Senator from Michigan and myself. That, however, is not before us. The pending proposal does this:

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has already made these appraisals. In many instances a percentage has been loaned upon these assets. If this particular measure shall be adopted, it will permit 100-percent loans upon such assets.

It is understood, of course, that a conservative estimate is to be made. They are not the sort of assets that could be liquidated tomorrow or the next day, but they are assets which can be liquidated if sufficient time is given those in charge of the local banks to deal with them.

I spoke the other day about experience with a half dozen banks in my State gained from personal contact with those banks. Of course, six banks or seven banks is a very small number, and yet the conditions which obtained in that number of banks must obtain throughout the country.

I have in mind one bank located in Orange County, in my State, which is in the midst of the biggest onion patch in the world. There are seven or eight thousand acres in that immediate neighborhood which are tilled by subsistence farmers. They are small farms, but nevertheless in normal times they produce enough income to make possible decent living for every farm family.

A good many of these farmers had notes or mortgages at the local bank in Florida, Orange County, N.Y. About the time it was necessary to liquidate its assets in order to have funds to continue the operation of the bank, there was a flood in the Wallkill River, which flows through this onion country. A million dollars' worth of onions were destroyed in 2 or 3 days, making it impossible for those farmers to meet their obligations to the bank.

I know many of the farmers personally. I know the conservator of the bank. We went over the assets of the bank; and it was perfectly clear, both to the conservator—who had been the cashier for a long time—and to me, knowing the farmers involved, that there could be no question that the assets in question had a 100-percent face value; that it needed only a little time to work out the problem of liquidation.

Mr. President, what happened in Florida, N.Y., no doubt happened in every county in this country. If a way could be found to release many of these deposits, it would mean much to the return of prosperity.

We cannot deny the fact that there is much discontent in America. In certain sections of America discontent is seething. Many of the persons to whom we refer as the "white-collar class", who have been dilligent and active, cannot understand why we are willing while ignoring their plight, to give millions to others through the C.W.A., where much of the work was "made" work. I am not complaining about that, because I think it was very necessary that we should do it. I am simply speaking of the fact that these persons of the white-collar class, who have all the possessions they have tied up, cannot understand why, through the C.W.A., there should be these gifts of millions of dollars and no relief given to these faithful citizens who have striven through the years to accumulate something for old age. They cannot understand, either, why millions have been loaned to railroads, while no particular effort is made to take care of the distress of the depositors in local banks.

Mr. President, in the interest of better feeling in our country, in the interest of justice to these citizens who cannot help themselves, I believe that we ought to go at least this far.

There is no need of my prolonging my remarks. Every Senator here knows exactly what the problem is. Every Senator must have been called upon, as I have been many times during the past year, to give advice regarding these local difficulties. So I hope the committee may see fit to accept the modified proposal made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and myself, accept this amendment to the measure, and let it go to conference, in the hope that some relief may be given to the distressed depositors in banks throughout our country.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, if Senators do not want us, through the usual banking channels, and now directly through the Federal Reserve banks of the country, and in the last analysis through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to go to the assistance of thousands of struggling industries with inadequate capital to carry on and with inadequate capital to expand their industries—if Senators do not want us to do that, they will continue to seek to load down this bill with propositions which I happen to know cannot become law.

If this particular amendment should be adopted, it would open up in another branch of Congress the entire question of so-called "relief" to depositors in failed banks. It would almost certainly insure an opportunity in another branch of Congress to vote on propositions that would literally bankrupt the Federal Treasury. For that reason, if for no other, I could wish that my distinguished colleagues would refrain from embarrassing this bill, which is intended to help going industries that are in trouble in a way that will insure the retention of their present force of employees, and also enable them to expand their business, and contribute thereby to lessening unemployment in this country.

Under existing law, to wit, the Bank Act of 1933, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is authorized, and not only authorized, but it is made its duty, to purchase, hold, and liquidate, as hereinafter provided, the assets of national banks which have been closed by action of the Comptroller of the Currency, or by vote of their directors, and the assets of State member banks which have been closed by State authority.

Mr. President, that was confined to member banks of the Federal Reserve System for two reasons; first, for the very good reason that we appropriated $140,000,000 from the reserves of the Federal Reserve banks which are owned by the member banks of the System for this purpose, and authorized assessments against member banks for this purpose. Neither the committee nor the Congress could see the justice in taking the funds of the Federal Reserve Banking System and appropriating them to the use of nonmember banks, which endure none of the restrictions and none of the exactions which member banks in the Federal Reserve System must endure.

There was a second reason, not of less importance than the one I have mentioned; that is, that we had set aside, first, $200,000,000 for the assistance of nonmember banks in the appropriation and authorization to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. We afterward withdrew the restriction of $200,000,000 and authorized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to go to the assistance of these banks without restriction.

Now it is proposed in this bill, which relates to an entirely different matter, to open up the whole question of taking money from the Federal Treasury exacted from the taxpayers of the country to reimburse depositors in failed banks.

Mr. President, I pause to ask whether the amendment proposed on Saturday by the Senator from New York and the Senator from Michigan has been withdrawn, and whether the pending amendment is substituted in its place.

Mr. VANDENBERG. For the time being, Mr. President, if I may respond, we are now undertaking to get assent to this proposition, in the hope that we may conclude this phase of the legislation with this amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Which means, of course, that if the amendment shall not prevail we will go back to the amendment offered day before yesterday.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is correct, I assume.

Mr. GLASS. I want the Senate to understand that that might easily, and would inevitably, wipe out every dollar in the fund provided for the insurance of bank deposits in the act of 1933.

Just think of it; talking about loans to railroads and to other institutions, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has made commitments to banks amounting to $783,000,000. Nearly a billion dollars have been expended by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in aid of banks. Now we are asked to authorize that Corporation to take an unrestricted and an unlimited amount of the taxpayers' money to pay out for this purpose.

I wish to stress the first objection urged to this proposition. It opens up the whole question, and would probably, if not inevitably, mean that in another branch of the Congress there would be attached to the bill a proposal which the Treasury and the President say literally would bankrupt the Government of the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am advised that one of the agencies of the Government made a survey of the frozen deposits in the closed banks, and while I have not the figures exactly accurate, I have figures which are substantially accurate. It is stated that if the Federal Government should attempt to pay off all of the depositors, and could realize 100 cents on the dollar on the collateral against these deposits, it would lose in the neighborhood of $1,400,000,000 on the transaction.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, as I have said, I wish to stress this view of the question, that it opens up the whole problem, and there might be attached to the bill provisions which would inevitably result in an Executive veto, and then we would have denied to thousands of deserving and going but struggling industries in this country any aid whatsoever.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I inform the Senator from Virginia that I have not been without a great many demands on me to take steps similar to the proposition of placing the Treasury behind these deposits all over the country, to return to those who had lost their deposits in the State banks as well as national banks.

I ask the Senator, under what law, by what authority now existing, could the Government take possession of the assets of State banks, or the securities behind these lost loans? In what manner could the Federal Government assume to take charge of these State institutions and force the stockholders to respond to the liability, or to collect from the assets such as the able Senator from Maryland alludes to, if there be such behind the loans? Where is there any law, may I ask the able Senator, acquainted with the subject from his long association with banking, under which the Federal Government could go into the States and take charge of banks which have failed?

Mr. GLASS. There is no law which would enable the Federal Government to take charge of nonmember banks, which largely outnumber member banks. If there were a law which would enable it to do so, it would be found on utter injustice. Why should the taxpayers of this country be required to go down into their pockets and pay losses of 7,000 banks over which the Federal Government has no control whatsoever? It has not even the poor privilege of sending one of its examiners into their establishment to find out whether they are doing an illicit, an irregular, or an honest business. Why should that be done? There is no consideration of justice that would warrant any such procedure.

Mr. President, I was not apprised of this proposed substitute for the amendment offered on Saturday; therefore, I cannot say literally what would be the attitude of the Comptroller of the Currency as to it, but I have in my hand a letter from him which utterly opposes the proposition presented by the Senator from New York on Saturday, and I ask to have it inserted in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. GLASS. I beg the Senate to understand that if Senators desire to do anything approaching that which is intended by this proposal, it should be done in a separate, independent bill, and not in the form of an amendment to the pending bill, thereby jeopardizing loans amounting to half a billion dollars through regular banking processes to the struggling industries of this country.

EXHIBIT 1

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 14, 1934.

DEAR SENATOR GLASS: You have asked for my reaction to amendment offered by Senator COPELAND, of New York, to amend section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act, and particularly that part of the amendment which will add a new subsection "z."

The funds available to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation consist of $150,000,000 appropriated from the Treasury for the capital stock, plus $139,299,556 received from Federal Reserve bank assessment payments and $39,373,449 received from bank assessments for the temporary fund. Paragraph (y) of the Banking Act provides that the Corporation shall refund to the member banks of the temporary fund all their assessments, less expenses of operation and liabilities incurred, which therefore makes unavailable the amount paid in for temporary insurance. The provisions of paragraph (o) of the act permit the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to issue notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations up to three times the amount of its capital. You will note that these securities would not be direct obligations of the United States Government and would not be guaranteed by the Government, and in my opinion they could only be floated at a great sacrifice. You will recall that under the Home Loan Act securities were issued, but the Government guaranteed the interest, and last summer these sold in a thin market at between 60 and 70 cents on the dollar. If securities were issued under the provisions of the bank act which had neither the principal nor the interest guaranteed by the Government, it is mere conjecture what they could be sold for. In other words, under the present wording of the law no one would urge that securities be issued.

Therefore, the rather small amount contributed by the Government to the banks, as compared with a commitment of $783,000,000 already made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on the assets of closed banks, both State and National in the United States, would give but small relief. Moreover, of those national banks which have gone into receivership since March 1, 1933, all have received loans where it is possible to make a loan except 155, and 144 of these will receive loans within 60 to 90 days.

Again, if the funds of this Corporation under direction of the Congress are to be used to purchase the assets of closed banks or to loan on closed banks, the depositors of the Nation would hardly be justified in having confidence in an insurance corporation which had no funds with which to pay the depositors of a closed bank in the event of a failure.

This bill contemplates purchase of or loans against the assets of these banks to be made on the basis of an appraisal of their values as considered under normal conditions, thus embodying the common erroneous conclusion that these assets have an undisclosed recovery value which will greatly increase their worth when conditions are improved. This conclusion overlooks the fact that in most cases the best of these assets have been liquidated and that much of that which remains consists of real estate and mortgages, the carrying of which involves a depreciation element that may more than offset recovery appreciation. They also consist in large part of ill-advised loans and investments, and what may be gained through economic recovery in one case may be lost in another by bankruptcy or death of the debtor.

I feel that nothing should be done to undermine or destroy, or even cast reflection on, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and that to carry out the provisions of the amendment referred to would certainly do so, for it would practically be advising the depositors of banks now insured that the insurance, due to lack of funds, was carried in what might be termed a "busted" corporation.

Very truly yours,

J. F. T. O'CONNOR, Comptroller.

Hon. CARTER GLASS,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to apply a few correcting sentences to the statement of the Senator from Virginia.

The Senator has made a powerful argument against proposals which are not pending in this motion at all; in fact, practically his entire argument is addressed to propositions which are not pending in connection with this proposal. He has argued against a pay-off bill which is pending in the House of Representatives, and which is unrelated in terms or otherwise, in any degree or fact, to the pending amendment. He has argued forcefully against another amendment which was submitted by the Senator from New York on Saturday, which is not now before the Senate, and which is not involved in the amendment now pending before the Senate.

There is no possibility of bankruptcy or anything related to bankruptcy of the Government in the pending amendment. There is nothing in the pending amendment which asks the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to acknowledge anything except fair liquidating value in the banks of the United States which have been closed. There is nothing in the pending amendment which does not leave the determination of that value to the judgment of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. There is nothing directly or indirectly which justifiably invites the use of the word "bankruptcy", or any paraphrase of it, in connection with the discussion of the pending amendment.

Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia suggests that this amendment may jeopardize the industrial loan bill. I should be the last man in the Chamber to jeopardize the industrial loan bill. The Senator from Virginia states that he is in position to assert that no legislation of a character similar to that which is now pending can finally become a law at the present time. I do not know whether or not he intends to apply that stricture literally to the pending amendment. I do not see how he could possibly know whether the pending amendment, which was only born an hour ago, falls within any such general category. I say to him, however, that if this amendment should go to conference, and the President of the United States should undertake to say that the industrial loan bill could not be signed with this amendment in the bill, I should consider the Senate conferees entirely justified in eliminating it.

I am not seeking to embarrass the industrial-loan bill, and I know that in this aspect I completely reflect the attitude of the Senator from New York. Neither are we contemplating one nickel's loss or burden to the Government of the United States in connection with the liquidation of these bank assets. We contemplate solely and only the maximum use of safe governmental credit for the purpose of giving the depositors of the country the maximum use of such portion of their deposits as can be liquidated at fair liquidating values.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in order that we may understand what it is that the Senator from Michigan is attempting to amend, I desire to read the first paragraph of section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as follows:

> To aid in financing agriculture, commerce, and industry, including facilitating the exportation of agricultural and other products, the Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans, upon such terms and conditions not inconsistent with this act as it may determine, to any bank, savings bank, trust company, building-and-loan association, insurance company, mortgage-loan company, credit union, Federal land bank, joint-stock land bank, Federal intermediate credit bank, agricultural credit corporation, livestock credit corporation, organized under the laws of any State or of the United States, including loans secured by the assets of any bank, savings bank, or building-and-loan association that is closed, or in process of liquidation to aid in the reorganization or liquidation of such banks or building-and-loan associations, upon application of the receiver or liquidating agent of such bank or building-and-loan association, and any receiver of any national bank is hereby authorized to contract for such loans and to pledge any assets of the bank for securing the same.

As the Senator from Virginia has already pointed out, under that authority nearly $800,000,000 have been loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the institutions named under the authority just read. It is now proposed to add another sentence in the following language:

> Notwithstanding any other provisions of law with respect to loans as aforesaid to receivers or liquidating agents for banks and savings banks that closed since January 1, 1933, and are in process of liquidation, the Corporation shall loan, in its discretion, 100 percent of the fair estimated liquidating value of the assets tendered as security for such loans, and shall charge interest thereon at a rate not to exceed 3½ percent per annum.

The words "in its discretion" have been interpolated, written in. As originally drawn, the amendment gave the Corporation no discretion either as to whether it should make the loan or as to the amount of the loan it should make.

Mr. President, we might as well look at this matter in a practical way. For a long time industries which are on the edge, which could not comply with the rigid banking requirements and meet the inspection and examination of bank examiners and the N.R.A. requirements also, as the Senator from Virginia suggests, have been asking Congress to liberalize the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in order that the Corporation may make loans directly where the circumstances justify it, by reason of the hope that the concerns may continue to operate and keep men in employment.

We realize that one of the original objects of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was to enable concerns to continue to employ men. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has done a great piece of work. Considering the amount of loans involved, and the condition of industry and of banks and of all those to whom loans were made under the authority of the act, I believe that there will be a smaller net loss ultimately to the Government than could have been brought about by any other similar organization, public or private, in the United States of America.

There is, and there has been, an insistent demand that industries not covered by the law at this time to be permitted to borrow money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, because they cannot borrow it from banks. I shall not criticize the banks for not loaning money to industries. Banks must confine their loans to what they believe to be sound loans. They must accept security which will pass the most scrutinous eye of a bank inspector or examiner. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has tried to meet the situation under this act, because it mentioned "mortgage-loan companies." All over the country efforts have been made by industries and concerns which needed money and could not go directly to the R.F.C. to go to it indirectly. By the process or the device of organizing a mortgage-loan company an effort has been made to borrow when otherwise it could not have been done.

Mr. President, in order to go as far as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation could possibly go in attempting to aid industry, it issued a circular, which I believe is known as "Circular No. 11", setting out the method by which such mortgage-loan companies might be organized, to be made up of the applicants for the loans themselves. There was a requirement that if there were as many as five persons forming the loan company they should each take 20 percent of the stock of the mortgage-loan company in order to qualify them to be members of the loan company, and to participate in the lending of money. There was a provision for a minimum of three. That made it necessary for each of the five concerns joining in the organization of a mortgage-loan company, for example, to qualify with respect to its individual condition to form the mortgage-loan company and get the money, paying in its 20 percent, which really meant a reduction of the actual net amount that each could borrow after having put in 20 percent as the stock of the mortgage-loan company before it could borrow a dollar. In other words, not less than three had to yoke themselves up together and all of them qualify by taking stock in the organization of the mortgage-loan company in order that any one of them might get money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

I have within my knowledge concerns in my State—and my attention has been brought to concerns in other States since this matter has been agitated—which are perfectly solvent, which are going concerns, which are employing labor, but which need additional money in order that they may buy raw materials, in order that they may even carry out contracts already in existence, in order that they may continue their men and take on more men, but because they are unable to find two other concerns in the same situation in order to form a mortgage loan company, they have been unable to borrow money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The pending bill as it has now been perfected by the amendment which was agreed to last Saturday allows every concern in this country to go as a single concern to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and lay its condition on the table before the Board of Directors, and, if entitled to it, to obtain a loan in its own name, without having to be yoked up to two or three other organizations in the community.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. This bill, in neither of the provisions referred to, proposes any new agency; no new bank is set up?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not at all.

Mr. CONNALLY. It merely utilizes the agencies already in existence?

Mr. BARKLEY. Just the agencies that are now in existence.

Mr. CONNALLY. Some time back it was mentioned that we were going to have a new system of what were called, I believe, "intercredit banks." This measure, as I understand, supplies the want which was supposed to make desirable the creation of intercredit banks.

Mr. BARKLEY. It was suggested originally that 12 regional banks should be set up in addition to the 12 Federal Reserve banks. It was at that time felt by some that probably that was a better scheme than to authorize direct loans by the Federal Reserve banks themselves, already in existence; but, after mature consideration the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, the chairman of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Banking and Currency Committee, and others, decided that there was no need to organize 12 more banks; that it would be simpler to authorize the Federal Reserve banks now in existence to make such direct loans for a period of 5 years, provided, of course, an individual concern could qualify by putting up security that would be sound and pass muster of the Federal Reserve banks. It is presumed that in all likelihood there will be greater liberality in making these loans than there has been heretofore; but under the law as it now exists the Federal Reserve banks and the member banks cannot make these long-term loans for as much as 5 years.

I have within my knowledge at least a score of industries in my own State which cannot borrow money from banks. Some of them already owe banks, and they cannot increase their borrowings; but they are solvent, and, if given a year or two or three, they may work out their industrial, economic, and financial system, keep their plants going, and keep their men employed. But they cannot do it on the short-term loan now authorized by law through banks, and they cannot obtain loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation directly.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GLASS. May I remind my colleague also that under existing law member banks may not rediscount such loans at the Federal Reserve banks, but under this bill, for the first time, every one of the nearly 7,000 member banks is authorized to rediscount loans of this nature at the Federal Reserve banks.

Mr. BARKLEY. I happen to know of some concerns in my State—and I mention my State because, of course, I know more about it, but I am sure every Senator here has had the same experience—the presidents of which have come here to borrow money but, on account of the rigid requirements of the law and on account of the fear that has naturally been engendered in the minds of bank officers and bank directors—they have been compelled to be more cautious since the opening of the banks after the bank holiday than they were previously—it has been an utter impossibility to provide loans for many deserving companies, that ought to be preserved, that ought to be allowed to work out their condition, that ought to be allowed to continue the employment of hundreds of thousands of men, rather than to throw them out on the streets and make them objects of charity, and have Congress forced to increase appropriations in order to feed and clothe them as a matter of charity. Therefore we have before us what is ordinarily known as the "Glass bill" which authorizes member banks and Federal Reserve banks to make these loans, requiring only that they must be sound loans.

Then we have considered the possibility that, under the strict rules of banking, realizing banking psychology, the psychology of the man behind the counter in a bank, who may expect a bank examiner to come along tomorrow to inspect the kind of collateral he has exacted as security for a loan, many of these concerns might not even be able to qualify to obtain loans from banks. Under those circumstances the amendment which was agreed to last Saturday authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, after a company needing money has exhausted all its power and opportunity to borrow money from banks, to make such loans. If the Reconstruction Finance Corporation believes, under all the circumstances, that aid ought to be rendered to that concern in order to keep it going, in order to keep its men employed, in order to give it additional capital, in order to buy raw material and turn out finished products, that Corporation has the power under the amendment to make the loan. That is only supplemental to the authority conferred by the original bill on the Federal Reserve banks and the member banks.

These two provisions supplement each other. They are utterly necessary. I have for a long time felt and contended that it would be better even for the Government to take a chance on losing some of the money which it might loan these concerns rather than to have them closed and thousands of men be thrown upon the streets to become objects of charity, and then, under the Civil Works program or some other relief program, appropriate money out of the same Treasury, which money would be given and not loaned, and from which we would obtain no return except the consciousness that we had not allowed men, women, and children to suffer from hunger or cold or for lack of shelter.

I want to say perfectly frankly that we all understand that in the other body of the Congress there has been for weeks pending a measure to pay the depositors in closed banks. It has been estimated by the Treasury, I believe, that, taking into consideration present values of the securities which might be put up and realized on by the Government, if the Government were to do this, it would involve a net loss of more than $1,000,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States.

In other words, after taking all the assets of the closed banks, liquidating those assets and realizing upon them, that bill would involve an expenditure, a gift, out of the Treasury of the United States of more than $1,000,000,000.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will yield in just a moment. It has been impossible—and I am not saying that in any criticism; I am simply stating a fact—it has been impossible to obtain a vote on that measure in the other body. It is well known that the President is opposed to it; that the Secretary of the Treasury is opposed to it; and that if it were passed independently or incorporated in this bill it would result in a veto. Now I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. I read in the newspaper a statement to the effect that Mr. Jones testified before the House committee some weeks ago that the minimum loss would be $2,500,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am trying to be as conservative as possible.

Mr. DILL. I have seen the other statement, but I thought that applied to a more recent situation.

Mr. BARKLEY. There has been a discrepancy as to the estimates of different agencies as to how much the actual loss would be.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I may interject there that Mr. Jones, perhaps, made the statement referred to by the Senator from Washington for the reason that Mr. Jones does not speak of these assets as "frozen" assets but as "lost" assets.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; that is the difference. However, what I am trying to do is to show that, even if the reasonable value could be realized upon these assets as they are now, we would lose anywhere from a billion to a billion and a half dollars by this transaction.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to his colleague?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I am trying my very best to find out how I should vote on this amendment. I have listened to my colleague, and also to the Senator from Virginia, and I am wondering is this amendment substantially the same as the McLeod bill, which is pending in the House. As I understand, this amendment simply says to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that if a receiver has been appointed for a bank and the assets of that bank certainly are reasonably worth half the face value of the assets, then the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may loan to that bank sufficient money to pay the depositors so far as it will, and then that the receiver shall collect and pay back the money to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. If that be the provision of this amendment, it would not compel the payment of billions of dollars; and it seems to me it would not compel the loss of a cent, unless there was bad judgment on the part of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have made no contention that the amendment as now drawn is the same as the McLeod bill. The contention I am making is that if we put the amendment or any similar amendment on the bill and it goes to the House of Representatives it will open up the whole situation and the McLeod bill may be offered as a substitute and a vote taken upon it. If such a substitute should be adopted then it would not be in conference. The conferees could not strike it out. The hands of our conferees would be tied. They would have to accept this amendment or the McLeod bill or something between the two, but they could not eliminate both propositions from the bill. That is the parliamentary danger. I think we might as well have it in mind when we vote on the pending amendment.

Then, infinitely more important it is that we should get some measure through that will become a law, that will bring immediate aid to hundreds of thousands of perfectly solvent business institutions in the country to enable them to keep producing goods, to keep men employed, and to fulfill their contracts than it is for us to try to adopt some provision which cannot become a law but which will probably jeopardize any assistance whatever that we might be able to afford by reason of the other provisions of the bill.

The making of loans is not a discretionary matter under the amendment. An amendment may always be changed or modified. The amendment provides that "The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, notwithstanding any other provision of law, shall in its discretion", and so forth. I do not exactly understand how the word "shall" in connection with the words "in its discretion" will be interpreted. I doubt whether the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has discretion to make loans or to figure the amount, because the amendment provides that they shall make the loans to the extent of 100 percent of the appraised value of the assets held by the bank.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I want to see if my understanding is correct. Under the law as it now is, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation could lend on a 100-percent appraisal if they so desired, but the amendment would make it mandatory that they lend a full 100 percent on any appraisal that is made. Is not that the difference?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true. Even if we admit that they have the discretion to make the loan, they would have no discretion as to the amount. They would be compelled under the terms of the amendment to lend 100 percent. That may or may not be enough to pay off the depositors.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I dare say; and I assume that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] both recall the joint measure of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and myself which assumed to offer a remedy to general business by business loans from the Government, and thus that I am not unacquainted with what must have been the studied efforts in connection with the measure now under consideration, as this bill embodies the Fletcher-Lewis measure and its spirit. I ask the Senator from Kentucky, is not the meaning of the suggestion of the Senator and that of the Senator from Virginia that if the bill, which now affords a remedy to business institutions, to give them an opportunity directly to borrow that they may continue building themselves up or initiating their new operations, should have attached to it the amendment now pending, such would so complicate the measure, and invite other amendments with it, as to jeopardize the principal measure allowing business loans and of itself failing of enactment before the session should end?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has stated the situation exactly. The Committee on Banking and Currency has not given any consideration to the matter of the amendment. There has been much publicity with reference to a bill on the subject pending in another body, but the committee has not given any consideration to it. It has not had the opportunity to do it. It has not had the time to do it. Certainly we cannot or should not vote blindly here to place upon the Treasury of the United States the possibility of being compelled to lose a billion dollars.

I have no way to predict what may happen in conference to the amendment or what changes may be made if it shall be adopted. What I am saying about the particular amendment now pending applies to any other amendment of a similar character that may be offered. When we have adopted it we may have opened up a Pandora's box. No one knows the form the legislation might take before it reaches the White House for signature or disapproval if the amendment is attached to the bill, which, as everybody admits, is meritorious and is needed.

Industry all over the country is watching the vote here today to know whether tomorrow or next week it may make application for loans which it has been trying for months to get. If we load down the bill with something in the form of an amendment that may defeat any relief whatever, we will have rendered no service either to industry or to labor or to agriculture or to the people of the United States. On the contrary, we may have a larger bill for relief than we have ever had heretofore.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say about the amendment. I hope we may not lose sight of the possibilities involved in the proposed legislation and in its defeat either here or elsewhere. I hope, therefore, the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I assume from what the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] said in closing that he is opposed to the amendment. Much of what he said had nothing to do with the amendment. We have heard about what is happening in the House of Representatives, but we are not talking about events there.

This is a simple amendment which may properly be considered by the Senate. Unless it is considered here it will not be considered anywhere. The Senator from Kentucky said the Finance Committee has no time to give to extraneous matters and consequently cannot consider this. Therefore, the only place in the world we have to get any relief, and limited relief at that, for the depositors in the closed banks is through an amendment to the pending measure such as is now pending and under consideration.

It has been intimated that those of us who wish to amend the bill are somehow or other opposed to it. I am not opposed to the pending bill. On the contrary, I am heartily in favor of it. If we cannot get the banks to function as banks instead of pawnshops, it is necessary for the Government to go into the business of lending money for the sake of industrial restoration. I am heartily in favor of the bill. I believe it is a bill which together with the liberalization of the Securities Act we passed the other day will do much to restore prosperity.

It is my judgment that if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and myself were to be adopted it would relieve the Government from the necessity of lending much of the money that it will have to lend under the operation of the bill if the amendment is not adopted. In short, our amendment will help the measure, not hurt it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, the money would be furnished by the Government anyway, but it would come out of a different spigot.

Mr. COPELAND. It does not make any difference out of which spigot it comes, it comes out of the Government Treasury anyhow. Money is just as likely to be lost under the pending bill as under the amendment which we have proposed. Could the Senator from Kentucky rise in his place and guarantee that the money raised under the bill would ever be returned 100 percent to the Government?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, not; any more than I can guarantee that I will be able to pay the notes that I owe or the notes that anybody else owes. No one can guarantee such a thing. However, I believe there will be a minimum of loss with respect to the loans under both sections of the bill we are now considering, a much smaller loss than under any other loans that have been made by the Government of the United States during the last 2 or 3 years.

Mr. COPELAND. Without any disrespect to the Senator from Kentucky I confess that I have greater confidence in the ability of the Government of the United States to pay its obligations than I have in the ability of any Senator to meet his obligations.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am perfectly willing to accept the observation; but it is not a question of passing on the responsibility of any Member or Members of this body or anyone outside of this body. The point is that under the bill which we are now considering we are providing a safeguard, so far as safeguards may be provided, for loans to industry. The proposal of the Senator covers an entirely different field. It has no connection with the proposal contained in the bill, except the possibility that under his amendment some industry might be able to get money out of a bank that is now tied up, and therefore might not have to borrow money; but in order to get it out of the bank even under his amendment, the Government of the United States has to put up the money.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator talks about "safeguards"; exactly the same safeguards are attaching to the pending amendment as to the bill itself.

Under the pending amendment, the assets of a bank could be appraised and dealt with, not as assets to be liquidated tomorrow or next week but assets which may be liquidated next year, or the year after. It is not proposed that the Government shall give money to these banks. It is not proposed that the Government shall reimburse depositors in these banks, except so far as reimbursement shall come from the orderly liquidation of the assets in the possession of the banks.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is proposed, however, to advance money to banks over which the Government of the United States has never had any supervision, and has none now; with reference to deposits in which the United States Government never has held out any inducement to the public; to whom the Government of the United States owes no legal or moral obligation. They may be assets of an entirely different nature from those that are in banks supervised by the United States.

In view of the fact that the Government of the United States has never exercised any control over State banks, and that national-bank examiners have never gone into them, does the Senator think that the Government is under any obligation to include them in a general omnibus provision that all banks, trust companies, and savings banks shall be allowed to put up their assets, come to the Treasury, and get money? Does the Senator believe that that is as important as it is now to save industries which are right on the ragged edge, and which, if given credit, can save themselves?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky would make exactly the same argument if we were to limit the amendment to the national banks; and he is proposing to lend to industry, to establishments in which we have no interest, direct or indirect, except so far as giving employment may be concerned. The Senator splits hairs.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is the main object——

Mr. COPELAND. I am not going to yield to the Senator simply to bandy words. I am here for a serious purpose, just as serious as that of the Senator from Kentucky, to try to relieve distress and to try to put money into circulation, and thereby to restore prosperity so far as it can be done in that way. I have just as sincere a purpose in my heart as that in the heart of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. President, it is not at all a question of whether there is an obligation upon the Federal Treasury to deal with the assets of these State banks. There is not any obligation upon the Federal Treasury to give work to those who are out of employment. There is no obligation upon the Federal Treasury to put destitute artists at work. There is no direct obligation to do hundreds of things that we have been doing. There is no obligation upon the Federal Treasury to make loans to agriculture. There is no obligation upon the Federal Treasury to make many other loans that we have made. But if we can lend money under proper safeguards upon the assets of closed banks—assets which are capable of slow liquidation, but 100 percent liquidation—we shall put that much money into circulation at once, and have money to do many of the things which will be done by the Federal Government under the terms of the pending bill.

I realize, Mr. President, that we are up against a stone wall. An effort is made to becloud the issue by trying to make it appear that we are proposing here the same thing which the McLeod bill proposes in the House. We have pointed at us the gun of a possible veto. Is that the way to legislate, Senators? Is it not our constitutional duty to use our very best efforts as legislators to do those things which we believe make for the prosperity of our country and for the common welfare? Are we to be turned aside simply because somebody dreams that if we do thus and so there will be an executive veto?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. DILL. I am not concerned about whether or not the President will veto a bill. I am concerned about the wisdom, about the justice, about the fairness of imposing on the Treasury a burden of large amounts, that must be met by taxing all the citizens, because of the incompetency in some cases, the downright fraud and criminality in other cases, of those who had charge of banks.

Mr. COPELAND. Did the Senator question the propriety of lending money to the railroads, or lending money to great, big banks?

Mr. DILL. I should be opposed to lending it without any chance of getting it back except by taxing the taxpayers.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator believe that that is what the Senator from Michigan and I are trying to do?

Mr. DILL. I do not see how this bill can be carried out without a certain loss to the Treasury; and that loss must be made up by taxing all the people to make up for the bad deposits of certain people.

Mr. COPELAND. I am not discussing the bill. I am discussing an amendment; and the amendment proposes that the assets shall be appraised, by whom? By the lending agency.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. FESS. The proposition to release funds that are in closed banks has a great appeal; first, because without doubt it would be more widely applicable to conditions from which many people are suffering than most of the amendments that have been suggested, if it is a proper function for the Government to participate in this sort of thing. I have been afraid of that, and I have so stated to those interested who consulted me about it. Furthermore, if this is a proper function of the Government, will not the Senator agree that it would have to apply to loan associations just the same as to closed banks?

Mr. COPELAND. Let me say to my friend from Ohio that we will suppose there is a bank at Akron that has a million dollars' worth of good assets. It is proposed to take the assets which are conservatively appraised as being possible of liquidation over a period of a year or 2 or 3 years—not worthless assets, not things that are "cats and dogs", not things that should be thrown out of the window—but instead of taking them and appraising them at their current value to appraise them at a liquidating value when that liquidation extends over a longer period of time than is customary in ordinary bank practice.

The reason there is so much confusion here—because so many Senators believe, as the Senator from Ohio believes, that we are trying to present here the McLeod bill. That is not the case.

Mr. FESS. No; I understand that. There is, however, inevitable loss to the Government in this proposal, is there not?

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think so.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The amendment now pending, of which there are no printed copies, is as follows:

> The Corporation shall loan, in its discretion, 100 percent of the fair estimated liquidating value of the assets tendered as security for such loans, and shall charge interest thereon at a rate not to exceed 3½ percent per annum.

Mr. President, who ever heard of loaning 100 percent of the estimated value of any security? Manifestly, it is not intended as an ordinary loan. It is intended to secure funds only a part of which can be realized from the assets. I never knew of a case in which 100 percent was loaned on the estimated value of the security, especially security of this character, in which all of it was collected.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have not the floor. The Senator from New York was good enough to yield to me.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is impossible for anyone to go down to a bank now and take securities that are liquid and that might be sold tomorrow and borrow 100 percent on them.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is no discretion as to the amount that must be loaned. After the estimated value is ascertained, 100 percent of it must be loaned.

Mr. DILL. The liquidating value?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; the Senator from Washington calls my attention to the fact that it is the liquidating value, whatever that may be.

Mr. BARKLEY. Which would not be as great as the normal value.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Oh, no; certainly not.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, not only that, if I may interrupt——

Mr. COPELAND. Go ahead. The floor means nothing to me.

Mr. GLASS. The Government has not been able to borrow money at 3½ percent itself; and if we keep on at the rate of our expenditures, the Government may not be able to borrow money at 4½ percent; and therefore the Government would lose money on every transaction.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; and evidently that is the purpose of the amendment—to give the closed banks the benefit of a liability on the part of the Government upon which the Government itself could not realize.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am inclined to agree with the proposition that there would be loss under this amendment, but I am equally certain that if those are assisted who need assistance, there will be loss under the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Government body or agency or official were to go into a bank and say, "This group of securities we regard as good enough to justify us in lending you 75 percent of their value", if they had not been appraised with some degree of accuracy and reliability and dependability, it would be bad business to lend anything whatever upon them. If the loan is "rotten", as has been said, at 100 percent, then it is 75-percent rotten at 75 percent; it is not good business to lend upon securities appraised by the experts at materially less than the proposed loan rate, it makes no difference whether the loan is 50 percent of the appraised value or 100 percent. So I think we are splitting hairs when we talk about that.

On the other hand, in this day we are spending millions, even billions, of the people's money, with no regard whatever to the return of that money. Certainly when we put money into the C.W.A. we never expected to get any of it back; very much of the money we have loaned through the Public Works Administration we will never get back; much of the money we will lend under the pending bill we will never see again. There is no hope or expectation that there will be 100-percent return upon any of these investments of the Government.

What is there that makes the depositor in the bank anathema? Why do we consider that his equity, and the security which is back of it, shall be disregarded when we give millions and billions for other purposes?

Mr. President, I do not delude myself one bit. I know that the fear of the substitution at the other end of the Capitol of a more radical measure will influence some, and the prospects of a veto will influence others; but, I say in all respect, those fears mean nothing to me. I can see no impropriety, I can see nothing that can be regarded as bad business, I can see nothing that is unstatesmanlike, in making available to the depositors in the hundreds of closed banks of the United States some measure of return of the life savings which they have placed there.

The amendment presented by the Senator from Michigan and myself has safeguarded the Government as far as may be. We have asked that the assets be appraised, and when they have been appraised and found deserving of a loan, that the loan shall be 100 percent instead of 50, or 60, or 75, or 80 percent. Then, if a loss comes, if the appraisement has been 80 percent, there will be a loss of 80 percent; if the appraisement is 100 percent, there will be a loss of 100 percent.

Mr. President, I shall not go further into the matter. I would not do one thing to embarrass the pending bill. We need to have these long-term loans to industry. The heavy industries cannot hope to operate without working capital, which they cannot get from the banks. Therefore, I am willing to hazard some more of the money of Uncle Sam and shall vote for the measure. We have not hestitated to hazard a lot of his money, we have not hesitated to put a lot of it where it is extremely probable it will never come back, but I do think that we ought to give this much consideration to the depositors in the closed banks of this country. Therefore I hope the amendment which the Senator from Michigan and I have proposed may be agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	Hatfield	Patterson
Ashurst	Copeland	Hayden	Robinson, Ark.
Austin	Costigan	Hebert	Robinson, Ind.
Bachman	Couzens	Johnson	Schall
Bailey	Davis	Kean	Shipstead
Barbour	Dickinson	King	Steiwer
Barkley	Dill	Lewis	Stephens
Black	Erickson	Logan	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Fess	Lonergan	Thomas, Utah
Borah	Fletcher	McCarran	Thompson
Bulkley	Frazier	McGill	Townsend
Bulow	George	McKellar	Tydings
Byrd	Gibson	McNary	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Glass	Metcalf	Van Nuys
Capper	Goldsborough	Murphy	Walsh
Carey	Hale	Norris	Wheeler
Clark	Harrison	O'Mahoney	White
Connally	Hatch	Overton

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to reannounce on this roll call the absence of the Senators whose absence has heretofore been announced by me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-one Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words in behalf of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] and my colleague [Mr. VANDENBERG]. I do so because I have been a consistent and vigorous defender of the Treasury Department. Every measure which has come before the Committee on Banking and Currency which, in my judgment, would be injurious to the Government credit, or would entail losses to the Government, I have vigorously opposed. I think the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] will recall that over a period of years I have opposed industrial loans from the Government unless provision were made for limited loans on what we believed to be adequate security.

The distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] have argued that the amendment is inconsistent with the bill which is now pending as it has been amended. It is true that the committee as such has not dealt with this problem, but the committee does know emphatically the needs of industry, and even the conservative distinguished Senator from Virginia and myself joined in reporting the measure added to the pending bill, which would authorize the R.F.C. to make industrial loans.

Mr. President, I happen to have a list of 1,100 depositors in one large closed bank. The release of some of that money, with the Government adequately secured, would obviate the necessity of some of the industrial loans provided under the Glass bill and the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida. These two amendments belong to the same piece of legislation. In other words, I would rather that the depositor, the industrialist, get his own money out of a closed bank and use it himself for the development of his industry than to have him go to the R.F.C. and borrow money on what seems in many cases to be inadequate, at least doubtful, security.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to ask the Senator whether in the case of the particular closed bank to which he refers, R.F.C. loans have not been made to it.

Mr. COUZENS. That is true. I do not deny that; but I state that there has been an undue hesitancy upon the part of some of the receivers or liquidators or conservators of these banks, on the theory that it costs too much in interest. The Senator from Florida knows that I have, under his jurisdiction, made some inquiries into the loans made by the R.F.C. during the closing months of the last year. The Senate also will remember that I was chairman of a committee which was authorized to make an investigation of the R.F.C. loans, and in the early part of 1933 the committee made a report in which we said we could not find any illegal or improper loans.

When it comes to a question of judgment as to whether the loans are adequately secured, one person's judgment is as good as that of another during these periods of distress.

There is nothing mandatory about this provision, and there is no danger of the credit of the Government being broken, as suggested by some of the Senators, because there is nothing in the amendment which increases the loaning power of the R.F.C. The law already provides the limit which the R.F.C. may lend. The only difference between existing law and the amendment is that the amendment expresses to the Board of Directors of the R.F.C. the opinion of Congress that they ought to be more liberal in their loans. I can verify the fact that they have not been any too liberal up to date.

I am not finding fault. I know that they are lending the Government's credit at least, if not its money; and I have insisted that, so far as humanly possible, the Government be adequately protected. This amendment, I believe, does provide adequate security for any loan the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may make to any bank after this time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan read that feature of the amendment?

Mr. COUZENS. It reads as follows:

> Notwithstanding any other provisions of law with respect to loans as aforesaid to receivers or liquidating agents for banks and savings banks that closed since January 1, 1933, and are in process of liquidation, the Corporation shall loan, in its discretion, 100 percent of the fair estimated liquidating value—

I submit that when we broaden the language the sole discretion is with them, not only as to whether they shall make the loans at all but as to fixing the fair estimated liquidating value; and if I were a director of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, I should certainly see that the Government was protected, either by refusing the loan at all or by seeing that the fair estimated liquidating value did not unduly hazard the Government's credit.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, do I understand that if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should estimate the value of these securities, it would still have discretion as to whether or not it would make the loan?

Mr. COUZENS. Absolutely.

Mr. BORAH. I should want to have the provision more mandatory than that.

Mr. COUZENS. It cannot be made any more mandatory, because, if it were made more mandatory, its purpose would be defeated. Whenever the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are told, "You must make a loan", and it is left discretionary with them to fix the value, and they are determined in advance not to make the loan, they will fix the value so low that no relief at all can be given.

Mr. BORAH. That is very likely true; but on the other hand, they will not make any of these loans, in my judgment, under the pending amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. It absolutely is discretionary, no matter how the amendment is worded, because so long as it is left to the judicial judgment of the board of directors of the R.F.C. they can do as they choose in the matter.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me, Mr. President, that the defect of the bill and of the amendment is that those who really need help, the small industries of the country, will not get it.

Mr. COUZENS. I do not know whether the Senator is familiar with this subject or not, but I know that the Senator apparently injects himself into a subject which he has not thoroughly analyzed. I happen to have studied this subject for a period of years. I see the Senator's name blazoned in the headlines of the newspapers as endorsing the infamous McLeod bill. I do not know how accurate the newspapers are in making that statement; but anyone who is so lacking in judgment as to endorse the so-called "McLeod bill" is not entitled, in my judgment, to vote on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I asked the Senator a civil question.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; and I am answering the civil question; but the Senator attacks my premises, and I have a right to argue with him.

Mr. BORAH. Certainly the Senator has; but what I am saying is that under the terms of this bill, the question of making the loan being left entirely discretionary with the R.F.C., it does not seem to me that the small businesses of the country, those which really need help, are likely to get help. If the Senator thinks otherwise, I shall be delighted to have his views.

Mr. COUZENS. As I said before the Senator interrupted me, under the bill introduced by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], it is discretionary with the R.F.C. as to whether or not it will loan these concerns any money at all. It is wholly discretionary with the Corporation as to whether the credit is adequate. I said that I preferred to have a depositor get his money out of a closed bank with reasonable security to the Government, rather than to loan the money direct on his plant or other security. In other words, as I stated, I looked over 1,100 deposits, many of the owners of which could have continued their industries and could have augmented their employment if they had been able to obtain a reasonable amount of their so-called "frozen deposits." This is just a sort of yardstick, a measurement, conveyed by the Congress to the board of directors of the R.F.C. as to what we hope they will do. That is all we have ever done in connection with any similar legislation enacted by Congress.

Mr. BORAH. Without this amendment they could make these loans just the same.

Mr. COUZENS. Oh, yes; but the provisions of law so far have used the language "adequately secured", without fixing any yardstick as to how the securities shall be evaluated. This is the first time any provision of law has been suggested which sets a yardstick to guide the R.F.C. in fixing values, and that is the only reason why I am for it. I agree with the Senator from Idaho that under all the provisions of the law up to date substantially this could have been done. However, in this amendment we propose to set up a yardstick to measure the judgment of the R.F.C.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the Senator how he understands this amendment would operate? Would a receiver of a closed bank bring his assets to the R.F.C. and have them make an appraisal of those assets; and when they find the total value of the assets are they authorized to make a loan of that amount, or are they authorized to pay over to the receiver that amount and take over the assets themselves?

Mr. COUZENS. That is exactly what it provides.

Mr. WALSH. So that there is discretion in the R.F.C. in determining what is the total value of all the assets of a closed bank?

Mr. COUZENS. It does not necessarily say the entire assets of a closed bank. It says that it may loan 100 percent of the "fair estimated liquidating value."

Mr. WALSH. The complaint which is made now is that they have only been lending 50 or 60 percent, more or less, of the fair value.

Mr. COUZENS. In other words—and I have supported them generally in their attitude—they have been taking every measure to protect the Government's credit and the Government's or the taxpayer's money.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to ask the Senator a further question. Under this amendment, are the assets actually transferred to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or are they held as a lien?

Mr. COUZENS. They are actually deposited in one of the Federal Reserve banks, as a rule, as agent for the R.F.C. In other words, the R.F.C. retains the collateral as security for the loan.

Mr. WALSH. Would the R.F.C. perform the duty of liquidating by selling these assets from time to time?

Mr. COUZENS. That is not usually the case if a bank is still in liquidation. If a bank winds up its affairs and its debts are discharged, as in the case of one or two banks of which I know, the R.F.C. does the liquidating; but this proposal does not set up any means by which the liquidation of the assets shall be made, whether by the R.F.C. or by the conservator or by the receiver or by the liquidator of a closed bank. It would depend on the circumstances.

Mr. WALSH. The important feature of the amendment is that the R.F.C. will loan to the amount of 100 percent of the assets as they may determine and according to the liquidating value they may fix.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; and the only difference I want to point out to the Senator from Massachusetts is that in no previous legislation have we set up any yardstick to fix the value. In this particular amendment—and that is one of the reasons I am supporting it—we say, "After you have fixed the 'fair estimated liquidating value', you are then permitted to loan up to 100 percent."

Mr. WALSH. Does not the Senator think that the words "liquidating value" give a great deal of latitude in fixing the loan to the board?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; and I want them to have latitude.

Mr. WALSH. I know the Senator does. I thank him for permitting me to interrupt him.

Mr. COUZENS. So that there are many things which, under this provision, the R.F.C. could do which I do not think they are now inclined to do, because the Congress has never heretofore directed them as to how they should measure or value such assets.

When it comes to the McLeod bill, so called, I want to say that I have written thousands of letters and made thousands of statements in opposition to any such absurd proposal as paying out 100 percent to all the depositors, regardless of the value of the assets of the banks.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I ask whether the amendment proposed fixes any date as of which the liquidating value may be determined?

Mr. COUZENS. Oh, I assume that it would be as of the time of the application. It may not be for a year or it may be at the time the application would be made, at which time the board of directors of the R.F.C.. would fix the liquidating value.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course there would necessarily be some date fixed as of which the estimated liquidating value should be determined, for the liquidating value might be considerably less at the time of the application than 6 months or a year thereafter.

Mr. COUZENS. The amendment does not provide any time within which the value shall be fixed. I assume that the fair liquidating value cannot be fixed at any other time than the time when the loan is being considered.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And under the amendment it is within the scope of the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to determine whether or not a loan shall be made and what estimate shall be placed upon the value of the assets?

Mr. COUZENS. That is quite true. I may say further that the appraisers or the board of directors of the R.F.C. in making a loan may estimate the value of the assets 2 or 3 years hence, dependent upon the maturity of the loan. I think that is probably what the Senator was getting at, and which I did not quite comprehend at the time.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is exactly it; but there is nothing in the amendment to direct the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that it may do so; that is to say, estimate the value as of some future date.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the amendment speaks for itself, because it says "the fair liquidating value." So I assume that an intelligent interpretation would mean that the time when the loan came due could be taken into consideration in estimating the fair liquidating value.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I assume that the whole purpose is to enable the receiver to pay off the depositors?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; so far as possible and without any risk to the Government.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So that under the amendment, as it is drawn, it could be effective or ineffective, just as the board might decide in fixing the values.

Mr. COUZENS. There is another qualification as to that, because the receivers of a national bank are unable to make applications for a loan without the consent of the Comptroller of the Currency; so that if the Comptroller of the Currency decided that he did not want any loans made under this amendment he could prohibit the receiver from making application.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, what becomes of a yardstick that may be reduced one half in, say, a period of 3 years?

Mr. COUZENS. The same thing may happen when one buys a piece of real estate or a bond which may be reduced by 50 percent in time if the situation so develops.

Mr. GLASS. I understand that; but that is not the way banking business is conducted.

Mr. COUZENS. It is the way is has been conducted.

Mr. GLASS. Nobody makes a loan of 100 percent on the value of real estate, a loan which may run for 3 or 5 years. Nobody, certainly, makes a 100-percent loan at the low rate of interest of 3 percent when the Government of the United States finds itself unable to borrow money at 3 percent.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator overlooks the fact that we have raised the rate in the amendment to 3½ percent.

Mr. GLASS. Very well; 3½ percent.

Mr. COUZENS. I would be just as satisfied with 4 percent. As I said at the beginning of my statement, I do not want the Government to lose a nickel, and I do not propose to endorse any legislation by which the Government will lose a nickel, either in the matter of interest or the matter of security.

Mr. GLASS. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that he says he has written thousands of letters against the McLeod bill.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. And he pronounced an extremely harsh judgment upon any Senator who would favor the McLeod bill.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. He went so far as to say that a Senator was unworthy of a seat in this Chamber if he favored the McLeod bill. Yet the Senator from Michigan is supporting an amendment to this bill which not only conceivably but, in my judgment, will inevitably disturb the parliamentary situation in another branch of the Congress and enable them to attach the McLeod bill to this bill.

Mr. COUZENS. Let me say to the Senator that no conference report can be adopted until the Senate agrees to it.

Mr. GLASS. And that would mean that the thousands of small industries in this country, for which in this bill we are providing a capital fund of more than a half billion dollars, would be denied this form of assistance; and the banks of the country, for which we are providing a great liberalization in connection with the eligilibity of rediscountable paper, would be unable for a moment to afford any assistance to small struggling industries.

Mr. COUZENS. Oh, the Senator overlooks the fact that he has defended over and over again here his own act by which the Federal Reserve banks have been equipped and enabled to lend money to industries direct for over a period of years; and yet the Federal Reserve banks have made no loans under that provision of the law; and I doubt whether they will make any loans under the so-called "new Glass bill."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to inquire of the Senator if the language "liquidating value" does not permit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to take into consideration all the elements of uncertainty which the able Senator from Virginia has mentioned?

Mr. COUZENS. I am quite convinced of that, or I should not be supporting this amendment. I am not up for election; I am not supporting this bill in order to get votes, because otherwise I would be supporting the so-called "McLeod bill"; but this is a provision which not only helps the bill proposed by the Senator from Virginia and the proposal of the Senator from Florida, but it assists them, because it augments and releases money for industries which the Senators referred to want to help.

Mr. GLASS. It does not only not assist them——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. It does not only not assist them, but it actually jeopardizes the bill itself and threatens all struggling industries with an actual inability to make any loans under the bill which we propose.

Mr. COUZENS. Of course, I disagree with the Senator from Virginia in that respect, because——

Mr. GLASS. That is what I am standing up for; to disagree with the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. I recognize that. I want to point out——

Mr. GLASS. Not only that, but let me point this out to the Senator——

Mr. COUZENS. Let me do my pointing out first.

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. COUZENS. My colleague, when he proposed this amendment in cooperation with the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], stated that if the President should notify the conferees that this proposal was out of harmony with his financial program or that he resisted this amendment, so far as he was concerned, he would be glad to have the conferees yield on the amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. Assuming, which I do not assume, that the President would approve this amendment, there might be attached to the bill in the other House an amendment which the President would inevitably veto. Then we would have no bill at all; we would have no relief for struggling small industries in this country at all; we would have no liberalization in the case of the member banks of eligible paper which might be rediscounted at the Federal Reserve banks. We have criticized—and nobody more bitterly than I—the failure of the member banks to finance and to make loans; yet I realize that they also have their viewpoint. But they are not authorized to make the character of loans provided under the pending bill; and this bill would make them more willing, if not more anxious, to make loans, because they could rediscount at the Federal Reserve banks. The Federal Reserve banks now are doing nothing in the world but financing the Government of the United States. They are not financing business; they are buying United States bonds. They have scarcely got $300,000,000 of eligible commercial paper in their portfolios. Now we are trying to liberalize the definition of eligible paper so that member banks may make these loans with the assurance that they can go to the Federal Reserve banks and rediscount them for a period of 3 years, and yet the effort is being made to load it up with something that might, that will, inevitably endanger the whole measure.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator, of course, is entitled to his own opinion, and so am I; but if I recognize the situation in the other body which the Senator fears so much, the Banking and Currency Committee in the House has blocked consideration of the so-called "McLeod bill", and, in that event, they would not, of course, consent to a modification or change in the provision.

Mr. GLASS. But it would come on the floor of the House. The Banking and Currency Committee would not have anything to do with it if it should come on the floor of the House as an amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. They do not always, under the rules of the House, if I understand them, give a chance for the offering of such amendments on the floor.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator is assuming a great deal with respect to the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] on behalf of himself and the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND].

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PATTERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who is necessarily absent. Therefore I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] and vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS. I reannounce the absences of the several Senators whose absences I have heretofore announced, and the reasons therefor.

I announce the necessary absence of my colleague the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], whose pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has just been announced.

Mr. BONE. I beg to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] on official business and to advise that, were he present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BULOW (after having voted in the negative). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and let my vote stand.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING];

The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS];

The Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT]; and

The junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN] with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES].

I also desire to announce the special pair of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE]. If present the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] would vote "nay" and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] would vote "yea."

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] are necessarily absent on official business.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that the following-named Senators are necessarily detained from the Senate: The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT].

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—34

Ashurst	Erickson	Kean	Stephens
Austin	Frazier	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Barbour	Gibson	McNary	Thomas, Utah

So Mr. VANDENBERG's amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 9, after line 6, to insert the following new section:

SEC. —. Section 12 (B) of the Federal Reserve Act is hereby amended by inserting in the first sentence of the second paragraph of subsection (y), immediately after the words "District of Columbia", the following: "And the Territory of Hawaii."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is merely to give to the Territory of Hawaii the benefits of the temporary legislation.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I see no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert in the bill, at the proper place, the following:

Provided, That it shall be unlawful for any Federal, State, county, or municipal official, any member of any National, State, or county committee of any political party, or any other person except a bona fide and regularly employed officer, agent, or employee of the person or corporation seeking a loan under the provisions of this section, to seek to influence in any way any agent, officer, or employee of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in connection with a loan or any application therefor, under the provisions of this section, and if such unlawful influence is used, the person or corporation seeking such loan shall be disqualified.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it was impossible to get the full import of the amendment from hearing it read. Is this the amendment which would make it impossible for any Member of the House or the Senate to call up any member of any of these boards and make an appointment for a constituent to go down and talk to him about a loan?

Mr. BLACK. I shall be very glad to explain the amendment. It would make it illegal for anyone, whether he be a Senator or a Representative or anyone else, to seek to exercise political influence to secure a loan from the United States Government. That is the object and purpose of the amendment.

We are proposing here a new departure. We have advanced now to the stage which many of us predicted we would reach when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill first came up, where it is proposed to loan to private industry out of the taxpayers' money. Of course we are providing only about $250,000,000 out of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation fund. My own prediction is that we shall have applications for about $40,000,000,000.

Someone must decide who shall get these loans. I believe that if the Government, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, is to go into the business of lending money to private industry, it should do so wholly free from any influence except a careful study on the part of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of the merits of the applicant.

Speaking in reply to my friend from Kentucky, I do not believe that it is, or should be, the business of any Senator or any Representative or any national committeeman or any public official to seek to exercise any polictical influence in an effort to have a loan granted to an applicant.

That is the purpose of the amendment. If it is our desire to have Government loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on the basis of political influence rather than on the basis of merit, of course the amendment should not be adopted. If, on the contrary, in lending the money of the American taxpayers to the industrial activities of the Nation, we propose to have it loaned on the merit of the applicant rather than on the request of a Senator or a Representative or a national committeeman or any other influential man in politics or business, the amendment should be adopted.

That is the entire object of the amendment. Does that answer the question of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will take the floor after the Senator from Alabama shall have concluded his remarks.

Mr. BLACK. I shall not make any further remarks at this time. If there shall be any objection to the amendment, I shall desire the privilege of the floor again. I did not anticipate that there would be any objection to it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I realize the good faith of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] in proposing this amendment. Of course, what the amendment really does, in effect—and that is probably its purpose—is to furnish Members of Congress an alibi to explain to their constituents why they cannot take up matters before a department that has to do with a loan or accommodation under the terms of this measure.

If this amendment shall be adopted, it will make it necessary for everybody who makes an application for a loan to employ a lawyer. If this amendment shall be adopted, it will be unlawful for me to call up any member of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and make an appointment for a constituent of mine to go down there and talk about a loan for fear I shall be accused of using political influence. This amendment would be a fine thing for the lawyers in Washington; but there are many industries and many institutions in the country that are on the ragged edge and have not the money to come here and employ high-priced lawyers to recommend them before the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or before a Federal Reserve bank. The amendment includes all the Federal Reserve banks, and all the member banks, and all the agencies of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation itself.

I am not so afraid of any influence that I have over anybody in Washington that I am unwilling to call up over the telephone, or even take a constituent of mine down there and introduce him, if he has a public matter that he desires to confer about before one of these boards. I am not so suspicious of myself or of my constituents that I am afraid somebody will say that I am going to get a fee if I take a constituent down here and introduce him or bring him in contact with somebody in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or in some board before which he has pending an application for a loan. Any Senator who does not want to do that has a perfect right to refuse to do it; but I have been called on, as I have no doubt every other Senator here has been called on, by constituents who do not know anybody in Washington, who have no acquaintance here, who are unable to employ lawyers, who do not know anybody except us, and they do not think there is any impropriety in asking us to present them, and if necessary even to file with one of these boards a statement they might send us and ask that it be given proper consideration. If this amendment is agreed to, we cannot even do that without making ourselves liable to the suspicion that we are trying to exercise some political influence in order to get a loan for somebody out of the Treasury of the United States.

I do not see any need for this amendment. It seems to me that within its terms it casts a suspicion on everybody in Congress who might be willing to aid a constituent or a friend or an applicant to get his matter considered before one of these boards. We have done that in connection with all these activities. We have made arrangements for our constituents, for mayors of cities, and even for Governors of States, to talk to the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, about public projects in their towns and in their States. We have sometimes accompanied honest men—men who have been elected by the people, Governors or mayors or county officials—to see the men who have charge of the Public Works program in order that they might present their claims to these public officials, not to exercise political influence but merely to give them an opening so that they may make their own presentation on the merits of the case. If this amendment should be adopted, we could not even do that. All we could do would be to say to our constituents, "We have been so afraid of ourselves, we are under such suspicion, that we cannot even call up and make an appointment for you to go down and talk over an application for a loan."

I am not willing, as I said, to put myself in any such situation or to aid in bringing about any such condition.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to ask a question of the Senator offering the amendment. The amendment provides—

That it shall be unlawful for any Federal, State, county, or municipal official—

To seek to exert any influence in connection with one of these loans. The words "State, county, or municipal official", it seems to me, would prohibit action on the part of those who must necessarily be the connecting link between the parties who are asking for the loan and the agency of the Federal Government.

Mr. BLACK. I shall be very glad to explain, when the Senator from Kentucky concludes, that the amendment does not at all do what he suggests.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not only does the amendment say that but it also says "or any other person." It makes it unlawful for anybody except a duly employed agent of the applicant to go to one of these boards and talk to anybody about loans. Of course I know that the Senator from Alabama does not intend to have this amendment make it necessary for every applicant to employ a lawyer, but that will be the result, because there is not anybody else who could come here and represent a man or a company; and if somebody has to be employed, of course, it will be a lawyer.

I do not see any necessity for this amendment, and I do not know of any reason for it except that we want to find some way by which we can be relieved from aiding our constituents in presenting their claims to the departments at Washington.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, in the first place, the amendment does not affect public loans. The amendment does not affect any loan to be made to any public enterprise. It relates wholly and exclusively to the provision which would authorize a private loan to a private industry by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It would not prohibit the Senator from Kentucky, or the Governor of Kentucky, or the mayor of Louisville, or any public official anywhere, from seeking to obtain a loan from the P.W.A. It has no reference to that.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield, I realize that, but it might as well have reference to that. If we are going to say that we cannot even communicate with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation with reference to a private loan for which an application has been made by some industry that may not want to pay out money for lawyers' fees, we ought to go all down the line and say that nobody except a hired lawyer shall appear before or present any communication to Mr. Ickes, or to the Public Works Administration, or to Mr. Hopkins, or to anybody else who has anything to do with the distribution of public funds.

Mr. BLACK. I shall be very glad to go into that matter. I desire to say to the Senator from Idaho, who asked me a question——

Mr. BORAH. Since the Senator has made the explanation, I see the effect of his amendment differently.

Mr. BLACK. In other words, the amendment relates wholly and exclusively to this new governmental proposal to lend money to private industry out of the taxpayers' funds. If money is to be loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to private industry, I take the position that it should occupy exactly the same relationship as does a bank.

Is it necessary for the Senator from Kentucky to appear at the First National Bank of Louisville in order to secure a loan for one of his constituents?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I had a constituent who did not know anybody in that bank and wanted me to take him in and introduce him, I do not think I ought to be subject to a penalty for doing so.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator would not be, nor would he be under this amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. It would be unlawful for me to do it.

Mr. BLACK. It would be unlawful, and would disqualify the man from getting a loan, if he came to the Senator from Kentucky to aid him in getting a loan.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, if a constituent came to my office, and I went to Jesse Jones and said, "I would like to have you see Bill Smith, who has an application for a loan; he needs $100,000", the mere fact that I called on him might be construed into an effort to use political influence, and would prevent the man from getting a loan.

Mr. BLACK. It may be that someone is afraid that a law may be passed which will take Senators and Representatives out of the class of glorified messenger boys because he wants to get votes back in his home State. I take the position that with reference to any governmental contract, where the Government's money is to be loaned, it is not right, and it not only is not right, but it is improper for such loans to be made upon the basis of political influence.

I have run into this matter in the investigation of ocean- and air-mail contracts. It is not merely a question of a man introducing his constituents to an official of a department. It is the question of continued, repeated, insistent pressure by Senators and Representatives, who do not know the facts, but who have caused this Government to spend millions and hundreds of millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money on contracts brought about by the exercise of political influence which should never have been put into effect.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. I misconstrued the exact meaning of the proposed amendment when the Senator from Alabama presented it to me. It seems to me entirely too broad in its implication.

Mr. President, never in my life have I asked a man to vote for me, and I have never in the 34 years I have been in Congress asked any department of the Government to give anybody or any concern a contract, and I never expect to do so. But if a concern or an individual from Virginia should come here to Washington and ask me to attest its or his character to any department of this Government which had no acquaintance whatsoever with the person or concern, am I to be charged with using political influence if I so attest the character of the concern or the individual, or ask that the concern or individual may have an interview with any department of the Government? It seems to me that under the broad terms of this amendment that might be regarded as exercising political influence.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, proceeding further, I will state that, in my judgment, there is no reason in the world why anyone should reach the conclusion that under the provisions of the amendment it would be using political influence to introduce somebody else.

We know what using political influence is. It is the method about which Mr. Howes, the First Assistant Postmaster General, testified when he said, speaking about those with political influence who sought, as soon as he became Second Assistant Postmaster General, to obtain from him contracts that they swarmed in on him just like grasshoppers, and were just as big a pest.

They wanted certain contracts, and were asking for them, not on the basis of merit, but their correspondence has been introduced into the record by reams and reams and reams, in which they called attention to the fact and boasted about the influence of the Representatives and of the Senators and of the national committeemen and of the managers of Senators' campaigns all over the United States.

There is no use being too sensitive about this matter of influence. We know influence is exercised, and it is absolutely useless for any man to claim he is so blind as not to know there have been political influences wielded in connection with contracts of every kind and character, in order to obtain contracts, not through merit, but by reason of the political pressure that was put behind them.

I desire to make a prediction. I may be entirely wrong, but I believe absolutely that under the simple amendment proposed to be made to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, providing for loans to private industry, greater dangers are involved than under any other measure which has as yet been proposed by the administration. There is nothing new in this viewpoint on my part. I had a similar viewpoint when the R.F.C. bill was first passed, and I voted against such a proposal in connection with that bill. I predicted then that the time would come when the pressure would be so great from the business enterprises all over this Nation that we would find Senators and Representatives running all over themselves in order to get loans granted to private industry which the banks would not grant them, and that has come to pass.

It is proposed that we authorize the lending of about $250,000,000. I received a letter the other day from a chamber of commerce in one little town which said that private industry in that town intended to ask for $750,000. If the money is asked for at that rate from all over the United States, $10,000,000,000 worth of applications will be a very small amount to pour in within a few weeks. What will that mean? Decisions will have to be made by the officials of the States, which later will have to be acted upon in Washington. Somebody will get that $250,000,000, but there will be many others who will be deprived of their part of the loans, even though they are just as worthy.

As one who believe whole-heartedly in this administration and in its desire and its willingness and its intention to bring about great improvement in the business activities of this Nation, I desire now to state that this is the most dangerous proposal that has yet been made, and will work great harm unless some safeguard such as this amendment shall be thrown around it.

Mr. President, the amendment may be too broad; I do not claim that it is perfect. What I am seeking to do is to establish a principle, and that principle is this: If the Government of the United States is to engage in any kind of private business, let it operate under exactly the same rules as those under which private business operates. If the Government is to enter the banking business, in part, why should it be necessary for an applicant for a loan to have the assistance of a Senator or a Representative in order to secure the loan? Does the applicant for a loan now have to go and hire a lawyer in order to get the loan? If it were true that every applicant for a loan from a bank today had to employ a lawyer, then there would be some basis for the argument that if the Senators and Representatives did not secure the loans desired, lawyers would have to be secured. But is that the way private business operates?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the Senator recognize any difference between a bank located in any community where it may know the applicants, who are personally acquainted with the officers, and who go in and ask for a loan, and a stranger coming to Washington, who does not know anybody?

Mr. BLACK. I recognize that these applications will be made just as they are today, in the States where the applicants live. They will not be made in Washington.

Mr. BARKLEY. They will be passed on in Washington.

Mr. BLACK. They will first be passed on in the States where the applicants live, and they will be passed on there without any Senator and without any Representative saying anything about them.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there has been an agency of the R.F.C. in my State, located in the city of Louisville, ever since the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was organized. I have never requested of that agency, remotely, directly, indirectly, or in any other way, even the consideration of an application for a loan; but under the pending amendment even the mayor of the city of Louisville could not go to the agency in Louisville with a citizen, the president or officer of a corporation, and ask that the agency give consideration to a loan, or even introduce him, without his act being unlawful under the amendment.

Mr. BLACK. I may say that I am not sure that that should not be the law. If that had been the law down in Louisiana, where so much has happened, as we have heard, through local political influence, there would have been an entirely different story with reference to the home-loan bank in the the city of New Orleans.

I admit that I think this principle ought to go further. I think it ought to apply to every business enterprise in which the Government is engaged. I do not believe that there should be any political influence exercised or wielded by any man in political life in order to secure contracts from the Government of the United States, either for the loan of money or for the sale of commodities.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the language of the amendment, a friend or neighbor of an applicant could not go into the agency in any State, or come to Washington, with the applicant, unless he were hired, even though he might come along as a friend, simply as a matter of accommodation. He could not do it unless the applicant hired him to come, because under the terms of the amendment—

> it shall be unlawful for any Federal, State, county, or municipal official, any member of any National, State, or county committee of any political party, or any other person except a bona fide and regularly employed officer, agent, or employee of the person or corporation seeking a loan—

And so forth. A man could not bring his friend along and let him pay his own expenses and go before one of these agencies to borrow some money.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I do not think anybody is worried about these "friends." That is not the worry. They are not worried about somebody's not bringing his friends.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. With reference to the words indicated by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], "or any other person except a bona fide and regularly employed officer, agent, or employee of the person or corporation seeking a loan under the provisions of this section"—does the Senator object to eliminating those words from the amendment?

Mr. BLACK. As I have heretofore said, I have no pride of authorship in this amendment. It could be greatly improved, perhaps, by many minds. What I am after is the principle. But I will state to the Senator why I suggested that language. One of the reasons was to avoid exactly what the Senator from Kentucky said would happen with reference to Washington lawyers. Under this provision those seeking loans would not come here and hire one of the Washington lawyers. It would be impossible for them to do that.

Mr. BARKLEY. They could not even bring a lawyer with them.

Mr. BLACK. Not if he were not a regularly employed lawyer.

Mr. BARKLEY. If he were an attorney employed by the year, they might bring him along; but they could not employ any attorney in Washington in view of the fact that no one here in Washington is allowed to say anything in furtherance of a loan. They could not employ an extra good lawyer to represent them before the Department. They would have to bring someone who was regularly on their pay roll.

Mr. BLACK. In my judgment, that is the way people usually get loans. If a man wants to borrow money from the Louisville National Bank, I do not think he gets a lawyer to represent him in borrowing the money. Such borrowing of money is a usual business transaction. He does it as a business man should. When we are proposing to lend the money of the taxpayers, with the theory of getting it back, why should we leave the transaction open to the use of influence by various people in order to get the loan?

Mr. BARKLEY. In that connection anyone who wants to go to a bank to make a loan, of course, goes to a bank which he knows. He goes usually to a bank with whose officers he is acquainted. He goes usually to the bank in his own town. Some people in the country, however, probably have a notion that some of us in Washington are bigger than we are, and they do not even know how to approach Members of Congress, let alone officials of boards, in order to be able to present their matters to them. I do not think such people should be required to bring along a whole coterie of lawyers on yearly pay in order that they may not make a mistake in presenting their matters to the board.

Mr. BLACK. If we do not put in the bill such a provision as the one I have suggested, I am afraid that Washington will be visited by a swarm of lawyers. My own theory is that if they are going to get money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, they should go in just as they do their banks and seek their loans. I see no reason why we should get all worked up and anxious about someone's coming to Washington to get a loan. There is no reason for coming to Washington to get the loan. The place to apply for it is in the home town of the man who makes the application.

There is one other point to which I desire to call attention. It may be altogether improper. It may not fit. I have an idea that the time has almost arrived when Senators and Representatives should engage to some extent in the business to which they are elected, to wit, lawmaking. That is an old-fashioned theory, I admit. There is no question about its being an old-fashioned theory. My own judgment is that one of the purposes for which men are elected to the Senate and the House is to legislate. I am perfectly free to confess that one of the easiest ways to stay in the House or the Senate is for the Senator or Representative to spend all his time in trying to get special favors for his constituents.

I admit that it is old fashioned to have an idea that, perhaps, Senators and Representatives ought to spend at least a reasonable part of their time in connection with the enactment of legislation; but, somehow, I believe that, perhaps, Senators and Representatives might have a little better standing in the country if they spent more of their time at the work of lawmaking rather than spending most of their time, as many have done, by force of circumstances, in trying to do things which it never was contemplated they should do.

The Government is more and more taking part in various business activities. I am familiar with the history of the State bank in my State. I know what happened with reference to the idea of having friends who could induce loans to be made. I know that when that bank finally toppled and fell, it brought on a wave of disgrace all over the State; and I know that the same thing happened in every other State of the Union that had a State bank.

I have not yet forgotten that there was a bank in Philadelphia to which old fighting Andrew Jackson was opposed. I have not yet forgotten the slimy trail of political corruption which was exposed in connection with that bank. Why were there such corrupt conditions connected with the bank? Because of political influence. When, finally, its affairs were exposed to the public, in calling the list of those who owed the bank one could call the roster of the political celebrities wherever that bank had done business and find very few names missing. Then when those who had recommended others for loans were exposed, the same condition was found—political influence. In that case the use of political influence was not because people were called upon to take care of their friends and constituents in a lawful and legitimate enterprise but the money of the taxpayers of the United States in that bank had been turned over to the political favorites and the favorites of the political favorites.

My amendment is based on a very simple principle. If it is wrong, it ought to be defeated. If the principle is right, and the amendment goes too far, or does not go far enough, the amendment should be rewritten and the principle should be carried out.

I will state the principle on which the amendment is based. I have arrived at the conclusion that this principle ought to prevail largely as the result of what I have seen in the past year. I believed before then that so far as possible, political influence should not govern in connection with governmental affairs. All the evidence in connection with the air-mail investigation has not come out—I saw no reason to bring it out—but the people of this country would be absolutely amazed if they knew how many contracts for millions and millions and millions of dollars had been made, not because of the fact that the contract itself justified it, but because of pressure, pressure, pressure.

I desire to have it understood that pressure never has been, and never will be, limited to any one party. If a limited amount of money is available, and 100 people want to borrow that money to every one person who can get it, we know from our knowledge of human nature that the person who will get it will be, in the main, the one who had influence behind him, because that has been true throughout all human history in connection with the lending of money by governments and governmental agencies.

The principle is that if the Government is to engage in any kind of business, either directly or through agencies or bureaus, those agencies and bureaus should act wholly free from any kind of political influence, and solely and exclusively by reason of a paramount sense of public duty, and they should be free from the pressure of political agents; and I include in that the principle that they should be free from the pressure of Senators and Representatives. That may be a wrong principle, but it is one in which I believe.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I recall a little incident in my own experience within the past year. In my home city there is a chamber of commerce, one of whose duties and functions is to bring new factories into the town. It has been the practice there for many years, as it has been in other communities, to induce factories to come there by relieving them from taxation for a period of 5 years.

An opportunity came to the community to bring a factory there which would employ from 1,000 to 1,500 people, which would absorb the entire unemployed list in the city. Under the charter of the city it had a right to buy a building and turn it over to the coming factory for a period of 5 years, and charge rent upon it until the cost of the building had been amortized. The town council passed an ordinance authorizing the city to borrow enough money to buy the building, or to build one and to turn it over to the new factory which was to employ from 1,000 to 1,500 people, which has since been built, and the company is now employing 1,000 people.

The mayor of the city came to Washington. The city attorney came to Washington. I went to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation with them and introduced them. I undertook to tell the members of the board of directors what it would mean to the community in the way of employment of unemployed men and women if the loan were granted and the factory brought there. They were unable to get the loan. They finally got it from private sources, and erected the building, and the factory is in operation, and is now employing 1,000 people.

If the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama had been in force, however, I would have been a criminal for going to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation with the mayor of my home city and asking them to give their consideration to an application for a loan of that sort.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, in the first place, there is no reason why it should be necessary for a Senator to go to a department and ask that its officials give fair consideration to a proposal which has been submitted.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say that it may be that it would have been entirely the proper and statesmanlike thing for me to have said to my friends, "I cannot go with you; I am a statesman; I am above the petty things that affect the community in which I live; you must employ a lawyer; bring your lawyer with you." It might have been wise for me to say that; it might have been a statesmanlike thing for me to say it; but I did not say it. I went with them; I am glad I went; I have no apology for going; and I would go again under the same circumstances. I am not ashamed to try to render a little service to the people of my State, and I am not ashamed nor afraid that somebody is going to call me a crook if I do accommodate them now and then by presenting them and their causes to the department in Washington.

Mr. BLACK. I am very glad to know the Senator has no fear that anybody will accuse him of anything wrong. I do not consider, however, that that has very much bearing on the question at issue before us. My idea is that we are talking here about a principle and not any individual's feelings with reference to what he has done or what somebody might or might not think about him. I raise no question about what the Senator has done, but what I am saying is that we are now proposing to let the Government go into the business of lending money——

Mr. GLASS. Now proposing it!

Mr. BLACK. Well, we are going further than we have heretofore gone.

Mr. GLASS. What has the Government been doing for the last 3 or 4 years?

Mr. BLACK. The Government is now proposing to extend loans to private business. The Senator, as I understand, has an amendment which will extend loans to private industry to the extent of $250,000,000. My own judgment is that if the Government is going to lend money to private industry, it ought to make the amount sufficient really to fill the bill. If we are going to take the place of banks, I think we ought really to take the place of the banks, and do the work, whether it involves $250,000,000 or $10,000,000,000. I believe that when the Government goes into the banking business for private industry, the Government should operate exactly as banks do. Why leave ourselves open to exactly the same situation and a repetition of exactly the same events that have always happened when the Government lends public money? When a Government agency lends money to private individuals, it will be found that the energy of those individuals is spent not to prove that they can pay the money back, not to establish in a legitimate business way that they are entitled to a loan from a business standpoint, but their energy will be expended in having letters and telegrams sent to the Members of Congress urging them to use their influence; and the Members of Congress will not have the ability nor the time to determine whether that loan should or should not be made. I would not say that the Members of Congress would not have the ability, because I think that most of them would have the ability if they had the time to give to the subject and consider it on its merits and the arguments for and against. I am willing to assume that they would then have the ability to pass upon the matter, but I do deny that there is a single Member of this body or a single Member of the other House who, with the various duties he has to perform in connection with the functions of his office, has time to pass upon the merits of the individual applications for loans which will be made.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, does the Senator from Alabama believe if a Senator should examine the request for a loan which is urged and asked in his State and should find that the loan should not be made, that there are more than two Senators here who would say, "We do not want that loan to be made to and in our State"?

Mr. BLACK. Of course, they would not say that they would not want the money loaned. I should like to have the roll called on that question. I am wondering how many there are here who have ever told their constituents that they did not want a loan made in their behalf.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I suggest, then, that the Senate ought to be abolished.

Mr. COUZENS. I second the motion.

Mr. GLASS. If we have not more than two Members of this body who are honest enough to advise against what they know to be bad loans, we are just a disgrace to the Nation; that is all there is about it.

I never have told a department of this Government to let a contract to anybody in my State. What I object to about this amendment is its broad terms. I want to know what may be regarded as "political influence."

Supplementing the incident given by the Senator from Kentucky, there was a concern in my State, in my town, employing 436 people, men and women, which needed a loan. It first went to Richmond and applied to the branch of the R.F.C. in my State and had its application for a loan fully approved. It came here to Washington and asked me to go to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and request prompt consideration. I did not go, because I rarely ever or never go on missions of that kind, but I unhesitatingly wrote to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation saying that I had no knowledge whatsoever as to the merits of the application, but asking that it be given prompt attention, because the loan, if it were to be made available at all, should be promptly available. Under this amendment I would be a criminal for making that suggestion to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

As a matter of fact, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was so dilatory in the consideration of the application that the concern went to a private financial institution and got there the loan which it desired to get here. But, for one, I do not need to have any statutory limitations put upon my sense of propriety.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to state to the Senator from Virginia that, in my judgment, the amendment would not cover the circumstance which he mentions.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, yes. Who would not regard that as "political influence", attesting the character of men I had known all my life?

Mr. BLACK. I would not.

Mr. GLASS. Perhaps the Senator would not, but perhaps somebody else would. I agree with the Senator that the Government ought to be conducted on business principles, but, of all the departments that ought to be conducted on business principles, the Post Office Department is, perhaps, first.

I assume, of course, the Senator from Alabama has never recommended the appointment of a postmaster in Alabama; or if he has ever recommended the appointment of a postmaster, I assume, of course, he has not taken the pains to find out whether the appointee was a Democrat or whether he was a Republican. [Laughter.] If we are going to enter upon the work of constituting a strictly business institution of every department of the Government, we might apply the principle to the Post Office Department.

Mr. BLACK. I should be very glad to answer two of the statements the Senator has made. In the first place, the Senator says he wants it understood that he has to have no law passed in order to tell him what to do. I admit that. There are many people all over the United States who do not need laws to tell them what to do; but my able friend from Virginia has been here for many years, loyally and zealously serving as a Member of this body, engaged in enacting laws for some who needed laws in connection with their conduct.

Now, with reference to the appointment of postmasters, although, in my judgment, that has nothing to do with this case, I voted for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and I am perfectly willing to vote for a bill which will give us a real, honest, genuine civil service, taking every postmaster away from the political patronage of Senators and Representatives in Congress. If that does not answer the Senator's suggestion, I have tried to answer it.

Mr. President, there is not any use in trying to evade the issue before us by suggesting that the amendment does not fit it. I assume that probably it will be defeated, just as many other movements in this direction have been defeated, but if a Senator is in favor of the principle of having Government loans made according to business principles, and this amendment does not do it, let him offer an amendment to this amendment, so that we can make it fit the principle of which he is in favor if he wants to let the business of the Government be operated upon business principles.

Mr. President, perhaps I have taken more time than I should have taken. I think an amendment such as this should be attached to every bill that has anything to do with the expenditure of Government money according to contract. I think the time has come when, if we do not let Government contracts be made on business principles, so far has the Government gone into the field of private business today, that we are destined to wake up to find some very sorrowful people. I frankly believe, with reference to these particular loans, that this administration has taken no more dangerous step than will be taken if we provide for loans to private industries, providing only for $250,000,000, when it is known that there will be more than $10,000,000,000 of applications, unless we put some kind of safeguard so as to provide that our public servants shall make the loans free from political influence.

This is no new doctrine on my part. I have read in this body in recent months opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States announcing these principles. A contract made between the very lawyer whom my friend from Kentucky mentioned and an applicant for a loan is a case in point. The principle has been held to be contrary to law and contrary to public policy by the Supreme Court of the United States. The very principle of having Representatives and Senators seek to obtain loans has been held to be contrary to public policy by the highest court of the Nation. That is exactly what the amendment attempts to prevent. If it is too broad it should be modified.

If a Senator is opposed to the principle then the thing to do is to vote against the entire amendment, but if Senators favor the principle of having loans made of the taxpayers' money—and it is the taxpayers' money—according to the standards of merit and justice and fairness rather than because of political influence, then the amendment should be adopted. If the amendment is not correct I hope some Senator may offer a substitute.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I may remark briefly that it is by no means certain that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under the terms of the bill will ever be called upon to loan a dollar. As a matter of fact, the most important provision of the bill is its liberalization of the eligibility of paper that may be rediscounted at Federal Reserve banks by member banks.

If the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] will just listen to me a moment, I shall try to convince him, but he turns away in such disdain as to discourage further remarks on my part. [Laughter.]

The $280,000,000 fund provided in the bill that may be loaned directly by Federal Reserve banks is not a circumstance to the amount of loans that may be made under the provisions of the bill. The nearly 8,000, if not quite 8,000, members of the Federal Reserve System, both National and State banks, may with confidence make hundreds of millions of loans under the provisions of the bill, because they will realize that they may go to the Federal Reserve banks and have the obligations rediscounted for a period of 5 years, something that has never been permitted under any statute we have ever previously enacted. The dangers of the bill are simply frightfully magnified by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK].

Moreover, if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation were to loan every dollar that it contingently may loan under the provisions of the bill, it could not loan more than $250,000,000, and that is all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. The authority to loan even that much expires next January.

Mr. GLASS. Yes. It prevails for 7 months only. Not only that but the borrowers will not be able to get a dollar of that $250,000,000 until they first shall have exhausted every possible effort to get credit at the member banks or nonmember banks at the current bank rates and, having failed at their local banks, have failed to get credit at the Federal Reserve banks. So where is this frightful danger that we ought to avoid?

The $250,000,000 of possible loans of the taxpayers' money is nothing. We have been pouring out money like water running through a sewer, with no prospect of ever getting a dollar of it back. Yet the bill is characterized as a measure of "frightful danger" to the pockets of the taxpayers. There is not one particle of danger in it. I doubt if ever a dollar will have to be loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under the terms of the bill. But I hope and I confidently expect that hundreds of millions of dollars will be loaned under the terms of the bill by the member banks which are chockful of money and know not what to do with it except to buy United States bonds. I am tired of seeing the Federal Reserve banks and member banks of the Federal Reserve System concentrating their whole activities upon financing the United States Government instead of financing business and giving employment to people who are unemployed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to commend to the best of my ability the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] for proposing his amendment. It has been ridiculed. Fun has been poked at it. It has been said that it will not accomplish any good. Nevertheless the principle involved in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama is a principle which, in my humble judgment, will go a long way, if it is enforced, toward saving the Government from ruin and incidentally toward saving also the Democratic Party which is now in power.

In all probability I have said all that I ought to say on the subject. I have not anything new to say. If there is anything wrong in the principle involved, it seems to me that under the present depression I can see the end. If we are going to take the taxpayers' money by the hundreds of millions and loan it out on political influence, then we ought not to stand as a nation. Naturally, we would go down. Such a proposal is unscientific, unbusinesslike, unfair. I think it is a dishonest use of the taxpayers' money.

That does not mean, if we shall not adopt the amendment, that something dishonest will happen in the loaning of the funds. I do not mean that. The amendment ought to reach every department of the Government. When the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] made the suggestion about recommending postmasters, that did not bother me at all. The same principle ought to pervade the Post Office Department, from the Postmaster General himself to the janitors who scrub out the post offices in the various cities and towns of the United States.

I have had people poke fun at me for proposing various things. The proposal of this amendment seems to bring out the same line of thought. But the principle here involved is a little more vital. I believe that some day there will go into the White House a man who will say, referring to the Post Office Department, that from top to bottom that Department is going to be operated as a business institution; a man who will say, "We are going to run it as a business proposition. We are trustees of the people's money which we appropriate to run it, and we ought to be more careful about the way those funds are expended than if it were our own money."

We passed a bill the other day to endeavor to reduce gambling. I have no objection to a man gambling if he wants to do it and if he uses his own money. If he gets any enjoyment out of gambling, I have no objection to it. He must handle his own funds, however. I do not want him to gamble with my money, and I do not want him to gamble with the money of anybody for whom I am a trustee here.

I recognize the questions that were asked the Senator from Alabama. Similar questions have been propounded to me for 10 or 15 or 25 or 35 years. I have been laughed at, because it has been said, "Why, this proposal does not apply to me. Why are you seeking to make it apply to me? I have conducted my office above any such happenings as this proposal penalizes."

That may be true. I do not deny it, at least. I am not making an accusation against a Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives; and I am not apologizing either because he says, "This proposal has no application to me. Why should the law cover me?"

Of course we cannot make exceptions to a law. Sometimes a law discommodes somebody who has no intention of doing anything wrong. That is true of every law we pass which we have to make general. Honest citizens have often been discommoded and interfered with in their business because laws are necessary on account of a lot of other men who are not so honest or so scrupulous.

I had a letter less than 10 days ago from a man whom I do not know. I never saw him or heard of him before, and it may be that it will be found on investigation that the story he told me is untrue; but this is what he said:

He is an abstractor in the county seat of a certain county in the United States. It is a town of ten or fifteen thousand people. There are several other abstractors in the town; but he said that in carrying out the new home-loan law passed by Congress, where abstracts are to be had in this county—and it applies to every town in the county—one man makes all the abstracts. It may be—I am not acquainted with the ground—that all the other abstractors are not competent men. I do not know; but this man said in his letter that an abstract made by any other abstractor is sent to this particular abstractor, and he must certify to it, he must extend the abstract or no loan will be made. It happens that the abstractor who gets all the abstract business in that town is the chairman of the Democratic county committee. I suppose that is just an accident.

When I told that story to some Members of this body in a casual conversation I had a week or so ago, I was laughed at. They said, "That only shows that the Democratic Party are sure that they are doing business right. They are giving it to Democrats." Senators may laugh at that if they wish. They may make fun of it; but I want to warn them that that kind of an arrangement will bring discredit upon the people who put it into operation, and the Democratic Party will be no exception. It would be just the same if the Republican Party were in power and did the same or a similar thing. If a business operation is to be performed, it ought to be performed along business lines.

In my judgment, the organization or the political party which insists on performing a business operation along political lines, and for the benefit of members of a political party, will run on the rocks; and such a course will cause even the man in the White House to suffer, perhaps at a time when suffering will mean much in a political way.

Mr. President, I do not think this amendment prohibits a Member of the Senate from introducing a man whom he knows, or who comes from his State, or from some other State, to an official whom the man does not know; but we have not been able so far to close our eyes to the fact that it is just a little beyond that that the evils of the situation creep in.

What action did the President take a few weeks ago to stop a condition that had become nauseous in the eyes of the American people, where Democratic politicians, chairmen of Democratic State committees, and others under them, were charged—and there seems to have been some ground for it, because the President took action in the matter—with using their political positions to get favors for their clients?

It is not necessary to tell the ordinary official that a man is a Senator or the Vice President or a Member of the House of Representatives. He knows it; and, in addition to that, the men whose time is thus taken up have other duties to perform for which they have been elected. No Member of the House, no Member of the Senate ought to devote all his time to looking after those who want to get office or those who want to get contracts from the Government; and I think such a law as is here proposed would be a relief, rather than an impediment.

I had a conversation with a Senator the other day—in fact, I saw the letter—in a case where an individual had a claim pending against the Government of the United States on appeal from one of the various boards. The letter insisted that the Senator to whom it was addressed should go down before the board in person—that is the way the writer put it, in black and white—and appear for the writer of the letter, a constituent. The Senator declined to do it. He felt that it would be wrong and unethical for him to do so, and he wrote the constituent to that effect; and I saw the reply. His constituent took that letter and sent it to a Government official in Washington—I think it was a Government official—and asked him whether Senators could not appear before the board and argue their constituents' claims; and the answer was that they could and that they did, many of them.

In what position did that leave the Senator who took that attitude, which I think was high and professional and ethical, but whose constituent wrote to him and told him to his face that other Senators were doing this, and asked why he should not do so? Why did the constituent want the Senator to appear in person before the board? Was it because the Senator was John Smith or Jim Jones, or because he knew something about the claim? As a matter of fact, the Senator did not know anything about the claim. The constituent had a representative who did, who was not a Member of Congress. Why did the constituent want his Senator to go there and appear in person? Because of political influence.

Senators, let us not kid ourselves about this matter. This man did not say. "I want your influence as a Senator"—oh, no. I suppose the Senator could have gone down there and never have used the word "influence"; but would the officials of the board know who he was? Would they wonder why he appeared there to represent this man in a case of which he would disclose his ignorance if he had tried to argue it for a minute?

There was nothing in the world that the constituent wanted except political influence. It seems to me he was not entitled to it. It seems to me there ought to be a law to prohibit it, to protect Senators and Representatives who do no want to be dragged into unprofessional and unethical conduct by some of their constituents.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I am somewhat new here. I came here with high hopes that I was coming into a body of honest men. So far as my observation goes, I have found that to be true; and I resent the repeated charges under these forms that Members of the United States Senate are not to be trusted, that they are corrupt, that they are using their standing and their position in order to secure things for themselves or their constituents by improper methods.

Perhaps I come from the wrong neighborhood, Mr. President. In my part of the country men are sent to high office because they are trusted, not because they are dishonest. To say that a man whom the people trust, a man whom they permit to appropriate their money and to levy their taxes is not to be trusted with the very business with which the people have trusted him is something that I cannot understand.

No man is so greatly interested in having efficiency in business, in having business honestly conducted as a Senator of the United States; and yet not only today but previously we are in substance told to our faces, "If you, a Senator of the United States, go to any public official and present your views as to what is good for your constituency, either individually or as a group, you are doing an unlawful and a dishonest act."

Mr. President, this particular amendment is not limited—and I call this to the attention of the Senator from Virginia—to political influence. It forbids the exercise of any influence in any way. I, like the Senator from Virginia, happen to be one of those who have declined to go to the departments to secure favors of any kind. I have never recommended loans. I have never recommended the making of a contract. But apparently within the past week I have offended against the underlying principle of this amendment, because I called up the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and said that a friend and a neighbor of mine was coming to see them and that his word was good. I knew that; no other man in Washington knew it as I did, and I took occasion to say to them, "What this man tells you you can rely upon." That would be prohibited by the amendment.

If the board of county commissioners of my county, interested in the establishment of a factory or an industry in my county, should come here and should go to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to present the views of my community on behalf of a loan to a local industry, they would violate the principles of the amendment in performing their duty to their community. If a man who happens to be a precinct committeeman—and who probably does not know it—should come here in the interest of some enterprise in my community, he would violate the amendment.

Mr. President, I am as much opposed to the use of improper influence as is any man who sits in this body, but I am unwilling to charge that every time a word is spoken in behalf of a loan or an enterprise that is inevitably a corrupt and a corrupting thing. I am among those who still trust the integrity of public officials, and particularly of the Members of the United States Senate.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I intend to vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], and I desire to give my reasons for so doing.

I do not believe that anything contained in the amendment, or anything said by the Senator from Alabama justifies the impression that it is intended to reflect in any way upon the integrity of any Member of the House or of the Senate. As a matter of fact, it would be well to consider just what the amendment provides.

It would not apply to loans sought by public bodies. It would apply only to the acts of the officials of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in making loans to any industrial or commercial business established prior to January 1, 1935. Therefore it would not apply to county commissioners, or to municipalities, or to States, but would apply only to those who are engaged in business throughout the States of this Union.

We may as well understand exactly what would take place when an application for a loan was filed. When an application for a loan was filed it would be investigated by the officials and employees of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation out in the field. They would look into the character and the reputation of the applicant in the community in which he lived, and they would learn about him. When they passed upon the loan, if they determined that the security offered was not adequate, the application would be rejected.

It is then that the applicant would appeal to the precinct official, to the official of the county committee or the State committee, or to the Senator or the Representative. He would appeal for the purpose of securing a reversal of the decision of the official in the field who had passed upon the adequacy of the security, and who had an opportunity to ascertain the character of the applicant.

When the applicant came to Washington, if he were accompanied by the State chairman, or the national committeeman, no one can have any doubt as to why the State chairman would be requested to come, or why the national committeeman from a State would be requested to come. If he were not accompanied by the State chairman or the national committeeman, but came to a Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives he would not have the Member of Congress accompany him in order to have his cause presented upon its merits by the Senator or Representative. It would be solely because he believed that they would bring to bear political influence, in order to induce someone in Washington to reverse the action of the official in the field who had rejected the application for the loan.

When we reflect that the amendment applies to the representatives of National, State, or county committees, or Federal officials, we must bear in mind that the employees of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are appointed by the board in charge of that organization, but those of us who have been in public life know that many of the attorneys and employees who pass upon loans are men who have been appointed upon the recommendation and endorsement of members of national committees, of State committees, of Members of the United States Senate and of the House of Representatives; and when a member of the Senate or the House goes to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to advocate granting a loan, it is possible, and not only possible, but probable, that in some instances he will appear before a man who has been appointed upon his own recommendation. I do not believe it is good for the taxpayers of the United States that the money of the taxpayers should be loaned under such circumstances.

It is said the amendment would affect loans where a municipality or some public organization was interested. There is not so much incentive to use political influence when a municipality is asking for a loan; but in the case of private individuals, with political influence in the States of the Union, when they ask for loans which are denied upon the merits of the cases by the officials of the R.F.C. out in the field, and then come to Washington, there is an incentive to use political influence, and it is an exceedingly difficult thing for a Member of the House or of the Senate to decline to present to the officials of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation a constituent whose application has been rejected.

Mr. President, I do not think any harm would result from the amendment. There may be some one case where it would work hardship, such as that cited by the Senator from Kentucky, in which he believes justice was done because he was able to introduce some individuals to the officials of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; but for every case of that kind there will be 10 cases where applicants whose loans have been rejected upon investigation will be coming to Washington to seek political influence in order to secure the loans.

Two hundred million or two hundred and fifty million dollars may be a small sum considering the amounts which have been spent by the Government in recent months, but even if the amount which might be loaned under the amendment were only $250,000 instead of $250,000,000, I should be happy to know that it was to be loaned solely upon the adequacy of the security and not upon the political influence of the individuals who present the applicant at the office of the R.F.C. in Washington.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. McGILL. Assuming that the principles embodied in this amendment are good, does not the Senator think that the penalty, or what might properly be described as the "penalty", is to be assessed against the wrong party? I note that the amendment provides that no member of any National, State, or county committee of any political party, or any other person, unless regularly employed by the concern seeking a loan, shall appear or attempt to exercise any influence, and that if that is done the corporation seeking the loan shall be disqualified.

Suppose a corporation seeking a loan does not ask for the aid or the assistance of any official of any county or State or National committee, or of any other organization, but that influence is attempted to be exerted; it would seem to me that, admitting the correctness of the theory embodied in the amendment, the penalty should be against the one violating the law, and not against the applicant.

Mr. BYRNES. I do not believe there is any practical danger that any National, State, or county committeeman is going to seek to use political influence except at the request of the individual.

Mr. McGILL. The point I am getting at is this: Assume there is a committeeman who would like to see a corporation denied a loan; he could very easily disqualify the corporation.

Mr. BYRNES. I think the Senator might well offer an amendment to provide that where such unlawful influence is used at the request of the applicant, and so forth. That is what the Senator has in mind. In other words, the applicant would not be disqualified unless he had really requested the influence.

Mr. McGILL. What I had in mind, if the Senator will pardon me, is that, if anyone should be punished for an act of this kind, it ought to be the party who commits the act, rather than the one seeking the loan.

Mr. BYRNES. I do not care to detain the Senate. I do not believe there would be any serious results from the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Alabama. It might accomplish what the Senator from Alabama has stated it would accomplish, and that is a factor which must be considered. It might give to Senators and Members of the House more time to attend to the business of their respective bodies. It is a fact that, if all the applicants whose loans are rejected should come to the committeemen and to the Members of the House and Senate to follow through these loans, certainly the Members of the Senate would be unable to attend to their business and would become brokers as well as traveling salesmen and glorified secretaries of chambers of commerce and superintendents of employment agencies. The amendment might limit their activities to a few of those activities and not permit them to be extended to the field of brokerage.

If it be true, as has been said, that the individual citizen does not know that he can approach Government officials today, such legislation would have a wholesome effect. I fear that the average citizen has come to believe that he cannot approach any official of the Government except through a Senator or a Member of the House. If he could be taught that this is his Government, and that he has a right to approach any official of any department without communicating through a Senator or a Member of the House, it would be most wholesome, and be in the interest of good citizenship.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment, and point out that under its terms if one hires a national committeeman and pays him to act as his representative it is not contrary to the amendment. If one hires a mayor as his representative, and pays him, it is not contrary to the amendment. If one hires the district committeeman, in the same capacity, and pays him, it is not contrary to the amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. No, Mr. President; I disagree entirely with the Senator from Colorado, because the amendment says "any regularly employed officer or agent." I can see the purpose of the Senator from Alabama. As he said, whenever industries seeking a loan apply to any bank, they apply through the regularly employed officials of the institution. It is only when they get into the field of government that they believe they can no longer rely upon the regularly employed officers, but that they must go to the regularly elected committeemen and Senators and Representatives.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in Oliver Goldsmith's immortal classic, The Vicar of Wakefield, it is said:

> That virtue which requires a sentinel is not worth the sentinel's pay.

This amendment is not so much for the protection of Senators and Representatives as for the protection of the general public. Surely there cannot be a Senator here who is oblivious to the fact that now, and for many months, the air of this city is fetid with the breath of place hunters, schemers, grafters, crooks, and that many oleaginous lobbyists are here. Like obscene harpies, lobbyists are hovering not so much over the Senate and the House as they are over every department and every agency of the Government here.

It has been suggested that some Government officials—I do not refer to the Senate or the House—are now likened to hunted animals, pursued by beasts of prey. These officers are not pursued as a rule by men seeking honest things, but by men who are seeking some favor, gift, grant, or bounty from the Federal Treasury.

To adopt this amendment is not a reflection upon the Senate. I think the Senate is honest and capable of transacting public business, and needs no protection against lobbyists, because I know more than 10 Senators who within the last week have told lobbyists where they should go.

I again say that the Capital is infested with lobbyists who clutter the public buildings. These lobbyists are not here to give strength to the Government. They are not here to add permanency and durability to the Government. They are here in large numbers to line their pockets with the avails of contracts which will not stand scrutiny.

Only this morning the Judiciary Committee was required to report a bill adding more severe penalties against those who palm off fictitious bonds on the Government of the United States for the fulfilling of contracts, and who forge the names of notaries public on contracts with respect to bonds offered to the United States for the fulfillment of contracts.

I shall vote for this amendment, not that our virtue needs a sentinel but that the public needs to be assured that we are alive to what has been going on in this Capital and that we intend to protect the Government.

Mr. GLASS. It has been clearly indicated that we do not have any virtues to watch.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I am in perfect accord with the aim of the Senator from Alabama. The custom to which he refers is a custom which has grown up in recent years of a Senator or Representative neglecting his legislative duties and spending a large share of his time in going around to the executive departments to see that they operate, or to try to help his constituents get some attention so that their business may be transacted. They are entitled to courteous attention without the aid of a Representative or Senator, and should have it.

The former Senator from Minnesota, Mr. Clapp, quit the Senate in 1916. A few years ago, before he died, I asked him how many letters from his constituents he would average during the last few years he served in the Senate, and he said about half a dozen. I do not know what the experience of other Senators is, but it is a very slow day when we do not have 300 letters, and up as high as 500 or 600 letters, most of them not having to do with legislation, but having to do with the executive branch of the Government.

We have soldiers' claims for compensation. We have established by law an organization to see that that kind of business is transacted. Under the custom which has grown up, Senators and Representatives transact that business for constituents before the Veterans' Bureau and help these men prepare their cases, when under the law we have furnished attorneys for the Veterans' Bureau to help these people prepare their cases. If we go on in this direction, the ultimate result will be that the average citizen must have a Senator or Representative with him when he goes to the post office to buy a postage stamp, because we have drifted into a situation where it is very hard for the average citizen to transact business with the Federal Government without having the aid of a Senator or a Representative.

So far as I am concerned, I am glad to be of any assistance to my constituents that I can. I do not blame any political party for the custom which has grown up here. It has been in existence since long before I came here. It exists under any administration.

As the Senator from Alabama said, we were not elected to run the executive branch of the Government. When a man comes here and takes the oath of office, he swears that he will confine his activities within the sphere allotted to him by the Constitution, the legislative body. Instead of that, we find that a great part of our time is taken up outside that sphere.

I think that anything which can be done to separate the business of the legislative department from that of the executive department ought to be done, and so far as this amendment is concerned I am in hearty sympathy with its aims.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] as follows: In line 11, after the word "if", I move to insert "upon the request of the person or corporation seeking a loan", so as to make it read:

> And if upon the request of the person or corporation seeking a loan such unlawful influence is used, the person or corporation seeking such loan shall be disqualified.

Mr. BLACK. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I am in entire sympathy with the suggestion that contracts should not be secured by undue political influence. Every Senator, I am sure, will be glad to be relieved of the necessity of taking up the subject of a contract in person or by correspondence with a department for the person who wants the contract.

On the other hand, I am wondering how far we ought to go with this proposed legislation. I should be somewhat embarrassed if someone from Ohio should say to me that he would like to be recommended or introduced to a department which is about to let a contract and I could not do so. I should feel in honor bound to introduce him.

Does this amendment go to the point where such an action would be a violation of the law? Would it be a violation of the terms of the amendment if a Senator presented someone who wanted a contract to the department letting the contract, and asked that consideration be given him?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, as I said a few moments ago, it is my judgment that such an act could not be construed as using influence. I have no doubt that the line can be so clearly drawn that it would be very easily understood, and I do not believe anyone would construe the introduction of a man to an official as using influence.

Mr. FESS. I would say to the Senator from Alabama that to relieve Senators from the onus of having to appear interested in their constituents getting contracts would be a great relief to us all. I agree that we ought not to regard that as being a part of our duty; it is rather something that most of us resent; but at the same time every citizen ought to have the support, it would appear, of his representative to see that he gets an introduction to the official charged with the duty of awarding contracts. I would not hesitate to do that, and it certainly could not be construed as the use of influence on the part of the Senator merely to go that far. However, I am wondering whether that would be a violation of this amendment. If it would be, I should not support it.

Mr. BLACK. I will say to the Senator that I would not so construe it. If the Senator will think of numerous incidents with reference, perhaps, to matters connected with his own State, involving some of its citizens who have lost contracts when they should not have done so, he will understand what is meant by "influence" in the purview of the amendment. I will give the Senator an example. There has been, perhaps, more controversy over the kind of stone that shall be used in Government buildings than over any other one subject during the past few years. It is my judgment that an investigation would disclose that political influence and pressure from day to day and week to week and month to month and year to year has brought about the use of stone from a certain State in this Union to an extent that would not have been possible if natural and legitimate business competition had been allowed to prevail. It is things like that to which I object. It is not fair to the public.

Mr. FESS. I share in the suggestion which the Senator makes.

Mr. BLACK. I do not object at all, I will say to the Senator; I do not think anyone would object to such an act as that to which he refers, and the amendment was never intended to cover a situation such as the Senator from Ohio has mentioned, or as was mentioned by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. FESS. Let me ask the Senator another question. Suppose that a contract is being let, and after bids are opened there is complaint on the part of a company, we will say, a company from Ohio, to the effect that it has been discriminated against and desires that the bids shall be reopened and that further consideration be given, would the amendment of the Senator from Alabama go to the extent that a Senator would be forbidden to ask the Department to reopen the bids?

Mr. BLACK. I will say that I do not think any influence should be used by a Senator to bring about a reopening of bids. I think if there has been an injustice done, if there has been a law violated, any Senator would have a right to call attention to it at the Department or on the Senate floor, and that he should do so.

Mr. FESS. The Senator will recall that there have been numerous cases where such a charge has been made?

Mr. BLACK. I understand that to be so.

Mr. FESS. The Senator will recall that there are frequently cases where the charge is made that the specifications have been changed so that a particular party in interest was discriminated against?

Mr. BLACK. I will state to the Senator that, so far as this amendment is concerned, it relates to nothing but loans from this fund of $250,000,000. It does not go to the extent of relating to bids.

Mr. FESS. That answers the question I have in mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and is still open to amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	Hebert	Patterson
Ashurst	Costigan	Johnson	Pope
Austin	Couzens	Kean	Robinson, Ark.
Bachman	Davis	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Bailey	Dickinson	King	Schall
Bankhead	Dill	La Follette	Shipstead
Barbour	Duffy	Lewis	Steiwer
Barkley	Erickson	Logan	Stephens
Black	Fess	Lonergan	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Fletcher	McCarran	Thomas, Utah
Borah	Frazier	McGill	Thompson
Bulkley	George	McKellar	Townsend
Bulow	Gibson	McNary	Tydings
Byrd	Glass	Metcalf	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Goldsborough	Murphy	Van Nuys
Capper	Hale	Norbeck	Walsh
Carey	Harrison	Norris	Wheeler
Clark	Hatch	Nye
Connally	Hatfield	O'Mahoney
Coolidge	Hayden	Overton

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I was unavoidably detained from the Senate at the time the vote was taken on the so-called "Johnson amendment." I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move to lay the motion of the Senator from Indiana on the table.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE and Mr. JOHNSON demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the question now is, as I understand, upon the motion of the Senator from Kentucky to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McGILL (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] who is unavoidably absent. If the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] were present, he would vote "yea." Were I at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BONE (when Mr. NEELY'S name was called). The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] is unavoidably absent from the Senate. I am advised that if he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. VANDENBERG (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I beg to reannounce the absence of the Senators and to restate the reasons heretofore given on the previous roll call, and to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH]. Being unable to say how my colleague would vote if present, I make no announcement in that regard.

Mr. McGILL. I have heretofore announced my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]. I find I can transfer that pair to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], which I do, and vote "nay."

Mr. COSTIGAN. The junior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] is unavoidably absent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (after having voted in the negative). I have been advised that the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], with whom I have a general pair, has not voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the following special pairs on this question:

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN];

The junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN] with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES];

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING];

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON];

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE];

The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS];

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON]; and

The Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT].

I desire further to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. ERICKSON], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT], the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—30

Adams	Carey	Goldsborough	Overton
Bailey	Clark	Hale	Robinson, Ark.
Barbour	Connally	Harrison	Schall
Barkley	Coolidge	Hebert	Townsend
Bulkley	Dickinson	Kean	Tydings

Dieterich	King	Reed	Wagner
Erickson	Long	Reynolds	Walcott
George	McAdoo	Russell	White

So the Senate refused to lay on the table the motion of Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] was rejected.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. HARRISON. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McGILL (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]. If he were present, he would vote "nay." I am informed that the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], if present, would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] and vote "yea."

Mr. BONE (when Mr. NEELY's name was called). I announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], and make the further announcement that were he present he would vote "yea."

Mr. FRAZIER (when Mr. NYE's name was called). My colleague the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] is unavoidably absent. He is paired on this question with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. If the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] were present, he would vote "yea", and the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] would vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). Announcing the same pair and transfer as on the last vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. VANDENBERG (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. COSTIGAN. I wish to make the same announcement as before respecting the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], who is unavoidably absent.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the following special pairs on this question:

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN];

The junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN] with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES];

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING];

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON];

The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS];

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON]; and

The Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT].

I desire further to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. ERICKSON], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THOMPSON] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT], the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—30

Ashurst	Dill	McCarran	Shipstead
Bachman	Duffy	McGill	Steiwer
Bankhead	Frazier	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.

So Mr. JOHNSON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the so-called "Black amendment" was adopted; and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider the so-called "Black amendment." On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). In the absence of the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], with whom I have a general pair, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY].

Mr. McGILL. On this question I am paired with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. LEWIS. I reannounce the absences announced by me on the previous roll call, and at this time announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH]. I do not know how he would vote if present, and therefore make no announcement as to his vote.

Mr. NYE. Upon this question I have a pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay"; and if the Senator from Oklahoma were present and voting, he would vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the following special pairs on this question:

The junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN] with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES];

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING];

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON];

The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS];

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON]; and

The Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT].

I desire further to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. ERICKSON], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THOMPSON] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT], the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

I wish further to announce that if present the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 38, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9323) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. RAYBURN, Mr. HUDDLESTON, Mr. LEA of California, Mr. COOPER of Ohio, and Mr. MAPES were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 8. An act to add certain lands to the Boise National Forest;

S. 1541. An act for the relief of Mucia Alger;

S. 1807. An act to provide for the exchange of Indian and privately owned lands, Fort Mojave Indian Reservation, Ariz.;

S. 1982. An act to add certain lands to the Mount Hood National Forest in the State of Oregon;

S. 1997. An act to compensate Harriet C. Holaday;

S. 2379. An act to provide for the selection of certain lands in the State of Arizona for the use of the University of Arizona;

S. 2568. An act granting a leave of absence to settlers of homestead lands during the years 1932, 1933, and 1934; and

S. 3144. An act to legalize a bridge across the St. Louis River at or near Cloquet, Minn.

LOANS BY FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS TO INDUSTRIES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3487) relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for action on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans direct to municipalities and other governmental subdivisions organized pursuant to State law, said loans to be made upon such security, in the form of tax-anticipation warrants, short-term notes, delinquent-tax certificates or other collateral as the Board may deem adequate to secure such loans; and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is further authorized and empowered to purchase the tax-anticipation warrants, short-term notes, delinquent-tax certificates or other collateral of municipalities and governmental subdivisions organized pursuant to State law, for the purpose of aiding such municipalities and governmental subdivisions in maintaining the necessary and essential governmental expenditures and services.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this amendment will put a test before the Senate as to whether or not it is in favor of discriminating against municipalities in favor of private enterprise.

We have adopted amendments to the bill extending loans to home owners, to farm owners, to railroads, to banks, to private enterprises of all kinds and descriptions, and there is not a word in the bill which would take care of distressed municipalities which are obliged to close their schools and hospitals because they cannot borrow the funds from private banks with which to carry on.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WALSH. In just a moment. This amendment is not offered by me as a personal matter, but on the petition of the mayors representing 110 cities of over 50,000 population. I will read the resolution passed by the mayors at a meeting held in Chicago in September 1933. It is as follows:

Be it resolved, That the United States Conference of Mayors petition the President and the Congress of the United States for the enactment of legislation authorizing properly safeguarded loans to cities on tax-anticipations warrants, delinquent-tax certificates, or other short-term collateral in order that the essential revenues of government may be maintained.

And be it further resolved, That, due to the break-down of the usual channels and facilities for extending legitimate credit to public bodies, it is urged that immediate consideration of this problem be given by the Federal Government.

I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desired to inquire whether the amendment of the Senator would authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, if it saw fit, to make loans to cities for all city governmental purposes, including the payment of the salaries of their officers, including the mayor, police department, fire department, and all of the city administration?

Mr. WALSH. It would not. The amendment provides for loans on short-term municipal securities, that is all.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand, but the money may have been raised for any municipal purpose. It is not limited to any particular function of the city government?

Mr. WALSH. It is customary for most municipalities, at the beginning of the year, to borrow money in anticipation of the collection of taxes, for the purpose of carrying on the legitimate activities of the city government. The money borrowed can be used without designation just as all other loans of the R.F.C. are not earmarked.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that they would come to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under the amendment?

Mr. WALSH. They would come there if they are unable to get the money from the banks, just as the banks and private industry goes to the R.F.C. for loans with satisfactory securities.

Mr. BARKLEY. They could deliberately refuse to levy sufficient taxes on the property of the city to meet their expenses, and could come here and borrow the money from the Government.

Mr. WALSH. They certainly could not do any such thing. That is an indictment of local officials that is not justified. They will meet their obligations as fully and honestly as private borrowers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Why not?

Mr. WALSH. They would have to and they would repay the Government when the securities became due. Cities and towns, I assert, are more financially responsible than these distressed private parties to whom we are extending loans.

Mr. BARKLEY. Unless a city took advantage of the municipal bankruptcy law, and went into bankruptcy before the date of maturity.

Mr. GLASS. I was just about to say they would not necessarily have to repay; they could go into bankruptcy, under the bankruptcy law.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WALSH. I yield. But let me add first that private industries and banks can and do go into bankruptcy easier and more freely than cities.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts contemplate loans to drainage, irrigation, and reclamation districts, they being taxing districts under the Federal and State authorities? I hope it does, because I should want to include those in it.

Mr. WALSH. It includes all subdivisions of State governments. I do not know that it goes so far as to include the subdivisions the Senator names. The purpose of the amendment is to permit cities, counties, and towns to sell short-term paper to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Now, and heretofore, they have had to raise money on them through the banks, and the banks have been unable to lend them during the depression what they need. Every Senator who has been familiar with local governments knows the great trouble they have had in borrowing money on their short-term securities. This would permit local governments to borrow through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The loans would be of short duration and not in the class of self-liquidating projects such as drainage canals. All this amendment would do would be to extent credit to municipalities over a short period of time. This is a request that the municipalities in distress be permitted to borrow from the Federal Government on their short-term securities for 6 months or 9 months. Who can refuse to support the amendment, in view of the fact that we have been voting to permit private enterprises of all types to borrow money?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Nevada, I wish to say that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation already has power to make loans to drainage districts, and is already doing so. Recently we made a $50,000,000 appropriation to enable them to go further in that direction, which makes $100,000,000 we have made available for that very purpose. They are doing it now, and they are doing it efficiently. They have done a fine piece of work in that connection, and they have gotten more for their money in relieving land under drainage districts from the burdens overhanging it than in almost any other activity of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. In reply to the suggestion of the learned Senator from Kentucky, while the law might be construed, and may have been construed, as applying to drainage districts, we have found great difficulty in having the authorities apply the same rule to irrigation and reclamation districts. That was the reason why I propounded the question as to whether there was any language in the proposed amendment which would include those districts. If so, I shall be glad to support it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the amendment does not require the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make any loan; it authorizes it to do so. It permits it to do so. It does not compel it to make any loan. Are we going to refuse the municipalities of this country which are in distress the privilege which we have extended to private individuals in distress?

I want to read a paragraph from the statement of the mayors, and then I will yield the floor. I read:

We know, from a careful study of the problem, that municipal credit, similar to all other types of credit, has been in a state of collapse for the past year. The market for short-term municipal securities (tax-anticipation notes, warrants, and bonds) continues to be severely limited. The results of this are, of course, reflected not only in curtailed governmental services, such as schools, health and police and fire, reduced pay for most public employees and payless pay days for others, but in the forced use of scrip, and even in defaults. Since municipal government is the foundation stone of democratic government, this condition, too often lightly dismissed, is most serious and is a definite drag upon steps taken by the National Government leading toward economic recovery.

The causes of this are in part due to the inability (and in some cases unwillingness) of the citizen to pay his taxes. Banking institutions also offer as an excuse the existing uncertainty of the monetary and currency situation. Without appraising these elements, the fact remains public bodies today are face to face with the inability to finance the operation of essential governmental services. To bolster banks, railroads, building-and-loan associations, farm owners, home owners, and many other institutions and groups the Government has found it possible to extend credit of a legitimate character without impairment to the financial structure of the National Government. It would seem that city government itself, in times of stress, should be treated on a parity at least with private enterprises. We therefore urge extending credit to public bodies on sound collateral at reasonable interest rates in order that needed services of government may be maintained.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. It is not pleasant for me to oppose such a measure as is presented by the able Senator from Massachusetts, but I presented a plea on behalf of the school teachers of the city of Chicago who have met with such a sad fate in having their salaries withheld month after month, but my proposal was voted down, on the theory that the warrants of the city of Chicago and the tax certificates were not themselves legal securities. I ask the Senator whether this amendment of his would comprehend lending money to the teachers, based upon the tax-anticipation warrants of the schools?

Mr. WALSH. It would permit the officials of the city of Chicago to sell, if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is willing to buy them, their short-term tax-exempt securities, and they could spend the money as they saw fit, for school purposes, for hospitals, or for any other activity. The amendment simply provides for what has been extended to private industries, providing a method for cities to raise money to carry on their legitimate activities.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I want to say, in connection with the proposed amendment, that it is much more dangerous, so far as the welfare of the Treasury is concerned, than any amendment we have refused to accept today. In other words, the communities this amendment is aimed to relieve already have adequate taxing power. The trouble is that some of the city administrators do not collect the taxes due, and so long as the Federal Government will relieve the city officials everywhere from going out and collecting taxes they will not put forth the effort to make the collections.

Mr. President, the fourth largest city in the United States has been required to take care of its own needs, its own tax delinquencies, and its own tax-anticipation certificates by the issuance of scrip, which they have paid off when that scrip has become due. That is local self-government, which ought to be insisted upon and maintained.

I dislike to disagree with the Senator from Massachusetts, but we will never educate communities or make them rely upon themselves so long as the Government unnecessarily comes to their support.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. What about educating the banks, railroads, and private industries, and the private activities to which we are lending money to rely upon themselves? Why should they not also anticipate depressions and not be caught, as they are, in such financial distress as the present?

Mr. COUZENS. They have no taxing power.

Mr. GLASS. On that point there is not a particle of discrimination in this bill against any community or the private citizens of any community desirous of starting enterprises. The communities of Massachusetts can borrow money under this bill if they want to inaugurate private enterprises or extend private enterprises just as much as communities in Virginia.

Moreover, I do not attach a particle of importance to the suggestion of the mayors. The mayor of the principal city in my State signed that abominable paper, and he knows perfectly well that the credit of his city stands almost as high as that of any city in the United States; yet he signed a document such as that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it seems to me that this amendment would impose an appalling and impossible obligation on the Federal Government. There is no limit proposed except the necessities or demands of the municipalities and other subdivisions organized pursuant to State law.

We had just as well understand now that the Federal Government cannot finance everything and everybody. It cannot finance the State governments, the municipalities, the county governments, and the districts. We have already provided loans in large amounts to municipalities and other political subdivisions for the purpose of constructing public works. We have appropriated hundreds of millions of dollars for indigent relief. We may find it necessary to appropriate additional funds.

This amendment authorizes—

Loans direct to municipalities and other governmental subdivisions organized pursuant to State law, * * * for the purpose of aiding such municipalities and governmental subdivisions in maintaining the necessary and essential governmental expenditures and services.

In other words, it calls upon the Federal Government to finance the governments of the cities and the political subdivisions of all the States, and I say it cannot safely do that. It would result in disaster.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to read the amendment again, to indicate that it is permissive, and to indicate that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation cannot make loans unless they are satisfied with the security.

That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans direct to municipalities and other governmental subdivisions organized pursuant to State law—

That means counties and school districts, and so forth—

said loans to be made upon such security, in the form of tax-anticipation warrants, short-term notes, delinquent tax certificates, or other collateral, as the board may deem adequate to secure such loans.

Is any stronger protective language used in any amendments which have been adopted to any provisions of this bill?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I ask the Senator what amount would be required to finance the operations under the amendment?

Mr. WALSH. I assume that no city which could obtain money in any bank of the country would come before the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to get a loan. I assume that the R.F.C. would say what it says now to private industry: "Go back and get a loan from your bank. If you cannot, or if they have no money to loan, we will try to help you." I assume that the R.F.C. would treat municipalities the same as private enterprises are treated and not differently.

Permit me to say that I am not asking this for the cities of my State We have met this problem, and it has been solved in nearly all cases of municipal distress. It is desired, however, for many cities and towns throughout the country. I am presenting it for the mayors of the country.

All I want is a record vote. The mayors have a bill pending in the House and they have a bill pending in the Senate. No action has been taken upon those bills. This is their opportunity. I ask for a record vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McGILL (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]. He is unavoidably absent. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. BONE (when Mr. NEELEY's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]. I am not advised as to how he would vote on this particular amendment.

Mr. NYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea." If the Senator from Oklahoma were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). Announcing the same pair and transfer as on the last roll call, I vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I again announce my general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I reannounce the absences previously announced by me. I reannounce the reasons given. I now announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH]. Were he present and voting, he would vote "yea."

Mr. COSTIGAN. The junior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] is unavoidably absent. If present, she would vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY (after having voted in the negative). Has the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. McNARY. Then I withdraw my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the following special pairs on this question:

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH];

The junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN] with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES];

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING];

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON];

The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS];

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON];

The Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT]; and

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN].

I desire further to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. ERICKSON], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], and the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT], the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

I desire further to announce that if present the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] would vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] to my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—16

Ashurst	Bone	La Follette	Shipstead
Bachman	Coolidge	Lewis	Thomas, Okla.
Bankhead	Copeland	McCarran	Van Nuys

So Mr. WALSH's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF FOR DEPOSITORS OF CLOSED BANKS

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, on Saturday, on behalf of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and myself, I offered an amendment to the bill which has just been passed. Having had a vote on the amendment and having listened to the discussion, it seems to me that it is useless for us to press the proposal further at this time.

Much was said in the debate about the importance of having some consideration of the subject in the Banking and Currency Committee. I assume that that was said in good faith. Therefore, in behalf of the Senator from Michigan and myself, I present the proposal in the form of a bill for reference to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I do so in the hope that it may really be considered by that committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be received and referred as requested.

The bill (S. 3614, introduced by Mr. COPELAND and Mr. VANDENBERG) to amend section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act to provide relief for depositors of closed banks, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9323) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment, agree to the conference requested by the House of Representatives, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, and Mr. COUZENS conferees on the part of the Senate.

PREVENTION OF CRIME

Mr. ASHURST submitted the following reports:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2080) to provide punishment for killing or assaulting Federal officers having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

RANDOLPH PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2845) to extend the provisions of the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act to other stolen property having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 3, 4, and 5, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment strike out, beginning in line 13, on page 1, down through line 9, page 2, of the House engrossed amendments and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 4. Whoever shall receive, conceal, store, barter, sell, or dispose of any goods, wares, or merchandise, securities, or money, of the value of $5,000 or more, or whoever shall pledge or accept as security for a loan any goods, wares, or merchandise, or securities, of the value of $500 or more which while moving in or constituting a part of interstate or foreign commerce, has been stolen or taken feloniously by fraud or with intent to steal or purloin, knowing the same to have been stolen or taken, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment of not more than 10 years, or both."

And on page 1, line 7, of the House engrossed amendments insert a comma after "money."

And the House agree to the same.

HENRY F. ASHURST,
WILLIAM H. KING,
WM. E. BORAH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

HATTON W. SUMNERS,
A. J. MONTAGUE,
TOM D. MCKEOWN,
RANDOLPH PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, these are conference reports on the so-called "antigangster bills." The Senate conferees were the Senator from Utah, Mr. KING; the Senator from Idaho, Mr. BORAH; and I. Senators will remember that the Senator from Michigan, Mr. VANDENBERG, and the Senator from New York, Mr. COPELAND, charged the Senate conferees specifically not to recede with reference to the provisions relating to fleeing felons and to fleeing witnesses. I wish to say that the House receded and the Senate provisions in those respects were retained in their original form.

I move the adoption of the conference reports.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask that the Senator allow the conference reports to go over until tomorrow.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well. A full explanation of the reports will be found in the RECORD of May 11, beginning at page 8775.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the conference reports will lie on the table.

REGULATION OF COMMUNICATIONS BY WIRE AND RADIO

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3285) to provide for the regulation of interstate and foreign communications by wire or radio, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3285) to provide for the regulation of interstate and foreign communications by wire or radio, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with amendments.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement explanatory of the bill and to answer any questions that may be asked. However, I shall not attempt to take up any amendments at this time.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I understood the Senator to desire to make a formal statement with reference to the bill this evening. I rather thought we were going to recess at this hour. Many Senators have left the Chamber. I am sure they would like to be here to hear the Senator's statement.

Mr. DILL. I am willing to yield to whatever the leaders of the Senate desire.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Oregon that there are more Senators now present than are usually to be found on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. MCNARY. That may be true, but we met at 11 o'clock this morning, and it is now after 5 o'clock.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well, if the Senator insists. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 15, 1934, at 11 o'clock a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MAY 14, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Remember, O Lord, Thy tender mercies and Thy loving-kindness, for they have been ever of old. Strong Son of God, immortal love, make us partakers of that strength and tenderness and of that glory which Thou dost have with the Father. May we seek ardently deeper truth, clearer wisdom, and purity of heart, mingled with might and mellowness. In the spirit of diligence, honor, and helpfulness, may we fulfill our tasks, securing contentment and welfare for our fellow citizens. We praise Thee that all the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth unto such as keep His covenant and His testimonies. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 11, 1934, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H.J.Res. 317. Joint resolution requesting the President of the United States of America to proclaim May 20, 1934, General La Fayette Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the death of General La Fayette.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 9323. An act to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3443. An act to provide for the creation of the Pioneer National Monument in the State of Kentucky, and for other purposes.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday of this week be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE—MOTION TO RECOMMIT

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, the highest privileged motion that is accorded to a minority is a motion to recommit. It is the only way that a minority has of expressing itself. I think that rule should always remain sacred and inviolate in the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the one privilege that, under the rules of the House, cannot be taken away even by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, that is correct.

On page 8651 of Friday's RECORD, when the road bill was under consideration—and I may state this is entirely impersonal—the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] rose to make a motion to recommit. The Speaker ascertained if he was qualified, and he stated:

I am opposed to the bill in its present form.

He was thereupon recognized by the Speaker to make a motion to recommit. A roll call immediately followed. The gentleman from Michigan voted "aye" on the roll call; that is, on the motion to recommit. Now, without any business transpiring, there was immediately another roll call on the passage of the bill, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] voted "aye" on the passage of the bill.

I respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Michigan did not qualify and therefore should not have been recognized, had the Speaker known it, under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] correctly states the rule. The motion to recommit is a motion specially reserved for the protection of the minority under the rules, and the Speaker must give preference, in recognizing for such motions, to Members on the minority side, preferably a member of the committee having charge of the bill. The Speaker is required to ask the Member proposing a motion to recommit whether or not he is against the bill. If the Member answers that he is against the bill, that is as far as the Speaker can go in the matter. The fact that the Member says he is against the bill in its present form does not qualify his statement in the least. If he is against the bill, of course he is against the bill in its present form, and there could not be any change made in the bill between a motion to recommit and the vote on the passage of the bill. It is a matter for the conscience of the Member, and the Speaker must recognize a Member on the minority side if he qualifies, and the Member did qualify in this case.

There is nothing the Speaker could do except recognize him. That is a matter within the conscience of the gentleman making the motion.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I am much interested in the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN]. During my entire attendance in this House I have been a stickler, so to speak, for the rules and precedents of the House. I think the rule with regard to a motion to recommit ought to be obeyed under all circumstances. I have always stood for that. I do not care how strong the Speaker puts the proposition to a Member rising to offer that motion. I have had a little argument heretofore during this session with regard to a motion to recommit, and I am very glad the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] has raised this question. I hope the strict intention of the rules of the House with regard to that rule will be followed at all times in the future.

The SPEAKER. There is no other way in which the Speaker can ascertain the mental attitude of the Member proposing the motion nor what his mental reservations may be.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, of course, the statement made by the Speaker is entirely correct, and is a correct interpretation of the rule as far as the Speaker is concerned, and as far as the Speaker can control the matter. In its last analysis—and I do not say this in any harshness, of course—it seems to me that a Member who, after having qualified himself as opposed to the bill, then goes ahead immediately after that motion is rejected and votes for the bill in its present form, simply presents a matter of good faith and good conscience.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not have the floor.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not think we ought to preclude a good Republican from seeing the light even on the spur of the moment, and possibly he had a change of heart.

Mr. SNELL. No. We do not change as quickly as that.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, so that the record may be more complete on this subject, I call the attention of the Speaker and the House to a practice that has grown up in the House during the last few years, which I have seen happen time and time again. It is this, a Member not really opposed to the bill has often secured recognition to offer a motion to recommit containing a technical or unimportant amendment to the bill solely and unfairly for the purpose of forestalling another Member sincerely opposed to the bill from obtaining the right to move to recommit with a real substantial amendment. I have always thought that this was a most under-handed practice.

Mr. SNELL. I fully agree with the statements made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR. For my own part I should like to see this question put by the Speaker to the Member offering a motion to recommit: "Does the gentleman intend to vote against this bill?"

Mr. SNELL. We on the minority side will try to see that Members offering motions to recommit are opposed to the bill.

THE NATCHEZ TRACE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address I made before the Committee on Roads recently.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, under the permission granted me on yesterday to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I submit the following address which I delivered before the Committee on Roads of the House of Representatives on Monday, March 5, 1934, in the interest of the proposed Natchez Trace Highway:

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I am interested in the rebuilding and marking of this Natchez Trace Highway, largely from a memorial standpoint. In order to show my reasons for supporting this measure, and the reasons for the original location of this road, I am going to give you a little of the historical background of it.

I live in the Chickasaw territory. The Chickasaws and Choctaws both occupied parts of the district which I have the honor to represent.

In 1539 Hernando De Soto, an illustrious young Spanish cavalier, who had just returned to Spain from an expedition under Pizzaro in Peru, gathered the most impressive group of men that ever made an expedition into the wilds of the new world—men from the first families of Spain—and started on his dramatic but ill-fated expedition.

He landed in Florida with about 1,000 men and about 350 horses. He also had with him about 300 hogs, and the rest of his expedition was in proportion. He came first up into Georgia and then went back down into what is now Alabama, and then turned north into the Chickasaw territory.

He was told by the Indians in southern Alabama that far to the north he would find a rich country inhabited by a powerful tribe of Indians who had plenty of corn with which to feed his horses and his hogs and supply his expedition.

He crossed the Tombigbee River somewhere between Columbus and Fulton. I have two maps in my office, one showing that he crossed just above Columbus, near old Plymouth, and the other that he crossed about where the town of Fulton now stands. Just west of the river he found the Chickasaw Indians at the town of Chicasa. He spent the winter of 1540–41 there, and in the spring he had a misunderstanding with those Indians. They made a raid on him at night, demoralized his forces, and drove them out of their territory. From that day on the Chickasaw Indians could never tolerate a Latin-speaking European.

By the way, the cause of this falling out—I will give you some history now, and if our old friend and former colleague, Charlie Carter, were here he could verify it—that falling out was over those hogs. The Spaniards gave a banquet. The Indians were to furnish the hominy, and the Spaniards were to furnish the meat. Malone, in his history of the Chickasaws, says that is where hog and hominy first met. The Indians liked the meat. They stole some of those hogs, and the Spaniards, by way of punishment, cut their hands off.

The CHAIRMAN. I have heard that story before.

Mr. RANKIN. That angered the great chief, and he prepared for this attack, which resulted in the defeat of the Spaniards.

Two hundred years later Bienville, the French Governor of the Mississippi Territory, was instructed or ordered by the French Crown to consolidate their colonies in Louisiana with those in Indiana and Canada. They managed to pacify, or overcome, all of the Indian chiefs and Indian tribes between those two points except the Chickasaws. They even pacified the Choctaws, but the Chickasaws had never forgotten their misunderstanding with De Soto, which had been passed down from generation to generation, and they had never been friendly with any of the Latin-speaking inhabitants of the New World.

The object of that expedition was to solidify those forces and to take charge of all of the western half of this continent. On the outcome of the contest with the Chickasaws depended the fate of more territory than ever depended on the outcome of any other battle fought on American soil, with the possible exception of the Battle of Gettysburg. They sent an army up the Tombigbee River from Mobile, under Bienville, who headed it himself. De Artaguette, the lieutenant governor, headed an expedition from Fort Vincennes. He was accompanied by Vincennes himself. They were to make their way overland to Ackia, the Indian capital, after descending the Mississippi River.

By the way, the Government has gone to a good deal of trouble and expense to erect a monument to Vincennes at Fort Vincennes out in Indiana, but the truth is he was captured and burned by the Indians at Pontotoc, Miss.

The Chickasaws were probably the most enlightened of all of the American tribes and the most powerful for their numbers. Charley Carter says that they had approximately 2,000 men as well trained as any that ever followed Julius Caesar. They had through their emissaries gained the information concerning these impending attacks. They met De Artaguette and Vincennes on the 20th of May 1736 near what is now the town of Pontotoc, and routed their forces, and captured both Vincennes and De Artaguette and burned them at the stake.

Six days later, May 26, 1736, they met Bienville at Ackia, defeated his forces, sent them back in wild rout of ignominious defeat, and saved their territory from French domination. Now, I am coming down to the question of how it became possible, and necessary, for this road to be established. They saved that territory from falling into the hands of the French and possibly saved the western half of this continent for the English-speaking race.

I am having this battlefield surveyed, and the War Department has already recommended the erection of a monument there. We are now preparing a bill for the erection of such a monument there in 1936, the two hundredth anniversary of this battle, as will be worthy of its importance in American history.

You may search the records of every battle that has ever been fought and you cannot escape the conclusion that it was one of the decisive battles of the world. It is said, and I believe the French commander, Bienville, makes the statement in his report of the battle, that they saw an English flag inside this fort. I do not doubt it, because the Indians are said to have used artillery, although Bienville does not state that specifically in his report.

When Georgia was settled by the English, the Chickasaws got in touch with them or they got in touch with the Chickasaws and made friends with them. Is is said that Charles Wesley preached to some of the Chickasaws. From that day to this the Chickasaws have never in any war shed the blood of an English-speaking white man.

This battle of Ackia was the beginning of what we call the French and Indian War. If the French had won that battle the chances are that instead of that controversy being finally decided upon the Plains of Abraham it would have been fought along the Mississippi River.

One hundred years later these Indians were still friendly to the American people and we had begun to move in there. Some of my people were there at that time. When the war between Great Britain and the United States broke out in 1812 this old trail had already been laid out but you will see that the Chickasaw and Choctaw territory extended from up in Tennessee here almost to Natchez and if the Chickasaws and the Choctaws had been unfriendly to the United States, Andrew Jackson never could have gone to New Orleans.

At that time there arose a great controversy among the American Indians as to just what course they would take. Tecumseh, one of the greatest Indians who ever lived, was a Shawnee chief. He felt that his people had been badly treated by the Americans and sought to line up all the Indian tribes of the country on the side of the British.

Pushmataha was chief of the Choctaws. He is said to have been of Chickasaw descent. They called a great council of the Chickasaw and Choctaw Indians and Tecumseh addressed them. Pushmataha replied to him. That occurred also in the district which I have the honor to represent. There are not two men in the Senate today who can duplicate the speeches that were made by those two men. There are not two men in the House who could make such speeches on a great overshadowing issue as those two made by Tecumseh and his adversary Pushmataha. I should like to read those speeches showing how Pushmataha took sides with the Americans and Tecumseh with the English. During the arguments it became very bitter and the last word Pushmataha said to Tecumseh was this:

"The Americans have been our friends and we shall stand by them. We will furnish you safe conduct to the boundaries of this nation as properly befits the dignity of your office. Farewell, Tecumseh. You will see Pushmataha no more until we meet on the fateful warpath."

Pushmataha's speech was inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 13, 1921, in an address made by Charley Carter, of Oklahoma, a Member of the House at that time, and who has since passed away. Charley Carter knew more of the history of the Chickasaws than any other man I have ever met, and I am going to ask to insert Mr. Carter's speech, which includes an analysis of Tecumseh's speech and also the reply of Pushmataha.

The CHAIRMAN. We will be glad to have that done.

ADDRESS OF HON. CHARLES D. CARTER, OF OKLAHOMA

"When the busy closing hours of the Sixty-first Congress were dragging along toward midnight, a page came to me on the floor and told me that Mr. Adam Byrd, from Mississippi, who was retiring from Congress, was about to leave for home and desired to see me for a few moments before departing. Mr. Byrd led me to a secluded spot in the Democratic cloakroom and after a brief explanation enjoined on me two responsibilities, which he said he felt it my duty to undertake. The first has no connection with this meeting today, but after finishing that this fine old fellow said, in a most serious way: 'Charley, you are an Indian, and I want to talk to you about another Indian. Old Chief Pushmataha was by long odds the greatest Indian who ever lived. Our Southland had many brave, heroic pioneers—Dale, Claiborne, Andrew Jackson, and others—but this primitive, unlettered Indian did as much during the early part of the nineteenth century toward saving the white population and the things it stands for as any of these, not even excepting his bosom friend, Old Hickory himself. Our American people may not be ungrateful, but they are the most thoughtless, forgetful people in the world, for they have woefully neglected giving anything like adequate credit for the valuable services Pushmataha rendered the white people then living south of the Ohio River and their descendants. While he had much to do with making my own State possible, I doubt if there is 1 school teacher out of 50 in Mississippi who knows anything about his history. I doubt if there are 10 men in Congress who even know that his body rests out here in Congressional Cemetery, and before I came here they did not even do his memory the honor to put flowers on his grave on Decoration Day. I visit his grave on every Sunday when the weather will permit, and I see that it is properly decorated at the proper time. Now, I know you are not going to visit his grave every Sunday as I have, but I do want you to promise me that you will go out there occasionally and that you will see that the old chief's grave is given proper attention on Decoration Day.' I had barely time to agree when he took me by the hand, saying, 'Good-bye and God bless you', went out of the cloakroom, and I never saw him again, for he died shortly afterward.

"I have done my best to keep this pledge, and no Decoration Day has passed since that time without appropriate decorations being placed on Pushmataha's grave, but had Adam Byrd failed to make that farewell call on me that night we might not be here today doing just honor to the memory of this truly great man. Adam Byrd was right. Pushmataha was a great chief. He was one of the greatest Indians who ever lived. He was more than that. He was one of the greatest characters of his generation. The old chief was a skillful hunter, an intrepid warrior, a close student of nature, a powerful orator, and a persuasive debater in the councils of his tribe. He had an acute sense of justice not only between man and man but between nations as well. By patient and sagacious statesmanship, and wise, far-seeing counsel he successfully steered the Choctaw ship of state through the then turbulent complications without, to use his own proud boast, ever having found it necessary 'to raise the tomahawk against the Great White Father at Washington or his children.'

"The absorbing ambition of Pushmataha was that his people might become the equal of the whites in education and civilization and take their place beside the white man in a business way, in a professional way, and in the councils of the Nation. He was always an advocate of education and industry among his people and contributed much not only of his time but of his small income to that end. He was dearly beloved by both the Choctaws and Chickasaws, and after his death one of the executive and judicial districts of his nation in Indian Territory was named in his honor. When the forty-sixth star was added to the constellation of Old Glory the Oklahoma people gave evidence of their appreciation of the memory of this grand old man by naming one of the largest and most beautiful counties of the State for him.

"But I must not trespass too greatly upon your time. You are to have the privilege of hearing this great man's life and character discussed by those much better informed and equipped than myself. I will pause only long enough to tell you something of what I believe his own people, the Choctaws, consider one of the Pushmataha's greatest achievements. This has to do with the part he took in saving the white man's civilization west of the Alleghenies and specifically his reply to the wonderful address delivered before the Choctaw council by the great Shawnee orator, Tecumseh. The War of 1812 was impending and the British authorities were doing all in their power to stir up antagonism between the Indians and the Americans. The astute Shawnee chief, Tecumseh, was sent on a tour by British agents to organize all Indians west of the Alleghenies with the purpose to expel the white Americans beyond the mountains. One of the first tribes he visited was the Choctaw. After his mission had been explained to Pushmataha, the wise old chief advised Tecumseh that he was only one of the three chiefs of the Choctaw Nation; that the Choctaws could only take part in any war upon the decision of the general council of the tribe; and that before this was done they would probably desire to consult their kindred tribe and ally, the Chickasaws. Tecumseh then requested that both tribes be called together in order that he might lay his plan before the council. After a consultation with the other two Choctaw chiefs, Masholatubby and Apuckshinubby, and the principal chief of the Chickasaws, a general council of the two tribes was called.

"Tecumseh was classed by many of his contemporaries as the most powerful debater of his generation, and this was saying much, for it was during the day of Clay, Calhoun, and Webster. Realizing the full power of his oratory, Tecumseh surmised if he could get to speak to the Choctaw people in general council they would not be able to resist his magnetic logic and eloquence. The council was assembled, and Tecumseh, with his suite of 30 warriors bedecked in panoply of paint and feathers, filed in before the council fire to deliver his address. We must bear in mind that the Shawnees spoke an entirely different language from the Choctaws and Chickasaws, the Shawnees belonging to the Algonquin stock and speaking their dialect, while the Choctaws and Chickasaws are of the Appalachian stock and spoke the Muskogeon dialect. Therefore it was necessary for each speech to be translated by an interpreter so all might understand.

"The great Shawnee chief was thoroughly familiar with past relations between all Indian tribes and the whites, and he began by recounting all the wrongs perpetrated on the Indians by the palefaces since the landing of Columbus. He related how the white man had beguiled the Indians along the Atlantic coast to part with their lands for a few trifling beads and a little fire water, leaving them beggars, vagabonds, peons, and strangers in their own land, to be scorned and despised by their paleface neighbors. He told how the Shawnees and other northern tribes were being stripped of their patrimony. He laid down the principle that the Great Spirit had given the Western Hemisphere to all red people in common and that no particular tribe had anything more than the right of possession to any lands, and, therefore, asserted any relinquishment of title by one tribe to be null and void, because many of the owners had not joined in the transfer.

"These wrongs discussed he declared had been made possible by the ingenuity of the whites in attacking only one tribe at a time, but if all Indians would join and combine their forces in one attack at one time, the white man could be driven back over the mountains whence he came; that the golden opportunity was now at hand to join hands with the British and scourge from their revered hunting grounds eternally the hated paleface. He closed his eloquent address with a stirring appeal to the patriotism of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, asking if they would await complete submission or would they now join hands and fight beside the Shawnees and other tribes rather than submit?

"Evidently Tecumseh's purpose had been fully accomplished. His magnetic words seemed to arouse every vindictive sentiment within the souls of the Choctaws and Chickasaw warriors; their savage enthusiasm had been stirred to white heat when Pushmataha calmly strode before the council fire and began his wonderful reply to Tecumseh's speech. What a pity that no accurate account of this wonderful debate between these two giant primitive orators was at that time preserved! Lincecum, Pickett, Randall, and other historians have left us brief excerpts; Cushman undertakes to give Pushmataha's speech in full; but his recital does not even do faint justice to the original and in no measure conforms to the Choctaws' account of it. For many years it was handed down from generation to generation by tradition to the Choctaws and Chickasaws, but it can be easily understood how that method might fail to preserve all the virile force and eloquence of this wonderful address. I will undertake to give it to you in part as nearly as I remember hearing it told by some of the old Indians many years ago. Pushmataha begins his address as follows:

PUSHMATAHA'S REPLY TO TECUMSEH

"'Omiske, tushkahoma ho chukma hashche yumma! Anumpa tilofasih ish huko.

"'(Attention, my good red warriors! Hear ye my brief remarks.)

"'The great Shawnee orator has portrayed in vivid picture the wrongs inflicted on his and other tribes by the ravages of the paleface. The candor and fervor of his eloquent appeal breathe the conviction of truth and sincerity, and, as kindred tribes, naturally we sympathize with the misfortunes of his people. I do not come before you in any disputation either for or against these charges. It is not my purpose to contradict any of these allegations against the white man, but neither am I here to indulge in any indiscreet denunciation of him which might bring down upon my people unnecessary difficulty and embarrassment.

"'The distinguished Shawnee sums up his eloquent appeal to us with this direct question:

"'"Will you sit idly by, supinely awaiting complete and abject submission, or will you die fighting beside your brethren, the Shawnees, rather than submit to such ignominy?"

"'These are plain words, and it is well they have been spoken, for they bring the issue squarely before us. Mistake not, this language means war. And war with whom, pray? War with some band of marauders who have committed these depredations against the Shawnees? War with some alien host seeking the destruction of the Choctaws and Chickasaws? Nay, my fellow tribesmen. None of these are the enemy we will be called on to meet. If we take up arms against the Americans, we must of necessity meet in deadly combat our daily neighbors and associates in this part of the country near our homes.

"'If Tecumseh's words be true, and we doubt them not, then the Shawnees' experience with the whites has not been the same as that of the Choctaws. These white Americans buy our skins, our corn, our cotton, our surplus game, our baskets, and other wares, and they give us in fair exchange their cloth, their guns, their tools, implements, and other things which the Choctaws need but do not make. It is true we have befriended them, but who will deny that these acts of friendship have been abundantly reciprocated? They have given us cotton gins, which simplify the spinning and sale of our cotton; they have encouraged and helped us in the production of our crops; they have taken many of our wives into their homes to teach them useful things, and pay them for their work while learning; they are teaching our children to read and write from their books. You all remember well the dreadful epidemic visited upon us last winter. During its darkest hours these neighbors whom we are now urged to attack responded generously to our needs. They doctored our sick; they clothed our suffering; they fed our hungry; and where is the Choctaw or Chickasaw delegation who has ever gone to St. Stephens with a worthy cause and been sent away empty handed? So in marked contrast with the experience of the Shawnees, it will be seen that the whites and Indians in this section are living on friendly and mutually beneficial terms.

"'Forget not, O Choctaws and Chickasaws, that we are bound in peace to the Great White Father at Washington by a sacred treaty and the Great Spirit will punish those who break their word. The Great White Father has never violated that treaty and the Choctaws have never yet been driven to the necessity of taking up the tomahawk against him or his children. Therefore the question before us tonight is not the avenging of any wrongs perpetrated against us by the whites, for the Choctaws and Chickasaws have no such cause, either real or imaginary, but rather it is a question of carrying on that record of fidelity and justice for which our forefathers ever proudly stood, and doing that which is best calculated to promote the welfare of our own people. Yea, my fellow tribesmen, we are a just people. We do not take up the warpath without a just cause and honest purpose. Have we that just cause against our white neighbors, who have taken nothing from us except by fair bargain and exchange? Is this a just recompense for their assistance to us in our agricultural and other pursuits? Is this to be their gracious reward for teaching our children from their books? Shall this be considered the Choctaws' compensation for feeding our hungry, clothing our needy, and administering to our sick? Have we, O Choctaws and Chickasaws, descended to the low estate of ruthlessly breaking the faith of a sacred treaty? Shall our forefathers look back from the happy hunting grounds only to see their unbroken record for justice, gratitude, and fidelity thus rudely repudiated and abruptly abandoned by an unworthy offspring?

"'We Choctaws and Chickasaws are a peaceful people, making our subsistence by honest toil; but mistake not, my Shawnee brethren, we are not afraid of war. Neither are we strangers to war, as those who have undertaken to encroach upon our rights in the past may abundantly testify. We are thoroughly familiar with war in all its details, and we know full well all its horrible consequences. It is unnecessary for me to remind you, O Choctaws and Chickasaws, veteran braves of many fierce conflicts in the past, that war is an awful thing. If we go into this war against the Americans, we must be prepared to accept its inevitable results. Not only will it foretoken deadly conflict with neighbors and death to warriors, but it will mean suffering for our women, hunger and starvation for our children, grief for our loved ones, and devastation of our beloved homes. Notwithstanding these difficulties, if the cause be just we should not hesitate to defend our rights to the last man, but before that fatal step is irrevocably taken, it is well that we fully understand and seriously consider the full portent and consequences of the act.

"'Hear me, O Choctaws and Chickasaws, for I speak truly for your welfare. It is not the province of your chiefs to settle these important questions. As a people, it is your prerogative to have either peace or war, and as one of your chiefs it is mine simply to counsel and advise. Therefore, let me admonish you that this critical period is no time to cast aside your wits and let blind impulse sway; be not driven like dumb brutes by the frenzied harangue of this wonderful Shawnee orator; let your good judgment rule, and ponder seriously before breaking bonds that have served you well and ere you change conditions which have brought peace and happiness to your wives, your sisters, and your children. I would not undertake to dictate the course of one single Choctaw warrior. Permit me to speak for the moment, not as your chief but as a Choctaw warrior weighing this question beside you. As such I shall exercise my calm, deliberate judgment in behalf of those most dear to me and dependent on me, and I shall not suffer my reason to be swept away by this eloquent recital of alleged wrongs which I know naught of. I deplore this war; I earnestly hope it may be averted; but if it be forced upon us, I shall take my stand with those who have stood by my people in the past and will be found fighting beside our good friends of St. Stephens and surrounding country. I have finished. I call on all Choctaws and Chickasaws endorsing my sentiments to cast their tomahawks on this side of the council fire with me.'

"The air resounded with the clash of tomahawks cast on the side of the Choctaw chief, and only a few warriors seemed still undecided. Tecumseh, seeing the purpose of his mission thwarted and thinking Pushmataha could not understand the Shawnee language, spoke to his warriors in his native tongue, saying: 'Pushmataha is a coward, and the Choctaw and Chickasaw braves are squaws'; but Pushmataha had traveled much and knew a smattering of many Indian dialects. He understood Tecumseh, and, turning upon the Shawnee with all the fire of his eloquence, he clinched the argument and settled the decision of the few wavering Choctaw braves by saying:

"'Halt, Tecumseh! Listen to me. You have come here, as you have often gone elsewhere, with a purpose to involve peaceful people in unnecessary trouble with their neighbors. Our people have had no undue friction with the whites. Why? Because we have had no leaders stirring up strife to serve their selfish, personal ambitions. You heard me say that our people are a peaceful people. They make their way, not by ravages upon their neighbors but by honest toil. In that regard they have nothing in common with you. I know your history well. You are a disturber. You have ever been a trouble maker. When you have found yourself unable to pick a quarrel with the white man, you have stirred up strife between different tribes of your own race. Not only that, you are a monarch and unyielding tyrant within your own domain; every Shawnee man, woman, and child must bow in humble submission to your imperious will.

"'The Choctaws and Chickasaws have no monarchs. Their chieftains do not undertake the mastery of their people, but rather are they the people's servants, elected to serve the will of the majority. The majority has spoken on this question, and it has spoken against your contention. Their decision has therefore become the law of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, and Pushmataha will see that the will of the majority, so recently expressed, is rigidly carried out to the letter. If, after this decision, any Choctaw should be so foolish as to follow your imprudent advice and enlist to fight against the Americans, thereby abandoning his own people and turning against the decision of his own council, Pushmataha will see that proper punishment is meted out to him, which is death. You have made your choice; you have elected to fight with the British. The Americans have been our friends, and we shall stand by them. We will furnish you safe conduct to the boundaries of this Nation as properly befits the dignity of your office. Farewell, Tecumseh. You will see Pushmataha no more until we meet on the fateful warpath.'"

Mr. RANKIN. Now, what was the result? Did it ever occur to you that we lost every battle in the North during the War of 1812 with one or two shining exceptions; did it ever occur to you that this Capital was invaded and burned, and that the only friends we had that amounted to anything that were willing to help us were the Choctaw and the Chickasaw Indians? This old Chief Pushmataha raised a regiment and probably a brigade in that war and rose to the rank of brigadier general and fought with General Jackson at New Orleans. Those Indians never at any time antagonized the United States, but supported us in all our trials.

I have often wondered if the people of these United States would ever fully recognize the debt of gratitude they owe to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians for their services in the War of 1812.

They not only refused to join our enemies, but they opened up their territories for the passage of our armies, gave abundantly of their supplies, and enlisted their brave and generous sons in defense of our cause.

In one of the darkest hours of American history, when we had been abandoned by all other allies; when Winchester had been defeated in the North, when a foreign foe had invaded and burned the Capitol of this Nation, as well as the White House, the home of the Chief Executive; when a mercenary influence had inspired the representatives of Northeastern States to meet in the Hartford convention and pass resolutions of secession; when all these clouds of despondency were lowering upon the horizon of American liberty, for which Jefferson had contended and Washington had fought, in that dark hour these loyal allies, the Chickasaws and Choctaws, enlisted in America's cause, marched with Andrew Jackson to the Battle of New Orleans, where they helped to defeat the last invading foe and "made the welkin of heaven ring with the shouts of victory."

Yet, when the time came that this Government demanded their territories, they peacefully submitted to those demands. They signed on the dotted line, as it were, in obedience to the mandate of the Government they had supported, folded their tents, extinguished their camp fires, turned their backs on the lands of their fathers, and moved away toward the glow of the setting sun—to live thereafter in the traditions of the white man.

This road should be built, regardless of whom it accommodates or does not accommodate, as a memorial to those Chickasaws and Choctaws, the best friends the white people of America ever had.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I want to renew a request I made on two occasions last week in connection with the Private Calendar. There is a great deal of interest in having the Private Calendar called, and also a great deal of pressure is being exerted to that end. It has been impossible to fix a day for this purpose, and, as the Members know, we get along faster and better in the consideration of this calendar at night sessions.

So, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order tomorrow to move that the House recess for the purpose of having a night session, and that at such session bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to may be considered, the call beginning at the star.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have indicated to the House that Tuesday night is one of the most inconvenient nights of the week for some of us who watch the Private Calendar to hold a night session, because of certain appointments already agreed upon. It would be much more convenient to hold night session for any of the other nights of the week. But, since it suits the majority leader better to have this night session Tuesday night, I shall not object, and I shall arrange to be here, by rearranging our appointments.

Our mail has been so unusually heavy during the past 2 or 3 weeks that it is necessary to work in the office every night until a late hour. I fully realize, however, that while there are a number of unsound, wasteful bills on the Private Calendar that ought not to pass, there are at the same time some bills that are meritorious and should have consideration. I shall not object.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I wish to advise the Speaker that the Committee on the Judiciary is desirous of calling up certain conference reports during the day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

THE 30-HOUR WEEK BILL

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to ask the Membership of the House to sign 145 names to the Zioncheck petition to discharge the Rules Committee from further consideration of the Connery 30-hour week bill. This petition is now at the desk.

May I say to the Membership that I have tried every parliamentary maneuver to get this bill before the House for action during this session. I have been in conference after conference. I went to see President Roosevelt with President Green of the American Federation of Labor. We impressed upon the President the need of legislation at this session of Congress establishing a 30-hour week, the same wages to be paid for 30 hours of labor as now paid for longer hours under the code. The President suggested that we confer with the Secretary of Labor, Miss Perkins, and Mr. Richberg, counsel of the N.R.A., and we have been in conference with them since. On Friday I asked Miss Perkins to see the President and get his reaction as to whether or not he was in favor of a bill which had been drafted in these conferences by Mr. Richberg; amendments, as it were, to the 30-hour week bill suggested by Miss Perkins, Mr. Green, Mr. Richberg, and by me. Mr. Green, President of the American Federation of Labor, and I agreed to these amendments substantially in their entirety, subject to the approval of the President and the Committee on Labor. We felt they were amendments we could accept.

This morning I called Miss Perkins' office. She had not seen the President between Friday and today. I had told her Friday that to keep faith with the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK], and to keep faith with labor throughout the entire country which has asked me to do everything possible to get this bill before Congress, that I would call the Committee on Labor in session Monday, today, and we would be obliged to take action. I talked with Miss Perkins' secretary this morning and she said that Miss Perkins had not yet taken up the matter with the President. My committee met this morning and I announced to the committee that I would take the floor today to ask for 145 signers to the petition. The committee decided that after these signers were secured we would take up in the committee, amendments, some of them suggested by Mr. Richberg and Miss Perkins. Some perhaps we would not agree to, but we could offer the ones to which we did agree as committee amendments to the 30-hour week bill when the bill comes to the floor of the House.

In conclusion let me say I believe that in order to be sure of a vote on this bill it is necessary to have this petition completed by Thursday of this week, so that we will have a vote on May 18. I therefore ask every Member of the House interested in securing a 30-hour week for industry to sign this petition. Every labor union in the United States is in favor of the Connery 30-hour week bill and have expressed themselves emphatically over and over again.

I am now going to sign the petition and I hope I shall have many Members who will sign with me immediately. [Applause.]

May I state at this time the position taken at the conferences by Secretary of Labor Perkins and Mr. Richberg. They wished it made clear that they did not commit themselves in favor of the bill or in favor of the draft which

Mr. Richberg drew up. Mr. Green, of course, is emphatically in favor of the 30-hour week bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Are there not still 11,000,000 people unemployed in the United States?

Mr. CONNERY. The American Federation of Labor says that there are at least 10,000,000 unemployed in the United States. I may say to the gentleman from Washington that the President of the United States on March 5 asked those representatives of industry at that big meeting in Constitution Hall to shorten hours and increase wages, and less than one twenty-fifth of 1 percent of the big industrialists have acceded to that request.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman know that until we stop the horde of aliens from foreign countries from coming across our borders into the United States every year we will continue to have eleven, twelve, or fifteen million Americans unemployed? It is the aliens from foreign countries who are coming here and taking jobs away from Americans.

Mr. CONNERY. These Americans unemployed to whom I refer are not aliens. They are American citizens.

Mr. BLANTON. We never will get a bill out of the Committee on Immigration to stop immigration in this country until we sign the petition to take the matter away from the Committee on Immigration. It refuses every year to favorably report such a bill. And hordes of aliens continue to come here and take jobs away from American citizens. We must stop it.

Mr. CONNERY. I hope the gentleman from Texas is not trying to becloud this 30-hour issue. There are 10,000,000 Americans out of work in this country and this 30 hour bill, if passed, will put back millions to work.

Mr. BLANTON. We want to stop immigrants from coming into this country. Then we may hope to have jobs for Americans.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not a fact that more such people left the country last year than came in?

Mr. CONNERY. I do not know about that.

Mr. BLANTON. That contention is ridiculous, for all of us know that, in addition to the lawful quotas that come here annually, many thousands of aliens are smuggled across our Mexican and Canadian borders each year.

Mr. SCHULTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHULTE. Does the gentleman know that in my particular district, one of the heavy industrial districts of the country, the chiselers today in the N.R.A. are the big business concerns to the extent that the refineries and the oil companies are not living up to any part of the code or making any attempt to live up to it, and that over 5,000 people in two industries that I know of are working from 50 to 55 hours a week?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; I agree with my friend. I may say in conclusion that when the President of the United States, who is the greatest President, in my opinion, since Abraham Lincoln, asks industry to shorten hours and increase wages and they refuse to do it, then it is up to this legislative body to take some action and make them do it.

Many of the amendments suggested by Miss Perkins, Mr. Green, and Mr. Richberg were, in my opinion, constructive, and I believe that the Committee on Labor will so consider them and will offer them as committee amendments. Some of the amendments the committee may see fit to modify. I have had printed the draft which Mr. Richberg prepared and I am inserting it here for the information of the membership.

A bill to provide for a 30-hour work week to relieve unemployment, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That it is hereby declared that a national emergency, resulting from the unemployment of millions of willing workers, has imposed upon State and Federal Governments a burden of unemployment relief and has interfered with the free flow of interstate commerce to such an extent that action to spread employment uniformly so far as possible has become essential.

SEC. 2. During the period of this national emergency no employee shall be required or permitted by an employer subject to this act to work more than 30 hours in 1 week, 5 days in 1 week, or 6 hours in 1 day by any single employer, or through employment by more than one employer; except under the circumstances and in the manner hereinafter provided.

SEC. 3. Modification of the requirements of section 2 of this act may be granted to employers who have assented to and are complying fully with the requirements of a code of fair competition or agreement approved by the President under the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act, upon a petition for such an exemption duly filed with the President or any agent or agency designated by the President for that purpose: Provided, however, That such exemption shall be granted only upon a finding that conditions, such as an inadequate supply of labor or other conditions determined to be beyond the employer's control (in accordance with regulations prescribed by the President), exist in a specified industry or locality which make compliance with said requirements impossible without reducing the total volume of employment or restricting commerce or discriminating unfairly against individual employers or groups of employers: And provided further, That no modification shall be granted for a period exceeding 90 days at one time, and no modification shall permit a worker to be employed for more than an average of 40 hours per week during the period of modification, unless such a limitation of hours will result in diminishing, instead of increasing, the total volume of employment.

SEC. 4. (a) Every modification granted under section 3 of this act shall be made subject to the condition that the employer shall agree so to adjust rates of compensation that the average weekly earnings of employees for the hours of work reduced, as herein authorized or required, shall not be less than their average weekly earnings under the hours of work prevailing prior to such reduction, and such adjusted rates shall be applied to employment for any portion of the maximum hours of work so authorized or required.

(b) Any employer not conforming hours of work to the standards herein provided, or adjusting rates of compensation for the 30-hour week or any modification thereof, as hereinbefore provided, shall not be entitled to the exemption from the provisions of the antitrust laws of the United States, which is provided in section 5 of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

(c) The President is authorized, through such agencies as he may establish, to determine finally whether an employer has adopted and applied fair measures for the adjustment of rates of compensation in conformity with the requirements of this act.

SEC. 5. The requirements of this act shall extend to all forms of employment and to all employers in trades or industries engaged in producing, transporting, or distributing goods or services in or affecting interstate commerce; but shall not apply to agricultural workers or to persons employed in domestic service or to employees subject to the Railway Labor Act.

SEC. 6. Any violation of the requirements of this act shall be a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof an offender shall be fined not more than $500 for each offense, and each day such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense.

SEC. 7. The President is authorized to exercise any and all of the powers conferred upon him in the National Industrial Recovery Act for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, including the power to declare the end of the period of national emergency herein defined.

SEC. 8. This act shall take effect 90 days after its enactment.

I feel that this 30-hour bill is urgently needed by the country at this time, and if passed will stimulate business and do much to settle the unemployment situation in the country. I cannot urge too strongly the need of legislative action on this bill. I feel that this petition should be signed and this legislation passed. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—REPAIR AND RECONSTRUCTION OF HOMES (H.DOC. NO. 371)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered printed:

To the Congress:

May I draw your attention to some important suggestions for legislation which should tend to improve conditions for those who live in houses, those who repair and construct houses, and those who invest in houses?

Many of our homes are in decadent condition and not fit for human habitation. They need repairing and modernizing to bring them up to the standard of the times. Many new homes now are needed to replace those not worth repairing.

The protection of the health and safety of the people demands that this renovizing and building be done speedily. The Federal Government should take the initiative immediately to cooperate with private capital and industry in this real-property conservation. We must lay the groundwork for this effort before Congress adjourns its present session.

The purpose of the program is twofold: First, to return many of the unemployed to useful and gainful occupation; second, to produce tangible, useful wealth in a form for which there is great social and economic need.

The program consists of four major, interrelated divisions:

1. Modernization, repair, and new construction;
2. Mortgage insurance;
3. Mortgage associations; and
4. Building-and-loan insurance.

The modernization phase of the program will furnish national guidance and support for locally managed renovizing campaigns throughout the country and protection for home owners against unwarranted cost advances. For these purposes and to assure adequate financing at low cost and on moderate terms of repayment, a new governmental agency is required.

Modernization of commercial and industrial structures is envisioned, as well as residential, but the new features providing governmental assistance are confined largely to home improvements.

Loans to individuals will be made by private agencies which will be insured by a governmental agency against loss up to a certain percentage of their advances. This insurance against loss on the rehabilitation loans will be met by the Government and will be confined to advances of credit that meet standards and conditions designed to protect both the home owners and the cooperating agencies.

To make funds available for new home construction and to improve the mortgage market, the second phase of the program is long-term mortgage financing. It provides mutual mortgage insurance under governmental direction to enable private agencies to make first-mortgage loans on newly constructed houses up to 80 percent of the appraised value of the property, and to make new mortgages on existing homes up to 60 percent of the appraised value of the property. The loans will usually carry not more than 5-percent interest and will be amortized by periodic payments over 20 years. Similar insurance arrangements are provided to help finance low-cost residential projects of the slum-replacement type.

The third phase provides for the incorporation of mortgage associations under strict Federal supervision to increase the amount of mortgage funds available in regions where interest rates are unduly high because sufficient local funds are lacking. The activities of these associations will be limited almost entirely to insured residential mortgages.

Insurance for share and certificate holders in building-and-loan associations, similar to the insurance provided for bank depositors, is the fourth phase of the program. These institutions are custodians of the funds of small savers, and it is essential that they should be given every reasonable protection. Insurance of this type is necessary in order to arrest any further drain on these institutions and to put them in a position to resume their normal useful functions.

I believe that the initiation of this broad and sound program will do much to alleviate distress and to raise perceptibly the standards of good living for many of our families throughout the land.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 14, 1934.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H.R. 5950, to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5950) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: On page 2, line 13, of the Senate amendment, after "irrigation", insert "reclamation"; on page 3, line 5, of the Senate amendment strike out "51 percent" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "30 percent in the case of drainage, irrigation, reclamation, and levee districts and owning not less than 51 percent in the case of all other taxing districts"; and on page 9, line 18, of the Senate amendment strike out "75 percent" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "66⅔ percent in the case of drainage, irrigation, reclamation, and levee districts and creditors holding 75 percent in the case of all other taxing districts"; and the Senate agree to the same.

HATTON W. SUMNERS,
A. J. MONTAGUE,
TOM D. MCKEOWN,
RANDOLPH PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

M. M. NEELY,
PAT. MCCARRAN,
WARREN R. AUSTIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H.R. 5950) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Under the House provisions, 30 percent in amount of the creditors of the taxing district can file a petition seeking the benefits of the act and stating either (a) that they are willing to have a plan of readjustment prepared and submitted to the court for confirmation, or (b) that a plan of readjustment has been prepared and is filed with the petition. The consent of 66⅔ percent in amount of the creditors is required for confirmation of the plan.

The Senate bill requires the consent of 51 percent in amount of the creditors to the filing of the petition, and that the plan of readjustment be submitted with the petition. The consent of 75 percent in amount of the creditors is required for confirmation of the plan.

The House accepted the provisions of the Senate bill, with the exception that the House provisions requiring the consent of 30 percent of the creditors to file a petition and the consent of 66⅔ percent of the creditors for confirmation of the plan are retained in the case of drainage, irrigation, reclamation, and levee districts.

The other amendments of the Senate are chiefly formal, to which the House agreed.

HATTON W. SUMNERS,
A. J. MONTAGUE,
TOM D. MCKEOWN,
RANDOLPH PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, may I ask what report this is?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. This is a report on the municipal bankruptcy bill.

Mr. SNELL. For communities and municipalities?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is known as the "municipality bill."

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman tell us in a very few words just what we can do and what we may expect in the future?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. In reference to what?

Mr. SNELL. In reference to various communities filing petitions in bankruptcy.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I presume the gentleman is familiar with the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. SNELL. In general I am.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The bill passed the House requiring 30 percent of the creditors going in with the debtor in order to initiate proceedings; then it required 66⅔ percent of the creditors to agree with the debtor to the plan. In the Senate the bill was changed in order to provide a requirement of a majority, 51 percent of the creditors, to agree in advance with the debtor on a plan. This is in regard to municipalities. Then it required 66⅔ of each class of creditors and three fourths of all the debtors to agree generally with the debtor before the plan could be made effective by the court.

Mr. SNELL. Before the plan may become effective three fourths must agree?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; and a majority must agree to the plan before the plan is filed in court. The House accepted that amendment.

The Senate agreed that the provisions of the House bill as to percentages of debtors may apply to drainage districts and other taxing districts, not cities. The Senate agreed to the House provision that 30 percent could go in to count with the debtor, just as the House provision called for, with two thirds agreeing to the final plan. This was believed by the House conferees to be a good arrangement. Because of peculiar difficulties in these drainage districts and similar taxing units in getting the bondholders together, the Senate agreed with the House that it would be better to leave the House provision applicable to taxing districts and districts of that character.

Mr. HASTINGS. As I understand it, as far as municipalities are concerned, 51 percent must agree to the petition and finally 75 percent must agree?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; that is right.

Mr. MAY. Does the bill provide merely for the bondholders to agree, or does it include holders of certificates of indebtedness and municipal warrants?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I think so.

Mr. MAY. That ought to be made specific and certain.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not think there is any doubt about that matter.

Mr. HASTINGS. Many small municipalities have not been able to issue bonds, but have issued certificates.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Everyone gets in.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE CRIME BILLS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, may I submit a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of conference reports on kindred bills, known as the "crime bills", which we desire to call up. My parliamentary inquiry is whether I may submit a unanimous-consent request that the conference reports on all the bills be called up and that the statements be read in lieu of the reports.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may call up the reports and submit the request.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Then, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference reports on the bills S. 2252, S. 2575, S. 2841, S. 2249, S. 2080, S. 2253, and S. 2845, and ask unanimous consent that the statements with regard to these respective bills as they come in order may be read in lieu of the reports.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to call up en bloc the bills enumerated and known as the "crime bills", and asks in each instance that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statements.

The conference reports and statements are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2252) to amend the act forbidding the transportation of kidnaped persons in interstate commerce having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and agree to the same.

HATTON W. SUMNERS,
A. J. MONTAGUE,
TOM D. MCKEOWN,
RANDOLPH PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

HENRY F. ASHURST,
WILLIAM H. KING,
WM. E. BORAH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2252) to amend the act forbidding the transportation of kidnaped persons in interstate commerce, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

All the amendments of the House are agreed to. The first amendment excludes from the operation of the act forbidding the transportation of kidnaped persons in interstate commerce, the technical case of a minor "kidnaped" by a parent thereof.

The second amendment provides for a death penalty if the verdict of the jury shall so recommend, provided that the sentence of death shall not be imposed by the court, if, prior to its imposition, the kidnaped person has been liberated unharmed. If the death penalty shall not apply nor be imposed the convicted person shall be punished by the same penalty provided in the original act, namely, imprisonment in the penitentiary for such term of years as the court in its discretion shall determine.

This amendment further provides that the failure to release the kidnaped person within 7 days after he shall have been kidnaped shall create a presumption that such person has been transported in interstate or foreign commerce, but such presumption shall not be conclusive. In the original bill this provision was to the effect that such a presumption arose in the absence of the return of the person kidnaped and in the absence of the apprehension of the kidnaper during a period of 3 days.

The remaining amendments are merely formal. The third amendment makes a separate section of the definition of interstate commerce. The fourth amendment adds the phrase "as used herein" in defining the term "interstate commerce." The fifth amendment makes a new section out of the proviso in the original act concerning conspiracy to violate provisions thereof. The sixth amendment strikes out the presumption contained in the original amendment, which presumption is replaced by the presumption referred to above in the second amendment.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2575) to define certain crimes against the United States in connection with the administration of Federal penal and correctional institutions and to fix the punishment therefor submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate receded on both amendments adopted by the House.

The bill as it passed the House is aimed at punishing any officer or employee of a penal institution or other person who assists any prisoner to escape or smuggles into the institution any firearm, deadly weapon, or instrument which would assist the prisoner to escape.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2841) to provide punishment for certain offenses committed against banks organized or operating under laws of the United States or any member of the Federal Reserve System submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The Senate receded on all amendments and agreed to the bill as it passed the House.

The bill makes robbery of member banks of the Federal Reserve System and all banking institutions organized or operating under the laws of the United States a Federal offense. If in the commission of the offense murder or kidnaping is committed, the punishment is fixed at imprisonment for not less than 10 years or by death if the verdict of the jury shall so direct.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2249) applying the powers of the Federal Government under the commerce clause of the Constitution to extortion by means of telephone, telegraph, radio, oral message, or otherwise, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate receded on both amendments of the House. The Senate bill provided that the penalties of the act shall apply to anyone who "shall transmit an extortion message in interstate commerce by telephone, telegraph, radio, or oral message, or by any other means whatsoever." The House struck out the words of limitation to make the act apply to "anyone who shall transmit such threat in interstate commerce by any means whatsoever." The Senate receded.

On amendment 3: The Senate bill provided for punishment by imprisonment for such term of years as the court in its discretion shall determine. The House amended the bill to make the penalty not more than $5,000 or imprisonment not more than 20 years, or both. The Senate receded.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2080) to provide punishment for killing or assaulting Federal officers, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment 1: The Senate bill included by its terms all officers and employees of the United States. The House amendment limited its terms to "any United States marshal or deputy United States marshal, special agent of the Division of Investigation of the Department of Justice, post-office inspector, Secret Service operative, any officer or enlisted man of the Coast Guard, or any employee of any United States penal or correctional institution." The Senate accepted the House amendment with the inclusion of officers of the customs, of the internal revenue, immigrant inspectors, and immigration patrol inspectors.

Amendment 2 of the House is a formal amendment made necessary by the adoption of amendment 1. The Senate receded.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2253) making it unlawful for any person to flee from one State to another for the purpose of avoiding prosecution in certain cases having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 2, 4, and amendment to the title.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment, strike out on page 1, line 3, of the Senate bill the word "flee" and insert in lieu thereof "move or travel in interstate or foreign commerce"; and the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2253) making it unlawful for any person to flee from one State to another for the purpose of avoiding prosecution in certain cases submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The first amendment of the House was the addition, after the word "Columbia", at page 1, line 5, of the words "to another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia or to a foreign country." The purpose of this amendment was to indicate more clearly that this proposed legislation was based on the Federal power over interstate commerce. It was believed by the committee of conference that the proposed act could more certainly be sustained, insofar as constitutional objections might be raised, if it was specifically designated that the Congress intended to exercise its power to control movement and traffic in interstate or foreign commerce. Therefore, the word "flee", at page 1, line 3, has been stricken out, and there have been inserted the words "move or travel in interstate or foreign commerce." The House amendment, "to another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia or to a foreign country", was stricken out.

On the second and the fourth amendments of the House, which eliminated from the original bill the provision that placed witnesses within the scope of the proposed act, the House receded. Therefore, with respect to persons moving or traveling in interstate or foreign commerce with intent to avoid giving testimony in any criminal proceedings in the place in which the commission of a felony is charged, the bill is now in its original form.

The third amendment of the House was to limit jurisdiction to persons who fled to avoid prosecution for felonies involving violence. This amendment has been agreed to.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2845) to extend the provisions of the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act to other stolen property, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment, strike out beginning in line 13 on page 1 down through line

9, page 2, of the House engrossed amendments and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 4. Whoever shall receive, conceal, store, barter, sell, or dispose of any goods, wares, or merchandise, securities, or money, of the value of $5,000 or more, or whoever shall pledge or accept as security for a loan any goods, wares, or merchandise, or securities, of the value of $500 or more which, while moving in or constituting a part of interstate or foreign commerce, has been stolen or taken feloniously by fraud or with intent to steal or purloin, knowing the same to have been stolen or taken, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment of not more than 10 years, or both."

And on page 1, line 7, of the House engrossed amendments insert a comma after "money".

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2845) to extend the provisions of the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act to other stolen property, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The first amendment of the House, page 2, line 1, to strike out "'security' shall mean" and insert "'securities' shall include", was agreed to.

The second amendment of the House was to strike out sections 3 and 4 of the original bill and insert in lieu thereof two new sections. The principal difference in section 3, as thus amended, is the limitation of jurisdiction of the proposed act to the transportation of stolen goods, wares, or merchandise, securities, or money, of the value of $5,000 or more. This section, as amended by the House, remains unchanged, except for the insertion of a comma after the word "money" on page 1, line 7, of the House engrossed amendments.

Section 4 makes it unlawful to receive, conceal, store, barter, sell, or dispose of certain goods, wares, or merchandise, securities, or money, of a value of $5,000 or more. As passed by the Senate, this section provides a penalty for the receipt or disposition of such stolen property while moving in interstate commerce, knowing such property to have been stolen. As passed in the House, this section provides a penalty for the receipt or disposition of such property while moving in interstate commerce, if such property was stolen while moving in interstate commerce, with knowledge that it was stolen while moving in such commerce. Section 4, as agreed upon in conference, provides a penalty for the receipt or disposition of such property stolen while moving in interstate commerce, knowing the property to have been stolen. The obvious purpose of section 4 was to protect interstate commerce by going after the "fence", the guilty receivers or disposers of property, stolen while being transported in such commerce. The original Senate bill does not fully accomplish this, for it includes any stolen property, so long as it is received or disposed of while moving in interstate commerce. The conference amendment is limited to the receipt or disposition of property stolen while in interstate commerce, but such property need not be received or disposed of while moving in interstate commerce.

The second amendment of the House added also a provision which authorizes Federal jurisdiction in the case of a series of transactions involving property of a total value of $5,000 or more. The Senate agreed to the amendment.

The third, fourth, and fifth amendments of the House are merely formal changes in the proposed act. They have been agreed to by the committee of conference.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference reports with reference to these several bills.

The conference reports were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

CONSTRUCTION OF A BRIDGE NEAR PORT ARTHUR, TEX.

The Clerk called the first bill on the Consent Calendar (H.R. 4870) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Sabine at or near Port Arthur, Tex.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. DIES. I object, Mr. Speaker. I want the bill to go through.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Has not the gentleman a similar bill near the end of the calendar?

Mr. DIES. No; and I object to passing the bill over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK, Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri, and Mr. ELTSE of California, objected.

VALIDITY OF DECLARATIONS OF INTENTIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8317, to extend the validity of declarations of intention beyond 7 years.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman from New York is willing that this bill may go over. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] is not here, and I am not familiar with the measure.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL FORESTS IN COLORADO

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3206, for the exchange of lands adjacent to national forests in Colorado.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from California the nature of the bill?

Mr. ELTSE of California. It is proposed that lands lying within a radius of 6 miles of national forests may be exchanged for lands within the forests.

Mr. ZIONCHECK, Mr. WOLCOTT, and Mr. ELTSE of California objected.

AMENDMENT OF FOREST EXCHANGE ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5368, to extend the provisions of the Forest Exchange Act of March 20, 1922 (42 Stat. 465).

Mr. ELTSE of California, Mr. ZIONCHECK, and Mr. BECK objected.

REGULATION OF AMERICAN BROADCASTING COMPANIES OPERATING ACROSS THE INTERNATIONAL BORDER

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, S. 2660, to amend the Radio Act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (44 Stat. 1162).

Mr. THOMASON, Mr. BECK, and Mr. TERRELL of Texas objected.

THE BOISE NATIONAL FOREST

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 7927, to add certain lands to the Boise National Forest.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Reserving the right to object, I should like to hear from the author of the bill.

Mr. WHITE. This is a bill to protect the watershed of the city of Boise, Idaho, which supplies water for all the big irrigation districts. The Legislature of Idaho has memorialized Congress to pass this legislation. It is approved by the Secretary of the Interior and by the Secretary of Agriculture.

It is desirable to protect the forest, the new growth, from the ravage of fires, but, as I say, the primary purpose is to protect the watershed of Boise and the irrigation districts.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. How much is it going to cost the Federal Government?

Mr. WHITE. Nothing.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I withdraw my reservation of an objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that Senate bill 8, an identical bill, be substituted for the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, subject to existing valid claims or entries and withdrawals, the following-described lands are hereby added to the Boise National Forest, Idaho, and made subject to all laws applicable to national forests:

Sections 25 and 26; east half section 27; east half section 34; and section 35, township 8 north, range 5 east, Boise meridian.

Sections 1 and 2; sections 11 to 14, inclusive; sections 23 to 27, inclusive; and sections 34 to 36, inclusive; township 7 north, range 3 east, Boise meridian.

Sections 1, 2, and 3; sections 6 and 7; sections 10 to 13, inclusive; and sections 15 to 36, inclusive; township 7 north, range 4 east, Boise meridian.

Sections 1 and 2; sections 4 to 28, inclusive; and sections 30 to 36, inclusive; township 7 north, range 5 east, Boise meridian.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive; sections 10 to 15, inclusive; sections 22 to 27, inclusive; and sections 34 to 36, inclusive; township 6 north, range 3 east, Boise meridian.

Sections 1 to 36, inclusive, township 6 north, range 4 east, Boise meridian.

Sections 1 to 21, inclusive; sections 24 and 25; and sections 28 to 36, inclusive; township 6 north, range 5 east, Boise meridian.

Sections 1 to 36, inclusive, township 6 north, range 6 east, Boise meridian.

Sections 1 and 2; sections 11 to 14, inclusive; sections 23 to 26, inclusive; and sections 35 and 36; township 5 north, range 2 east, Boise meridian.

Sections 1 to 36, inclusive, township 5 north, range 3 east, Boise meridian.

Sections 1 to 36, inclusive, township 5 north, range 4 east, Boise meridian.

Sections 1 to 36, inclusive, township 5 north, range 5 east, Boise meridian.

Sections 1 to 6, inclusive; sections 8 to 17, inclusive; sections 21 to 27, inclusive; and sections 35 and 36, township 4 north, range 3 east, Boise meridian.

Sections 1 to 36, inclusive, township 4 north, range 4 east, Boise meridian.

Sections 1, 2, 11, and 12, township 3 north, range 3 east, Boise meridian.

Sections 1 to 13, inclusive; and northwest quarter of section 14; township 3 north, range 4 east, Boise meridian; not heretofore included within the Boise National Forest, Idaho; all ranges east, Boise meridian.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The House bill was laid on the table.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT OF POSTMASTERS

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 7088, to amend the provisions of laws relating to the appointment of postmasters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object.

NINTH PAN AMERICAN SANITARY CONFERENCE

The Clerk called the next resolution on the calendar, Senate Joint Resolution 59, to provide for the expenses of delegates of the United States to the Ninth Pan American Sanitary Conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

APPOINTMENT OF POSTMASTERS

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 183, H.R. 7088, to amend the provisions of laws relating to the appointment of postmasters. The gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPPEL] says that I promised not to object to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to returning to H.R. 7088?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Now, Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I said, the gentleman from California says that I promised not to object to the bill. I do not want to be put in a false position, but I said I would reserve an objection to make a statement. This bill changes existing law by providing that the Postmaster General may appoint an acting postmaster at the expiration of the term of the postmaster. This bill gives him an authority that he has not heretofore had. By this appointment the acting postmaster is given a status in the civil-service examination which gives him an advantage over other applicants, so that he is always the no. 1 man. He gets that by his experience as acting postmaster. If I gave the gentleman from California the impression that I was not going to object, I was not aware of it, for I have always had in mind an objection to the bill, but I do not want to be misunderstood.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I object.

OPERATION OF SEIZED MOTOR VEHICLES

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7302, to authorize the Postmaster General to receive, operate, and to maintain for official purposes motor vehicles seized for violation of the customs laws.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This is the bill that the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. BUCHANAN] made a speech against on the last consent day. He thinks it would set a very bad policy and would eventually cost the Government a vast sum of money. We have never allowed the Post Office Department the privilege of using passenger-carrying cars, and that is what this bill authorizes. Because of the objections of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN], I object. We need two other objectors to kill it.

Mr. HOEPPEL. I object.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I object.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF LOTTERY WINNERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7023, to amend section 213, United States Penal Code, as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PATMAN). Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This requires three objectors. [After a pause.] Not a sufficient number have objected, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the prohibitions contained in section 213 of the United States Penal Code, as amended, shall not apply to a newspaper which does no more than announce the names of the winners, or the list of prizes, in a lottery or drawing conducted by a local church, civic, charitable, or fraternal organization, or by the local chapter, lodge, or other like unit of any such organization which is not itself local in character.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL FEE FOR DELIVERY OF REGISTERED MAIL

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7301, to authorize the Postmaster General to charge an additional fee for effecting delivery of domestic registered, insured, or collect-on-delivery mail, the delivery of which is restricted to the addressee only, or to the addressee or order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This requires three objectors.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. An insufficient number have objected. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General, under such regulations as he may prescribe, is authorized to collect an additional fee of 10 cents for effecting the delivery by carrier or otherwise of domestic registered, insured, or collect-on-delivery mail, the delivery of which is restricted to the addressee only, or to the addressee or order: Provided, That no refund shall be made of fees paid for this service unless erroneous delivery of the article or articles was made by the Postal Service.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

PROMOTION TO CHIEF CLERK, RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7343, to remove inequities in the law governing eligibility for promotion to the position of Chief Clerk in the Railway Mail Service.

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That that part of section 7 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 556), which comprises section 626 of title 39 of the United States Code, be amended to read as follows:

"Clerks in the highest grade in their respective lines or other assignments shall be eligible for promotion to positions of clerks in charge in said lines or corresponding position in other assignments, and clerks assigned as assistant chief clerks and clerks in grade 6, or higher rank, in their respective divisions, shall, after 1 year of continuous service in such capacity, be eligible for promotion to positions of chief clerks in said division for satisfactory, efficient, and faithful service, under such regulations as the Postmaster General shall prescribe."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, lines 8 and 9, strike out "position in other assignments;" and insert in lieu thereof "positiions in other assignments,".

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

TO DISCONTINUE FURLOUGHS IN THE POSTAL SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 9046, to discontinue administrative furloughs in the Postal Service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over with prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object to that request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That such provisions of section 9 (a) of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934, as relate to rotative furloughs, and such provisions as continued and amended for the fiscal year 1935, shall not apply to the Postal Service.

SEC. 2. The number of employees in any branch of the Postal Service shall not be reduced, by reason of the discontinuance of any authority for granting furloughs, below the number as shown on the pay rolls of employees in service during the month of January 1934, after deducting the number who have been removed from the pay rolls after the effective date of this act by reason of death, normal retirements, or resignation, but not more in any one year than 5 percent of said number in service during January 1934; nor shall any employee in such service be deprived of employment such as he had during said month of January or be in worse position with respect to his compensation for such employment, by reason of any action taken pursuant to the authority conferred by other provisions of law.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

RESPONSIBILITY OF MAIL CONTRACTORS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7299, to authorize the Post Office Department to hold contractors responsible in damages for the loss, rifling, damage, wrong delivery, depredation upon, or other mistreatment of mail matter due to fault or negligence of the contractor or an agent or employee thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MEAD. I object to that request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RESPONSIBILITY OF RAILROAD COMPANIES CARRYING MAIL

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7392, to authorize the Post Office Department to hold railroad companies responsible in damages for the loss, rifling, damage, wrong delivery, depredation upon, or other mistreatment of mail matter due to fault or negligence of the railroad company or an agent or employee thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice, because the committee desires to have further hearings before we ask for its consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. H.R. 7392, this bill, is similar to H.R. 7299, which the gentleman from New York just let go over without prejudice.

Mr. MEAD. There is a difference in the two bills. The bill H.R. 7299 pertains to star-route contractors and mail-messenger contractors, such contractors as handle mail matter only. This bill under consideration, H.R. 7392, affects railroads, whose principal business is other than that of carrying the mail. The committee decided it would be well to give a hearing on this bill because of certain amendments suggested to the committee after the bill had been reported. With a desire to perfect the bill, I ask that it be temporarily set aside.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, on our last consent day there was a bill which appeared on the calendar as Calendar 182, which was along that same line. I call the committee's attention to the fact that Calendar 197, H.R. 7299, in my opinion, embraces the same subject matter as the bills on Calendar 182, and also 198.

I do not like to see a situation created where we are going to take up these bills separately, and for the reason that No. 197 has been objected to and because I desire to consider No. 198 with that, I will have to object to the gentleman's request to pass the bill over.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I should like to say to the gentleman from New York that I was going to ask some questions under reservation of objection a moment ago, but I was forced to the position of objecting.

Mr. MEAD. I would have been glad to answer the gentleman, but the regular order was called for.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD]?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object.

STOCK OWNERSHIP BY DIRECTORS OF MEMBER BANKS OF FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2601, to amend section 31 of the Banking Act of 1933 with respect to stock ownership by directors of member banks of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. TRUAX, Mr. ZIONCHECK, and Mr. HOEPPEL objected.

INTERNATIONAL TECHNICAL COMMITTEE OF AERIAL LEGAL EXPERTS

The Clerk called the next business, Senate Joint Resolution 83, amending Public Resolution No. 118, Seventy-first Congress, Approved February 14, 1931, providing for an annual appropriation to meet the quota of the United States toward the expenses of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts.

Mr. TRUAX, Mr. BLANTON, and Mr. ELTSE of California objected.

LONGSHOREMEN'S AND HARBOR WORKERS' COMPENSATION ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8057, to amend the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act with respect to rates of compensation, and for other purposes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I reserve the objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I may state that a rule has been granted by the Committee on Rules on this bill, which was unanimously reported by the Judiciary Committee. There are six technical amendments to the workmen's compensation act, all of which have been approved by the Commission and all parties concerned, they having arisen by reason of the experience in administering the act of 1927. I had hoped that we might save time under the rule by passing it unanimously, because there has not been any objection heretofore, as far as I know.

Mr. BLANTON. We will have an opportunity to consider it under the rule, and that gives it a privileged status, and therefore the time ought now to be given to these other bills.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It just takes more time; that is all.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, this is a very technical bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think I can explain it to the gentleman in a few moments.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I have read the report upon it, and it is right complicated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, for the time being, I object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO HOMESTEADERS ON PUBLIC DOMAIN

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2568, granting a leave of absence to settlers of homestead lands during the years 1932, 1933, and 1934.

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, is the author of this bill present?

Mr. DEROUEN. I am not the author of the bill, because this is a Senate bill. It passed the Senate and came to the Committee on Public Lands and that committee considered the bill and made a unanimous report.

Mr. TRUAX. I simply wanted a short explanation of the bill.

Mr. DEROUEN. This is a relief measure for homesteaders who have been unable to comply with the law, and in order to give them more time within which to comply with the law so that their homesteads will not be contested, this bill is required.

Mr. TRUAX. What is the compliance which the gentleman mentions?

Mr. DEROUEN. I have in mind further improvements, continuous residence on the location where they have located, and such things. It is purely an emergency measure to grant relief to those settlers in the Northwest.

Mr. TRUAX. And it involves no appropriation?

Mr. DEROUEN. Not a cent.

Mr. TRUAX. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any homestead settler or entryman who, during the calendar years 1932 or 1933, found it necessary, or during 1934 should find it necessary, because of economic conditions, to leave his homestead to seek employment in order to obtain the necessaries of life for himself and/or family or to provide for the education of his children, may, upon filing with the register of the district of his affidavit, supported by corroborating affidavits of two disinterested persons, showing the necessity of such absence, be excused from compliance with the requirements of the homestead laws as to residence, cultivation, improvements, expenditures, or payment of purchase money, as the case may be, during all or any part of the calendar years 1932, 1933, and 1934, and said entries shall not be open to contest or protest because of failure to comply with such requirements during such absence; except that the time of such absence shall not be deducted from the actual residence required by law, but a period equal to such absence shall be added to the statutory life of the entry: Provided, That any entryman holding an unperfected entry on ceded Indian lands may be excused from the requirements of residence upon the conditions provided herein, but shall not be entitled to extension of time for the payment of any installment of the purchase price of the land except upon payment of interest, in advance, at the rate of 4 percent per annum on the principal of any unpaid purchase price from the date when such payment or payments became due to and inclusive of the date of the expiration of the period of relief granted hereunder.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER NEAR SHAWNEETOWN, GALLATIN COUNTY, ILL.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8908, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Shawneetown, Gallatin County, Ill., and a point opposite thereto in Union County, Ky.

Mr. ELTSE of California and Mr. ZIONCHECK objected.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentlemen reserve the objection? I want to propound a question as to the policy in regard to these bills to extend the time for building bridges. The gentlemen objected to my bill, no. 4870, the first bill on the calendar. I should like some explanation as to just what is the policy of these objectors.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. There is a bill later on the calendar authorizing a bridge to be built in the city of Port Arthur, in the gentleman's particular case. The first bill that was objected to was for a private concern to put in a toll bridge. There was objection by the Department of Agriculture. It is a matter of policy that if a municipality wants to go through with a bridge, we will grant that permission to the municipality and will not grant it to the private company.

Mr. DIES. I understand you are objecting to these private concerns' undertaking to operate toll bridges?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes. If a municipality does not ask for it and no bridge is going to be put in, then we make no objection.

Mr. ELTSE of California. With respect to this particular bill, there was one passed last week authorizing the municipality to build this particular bridge.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. That is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three objections are required.

Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. ZIONCHECK, and Mr. ELTZE of California objected.

UNITED STATES MERCHANT MARINE

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 282, requiring 50 percent of the cargo imported and exported under trade agreements between the United States and foreign nations to be carried in vessels of the United States.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

WAGES DUE AMERICAN SEAMEN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5266, to amend section 4543 (U.S.C., title 46, sec. 605) of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the Treasury Department thinks this bill is unnecessary. I object.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, to that I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the bill.

POSTAL TREATIES AND CONVENTIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7317, to provide for the final construction, on behalf of the United States, of postal treaties or conventions to which the United States is a party.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 398 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 5, sec. 372), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"For the purpose of making better postal arrangements with foreign countries, or to counteract their adverse measures affecting our postal intercourse with them, the Postmaster General, by and with the advice and consent of the President, may negotiate and conclude postal treaties or conventions, and may reduce or increase the rates of postage or other charges on mail matter conveyed between the United States and foreign countries: Provided, That the decisions of the Postmaster General construing or interpreting the provisions of any treaty or convention negotiated and concluded hereunder shall, if approved by the President, be final and conclusive upon all officers of the United States."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 4, after the word "convention", insert the words "which has been or may be"; and after the words "concluded", on page 2, line 5, strike out the word "hereunder."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF STAR ROUTES

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7212, to remove the limitation upon the extension of star routes.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this bill eliminate competitive bidding in the extension of these routes?

Mr. MEAD. No, I may say to the gentleman; it prescribes the same rate on extensions as is allowed in the original contract. The law we are seeking to amend is the law which was in operation when horse-drawn vehicles carried the mail on star routes. With the advent of the automobile the Department has been hampered in the matter of extensions; in many cases where they could grant an extension of 30 or 40 miles without injury to the contractor, and with his consent, they could not do so because of existing law.

Mr. TRUAX. It is not done under competitive bidding, is it?

Mr. MEAD. Oh, yes; the original route is secured in all cases as a result of competitive bidding.

Mr. TRUAX. Does that apply to the terms of the pending bill?

Mr. MEAD. It is placed under competitive bidding in the first instance. When an extension is granted on a route, the rate may not exceed the rate agreed to in the original bid, and new bids are secured every 4 years on every star route, including all extensions.

Mr. TRUAX. The reason I make the inquiry of the gentleman is because of the fact we have gone on record as a party as strongly advocating competitive bidding in the matter of all mail-carrying contracts. I notice that the report states:

With reference to your informal request for report on bills enumerated below, I have to advise that the Department recommends their enactment.

Now, there is something left out.

Mr. MEAD. That which is left out pertains to other bills. Only this bill is mentioned in this report.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman gives his assurance that it does not eliminate competitive bidding.

Mr. MEAD. It does not eliminate competitive bidding. It does for the star routes just what we did for the air mail. We insist upon competitive bidding in the first instance, and insofar as limited and needed extensions are concerned, we give them the same rate for extensions as was contained in the original contracts which the carriers received as a result of competitive bidding.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman will say that this bill is in no way comparable with the extension contracts that were let by Postmaster General Brown when he let a contract for 60 miles and then extended it clear across the continent?

Mr. MEAD. I say that emphatically.

Mr. TRUAX. This bill will not do that?

Mr. MEAD. No. All star routes are advertised every 4 years and awarded to the lowest responsible bidder.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may say to the gentleman that I have not been completely convinced that this is a good bill.

Under the terms of existing law the original route can be extended 25 miles beyond its terminus. In this bill there is absolutely no limitation whatsoever. Now, there is nothing under the sun in this bill which would prevent the Postmaster General from letting a contract under competitive bids, we will say, for the first 30 miles outside of a city, and then extending that star route all over the State, or all over the Territory.

I shall have no objection to the bill if some limitation is placed in it; but, for the life of me, I can not see why, if the Postmaster General did not want to let these contracts without competitive bidding, he did not insist that the 25-mile limitation stay in the bill.

Mr. MEAD. Of course, there is a possibility under certain circumstances of a Postmaster General abusing an authority such as is contained in this act, but the law requires that only in cases where the service can be improved, and where the star-route contractor can perform the service at the pro rata base pay included in his original contract that extensions may be granted. In many instances the Department has been desirous of extending service, but because of the limitation of 25 miles contained in the present law it has been hampered. This is particularly so since the advent of motor vehicles.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in those cases where new star routes are created, where there are extensions of existing service, the Postmaster General has it within his power at the present time to grant temporary contracts.

With that power there should be no curtailment of this service which he wants to give under the act, but I think it is bad legislation to remove all restrictions whatsoever on these star routes and create a situation whereby the Postmaster General may virtually award star-route contracts without competitive bids. This is what it amounts to. If a star route is, we will say, 30 miles in length, and it is deemed necessary to extend the service into a territory a hundred miles beyond that, there is nothing in this bill which prohibits the Post Office Department from granting an extension of a thousand miles if it see fit on the basis of the original contract.

I have no particular objection to the bill if there is some limitation placed. I wonder if we cannot pass the bill over without prejudice for the moment, and possibly we can get together on a reasonable limitation.

Mr. MEAD. I may say to the gentleman that I am not particularly determined on the language in the bill, but while we are discussing the subject may I say that the Post Office Department has within the last year or two readvertised for bids in one half of the United States. Competition has been so keen, due to the large number of people out of work, that contracts have been awarded at a lower price than that for which the service can be maintained. I should like to see this form of bidding eliminated, because it is cutthroat competition of the worst order. Many of these men will eventually have to turn in their contracts.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In that connection may I say that in all of these bids there is a provision that the contract shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder. The Post Office Department has always taken the attitude that the lowest responsible bidder is the lowest bidder who can obtain a bond to carry the mail under the terms of his bid. It is now within the discretion of the Postmaster General to interpret that language in the bid in order to prevent injustices such as these by people who bid away below what they should bid. He can protect the individuals under a proper interpretation of this phraseology which would require him to give the contract to the lowest responsible bidder. Having that in mind, I cannot see what benefit there is to this legislation, or what the purpose of the legislation is, unless it is to remove the limitation upon the awarding of these contracts.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLANCHARD. In connection with competitive bidding concerning star routes and delivery service within small cities and post office to depot and back again, we have permitted under this system the very thing that the Government of the United States has condemned in private business.

Mr. MAY. May I say that I have a half dozen complaints from rural carriers in my district where the Government has accepted bids from them because they could furnish the bond required by the advertisement. They are now under the higher rates of wages that have been established in industry and the additional cost of living that applies to every one of them. They are less able to carry the mail today at these contracts than they were then.

Mr. MEAD. There is no doubt about the gentleman's statement, and this service will break down in some instances unless these men are permitted to turn in their contracts, because just as soon as the cost of living increases they will be carrying the mail at a loss.

Mr. MAY. They are already doing that.

Mr. MEAD. They will be carrying the mail at a loss in many cases on contracts which were awarded within the last year or two.

Mr. MAY. Does this bill take care of that situation?

Mr. MEAD. No; this bill does not take care of that situation. It only pertains to extensions of existing star-route contracts.

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

UNPAID MAIL MATTER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7348, to amend section 3937 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Reserving the right to object, I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have a situation in my district wherein this bill would work a hardship. I have no fundamental objection to the principle of the bill. May I ask the gentleman if he would be willing to have an amendment made in order to cover the situation?

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TRUAX. What was the first statement that the gentleman made in reference to the bill?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I have no objection to the fundamental principle of the bill, and I was asking the author of the bill if he would not consent to an amendment which would take care of a condition which prevails in my district wherein there are two adjoining cities and the post offices are more than 3 miles apart.

May I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the language beginning at the top of page 2 is somewhat ambiguous, where it is stated, "in large cities and adjacent districts of dense population, having two or more post offices", and then the bill goes on and states that drop letters shall be delivered at the post office in such cities or adjacent districts. Letters delivered in the post offices or between post offices in a large city, even though they are 3 miles apart or more, are delivered at the drop-letter rate anyway; so I do not see the significance of the language "in large cities." I would suggest that the bill be amended in that regard.

Mr. HAINES. As I understand it, the gentleman has an amendment he would like to submit?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Yes.

Mr. HAINES. With the approval of the committee chairman, I should be glad to listen to the amendment.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I have an amendment in mind that in lieu of the use of the word "large", in line 1 at the top of page 2, the word "adjoining" be inserted. Then I have some subsequent minor amendments which would make necessary changes.

Mr. MEAD. If it will meet with the gentleman's approval, why can we not pass the bill over without prejudice until he has the amendments ready to submit?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I have the amendments ready at this time.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3937 of the Revised Statutes (39 U.S.C. 407) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"All domestic letters deposited in any post office for mailing, on which the postage is wholly unpaid or paid less than one full rate as required by law, except letters lawfully free, and duly certified letters of soldiers, sailors, and marines in the service of the United States, shall be sent by the postmaster to the dead-letter office in Washington, or to a post office designated by the Postmaster General, to be treated in the same manner as other undelivered letters. But in large cities and adjacent districts of dense population, having two or more post offices within a distance of 3 miles of each other, any letter mailed at one of such offices and addressed to a locality within the delivery of another of such offices, which shall have been inadvertently prepaid at the drop or local letter rate of postage only, may be forwarded to its destination through the proper office, charged with the amount of the deficient postage, to be collected on delivery."

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ELTSE of California: On page 2, line 1, strike out the word "large" and insert the word "adjoining"; and after the word "and" insert the words "in those"; and in line 2, after the word "population", strike out the comma; and in line 4, after the word "such", insert the words "cities and/or"; and after the word "to" insert the following: "an adjoining city or to."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONVEYANCE OF LETTERS BY PRIVATE HANDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7670, relating to conveyance of letters by private hands without compensation, or by special messenger employed for the particular occasion only.

Mr. TRUAX and Mr. WADSWORTH rose.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, this bill is intended to stop the practice that public utility companies have of delivering their charge accounts by messenger instead of using the mails.

Mr. DOBBINS. Let me say to the gentleman from Ohio that, while I should like to see the measure accomplish that, it does not go so far as that. It only prohibits the employment of special messengers or special messenger service to compete with the Post Office Department.

Mr. TRUAX. Is it not designed for that purpose?

Mr. DOBBINS. It is designed to prevent inroads on the monopoly of the Post Office Department in the carrying of the mail.

Mr. TRUAX. In other words, it is designed to make the Power Trust, which is strangling the people out of thousands and thousands of dollars, pay the Post Office Department for the carrying of such bills and other matters.

Mr. DOBBINS. No; I can hardly say it goes so far as that. It permits one to deliver letters by its own employees but does not permit a competing agency to be set up for delivering letters for other people.

Mr. TRUAX. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Would the gentleman have any objection to having the bill passed over without prejudice, so that amendments may be prepared to prevent such employment?

Mr. DOBBINS. The objection to passing this over for the purpose of amending it and prohibiting people from delivering these letters by their own employees would be that it would bring in a controversial amendment, and, as far as this bill goes, I do not think there should be any controversy over it at all. There came to my attention only this morning an instance where one great chain-store organization, by the employment of private delivery agencies, has been evading the law that is designed to give the Post Office Department a monopoly over the mails to the extent that just the evasions of this one corporation alone have deprived the Government of some $900,000 in revenue.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the author of the bill or the chairman of the committee if the situation which this bill is intended to correct has not grown up and reached important or acute proportions since the imposition of the 3-cent postage rate?

Mr. DOBBINS. I think that has caused a great deal of the abuse, and it will continue even if the postage rate is put back to 2 cents, because in certain cases the service can be carried on at a profit at a rate of 2 cents, and they reach out and compete with the Post Office Department only in cases where they can transact this business at a profit naturally.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As I understand, under this bill no person in the United States may employ another person to deliver more than five letters by hand.

Mr. DOBBINS. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And if a private person, entirely divorced from a utilities group, wanted to send out 12 invitations to friends of his in an adjoining city and have them delivered by hand by somebody whom he employs for that purpose, he may not do it.

Mr. DOBBINS. Yes; the limit is 5. I think this limit could very well be raised to 25 without interfering with the purpose of the bill. We discussed this in committee, and I do not believe there would be any objection to raising it to 25, because that would be only a 75-cent enterprise. The idea is to strike against the growing conditions we have of private delivery agencies growing up which will soon be vested interests and will insist upon their right to continue this practice.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In my opinion, this situation would not have arisen if it had not been for the 3-cent postage rate, and if we put the rate back to 2 cents, this practice will disappear.

Mr. DOBBINS. No; this one instance I have spoken of goes back over a period of 6 or 7 years and back to the time when the letter rate was 2 cents, and they have computed the evasions as amounting to $900,000. The matter is now before a grand jury for consideration.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman himself offer an amendment providing for 25 instead of 5?

Mr. BLANTON. It ought to be 50. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOBBINS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. In answer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], to keep the record entirely straight, it must be remembered that it was the high-hatted Postmaster General Brown who put the 3-cent rate into effect and we have not been able to get rid of it since. We have been working very hard and zealously trying to get it back to 2 cents.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I shall not designate the majority here by any adjective, but it is my recollection that the majority declined to support a motion made on this side of the aisle at this session to reduce the postage rate to 2 cents.

Mr. BLANTON. We have a bill passed now to reduce it to 2 cents after a certain length of time. We are trying to get rid of the vicious 3-cent system that was brought about by the gentleman's Postmaster General.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MAY. Reserving the right to object, I understood it was agreed that there would be an amendment offered.

Mr. DOBBINS. We will offer an amendment raising it from 5 to 25.

There being no further objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 186 of the act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. 1124) (U.S.C., title 18, sec. 309), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Nothing in this chapter shall be construed to prohibit the conveyance or transmission of letters or packets by private hands without compensation, or by special messenger employed for the particular occasion only: Provided, That whenever more than five such letters or packets are conveyed or transmitted by such special messenger, the requirements of section 3933 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 39, sec. 500) shall be observed as to each piece."

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, change the word "five" to "twenty-five."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REMOVING LIMITATION UPON EXTENSION OF STAR ROUTES

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 226, H.R. 7212, to remove the limitation upon the extension of star routes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, I believe the chairman of the committee and myself have come to an understanding that the extension of this service by the Postmaster General without new bids shall be limited to 50 miles. If the committee will accept that, I will withdraw my reservation.

Mr. MEAD. The committee will be very glad to accept it, because it is a very liberal extension of that they already enjoy.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last paragraph of section 1 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and for other purposes", approved March 4, 1911 (36 Stat. 1327; U.S.C., title 39, sec. 442), is amended to read as follows:

"The Postmaster General may, in cases where the mail service would be thereby improved, extend service on a mail route under contract, at not exceeding pro rata additional pay."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 12, after the word "pay", strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following: "Provided, That such extension shall not exceed 50 miles of traveled service route."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MENOMINEE INDIAN RESERVATION, WIS.

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 7759, to amend the law relating to timber operations on the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act approved March 28, 1908 (35 Stat.L. 51), entitled "An act to authorize the cutting of timber, the manufacture and sale of lumber, and the preservation of the forests on the Menominee Indian Reservation in the State of Wisconsin", be, and is hereby, amended to provide that the Secretary of the Interior, insofar as practicable, shall at all times employ none but Menominee Indians upon said reservation in forest protection, logging, driving, sawing, and manufacturing into lumber for the market such timber.

SEC. 2. Section 4 of the act approved March 28, 1908 (35 Stat.L. 51), entitled "An act to authorize the cutting of timber, the manufacture and sale of lumber, and the preservation of the forests on the Menominee Indian Reservation in the State of Wisconsin", be, and is hereby, amended by adding at the end thereof the sentence: "The Secretary of the Interior shall at the end of each fiscal year ascertain and fix the fair market stumpage value of the fully matured and ripened green timber cut on said reservation during the fiscal year and shall during the succeeding fiscal year pay said amount in equal shares to each member of the Menominee Tribe of Indians, living and on the tribal rolls, on the last day of said fiscal year.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, after the enacting clause, strike out all of section 1 comprised in lines 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11.

Page 2, strike out "Sec. 2" and in lieu thereof insert "That."

Page 2, line 6, after the word "following", insert a colon and strike out "sentence."

Page 2, line 13, substitute a colon for the period following the word "year" and add the following: "Provided, That said amount so distributed during any fiscal year shall not exceed the amount actually earned from timber operations on said reservation during the previous fiscal year.

"The expenditures proposed for the purposes specified herein shall be submitted to the tribal council, or its authorized business committee, for its advance review and approval."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS GRAND CALUMET RIVER, GARY, IND.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 9064, granting the consent of Congress to the State of Indiana to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Grand Calumet River at or near a point suitable to the interests of navigation, east of Clark Street, in Gary, Ind.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State of Indiana to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Grand Calumet River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near a point east of Clark Street, Gary, Ind., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "A bill granting the consent of Congress to the State of Indiana to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Grand Calumet River near Clark Street, in Gary, Ind."

MILK INVESTIGATION

The Clerk called the next business, House Concurrent Resolution 32, authorizing and directing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate conditions with respect to the sale and distribution of milk and other dairy products in the United States.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to ask the author of the resolution how he expects the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation of this character without providing some funds for the Trade Commission to carry on the work?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I am not the author of the resolution, but I am familiar with it. The Federal Trade Commission has been consulted regarding the resolution and is favorable to its passage. The Budget Director also is favorable. There probably will be some small appropriation required. The resolution cannot carry an appropriation at this time.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The resolution could carry an authorization. There must be an authorization before an appropriation can be granted. Otherwise it would be subject to the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. That is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. There should be some kind of an authorization in this resolution. I am not fully enough informed upon the subject to warrant my commenting upon the merits of the resolution, but I call attention to the fact that there is no authorization in the resolution. If the resolution were passed in its present form, there would have to be another resolution passed with an authorization before an appropriation could be granted. I think an authorization should be provided in this resolution in the way of an amendment.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Why cannot the Federal Trade Commission, under appropriations made generally for an investigation of unfair trade practices, go on and make the investigation without an authorization?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If the gentleman will read the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations, he will find that the Federal Trade Commission has been piled up with work by the body at the other end of the Capitol and it is short of funds now. It cannot carry on as it is. If you want an investigation you must provide funds for that purpose.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to state that last week I objected to the consideration of this bill for the reason that there were certain gentlemen on the Republican side of the aisle who wanted time to look into the matter further. I have no further objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 32

Whereas an audit made by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration has revealed that distributors in four of the largest milksheds in the United States, for the 5 years ended December 31, 1933, made a net profit of 25.71 percent on their net plant investment; and

Whereas this audit shows the net profits of distributors in each of the milksheds for the 5-year period to be: Philadelphia (distributors handling 85 percent of volume), 30.76 percent; Boston (distributors handling 75 percent of volume), 22.45 percent; St. Louis (distributors handling 67 percent of volume), 14.64 percent; and Chicago (distributors handling 90 percent of volume), 25.84 percent; and

Whereas during this same 5-year period the wholesale price of milk sold by farmers declined 50 percent, resulting in severe hardships and suffering to milk producers throughout the United States and strikes and violence in many rural and metropolitan centers; and

Whereas the aforesaid audit by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration has revealed net profits of milk distributors which tends to establish that similar conditions exist in other milksheds throughout the United States; and

Whereas an investigation in the District of Columbia, pursuant to S.Res. 76, Seventy-third Congress, first session, revealed testimony which abundantly sustains the contention that over a period of years large milk distributors have attempted to create a monopoly in the District of Columbia, and largely as a result of these efforts farmers producing milk for the District of Columbia milkshed have received low returns for their product and have been placed at a serious disadvantage; and

Whereas the testimony adduced at hearings in the aforesaid investigation in the District of Columbia tends to prove that similar monopolistic efforts likewise exist in other milksheds in the United States; and

Whereas there is reason to believe that there exists a close tie between certain leaders of milk producers' cooperatives and milk distributors, which tie is unbeknown to milk producers and detrimental to their interests; and

Whereas the continuation of the practices now engaged in by milk distributors and certain leaders of milk cooperatives seriously endangers the efforts of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and of the several States to alleviate and remedy the distress now wide-spread among dairy farmers in the United States, which distress if permitted to continue will result in the destruction of the already sorely pressed agricultural industry: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Federal Trade Commission is authorized and directed to investigate conditions with respect to the sale and distribution of milk and other dairy products within the territorial limits of the United States by any person, partnership, association, cooperative, or corporation, with a view to determining particularly whether any such person, partnership, association, cooperative, or corporation is operating within any milkshed of the United States in such a manner as to substantially lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in the sale or distribution of such dairy products, or is a party to any conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in any such dairy products, or is in any way monopolizing or attempting to monopolize such trade or commerce within the United States or any part thereof, or is using any unfair method of competition in connection with the sale or distribution of any such dairy products, or is in any way operating to depress the price of milk sold by producers. The Federal Trade Commission shall report to the House of Representatives as soon as practicable the result of its investigations, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary remedial legislation.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ZIONCHECK: At the end of the resolution add the following:

"There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $60,000 for the purposes of this resolution."

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the gentleman from Washington to the fact that the report says that $125,000 will be necessary.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I have put it at just one half of that.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON] if he has any definite knowledge of the amount that is necessary to conduct this investigation properly.

Mr. SISSON. I am advised by some of the officials of the Federal Trade Commission and also the Department of Agriculture who would be called upon to assist in this investigation, that what they regard as an adequate investigation could probably be carried on for $50,000 or $60,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I think $60,000 is probably too high. The Department of Agriculture, through the A.A.A., has already conducted come investigations on this subject, and of course, all that information will be available to the Federal Trade Commission. An authorization of $60,000 does not necessarily mean that the Appropriations Committee must abide by that amount. I think $60,000 is probably too high.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. The estimated expenditures required were set at $125,000 by some of the agencies, and this amendment proposes to compromise by cutting that in half. That is a rather severe compromise, as it is.

Mr. BLANTON. It still leaves some discretion in the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield.

Mr. SISSON. I will say to the gentleman that the A.A.A. has made some investigations, but there are certain of the large distributors who have refused up to the present time to open their books, and no audit has been made of their books or of their profits or of the cost of distribution, for example, with respect to the New York milk shed or the New York City market, and I assume that same condition obtains in other parts of the country, although I am not informed. While perhaps the $60,000 may not all be expended, I think to be on the safe side, because this is one of the most important investigations that could be made, we should have $60,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I shall not oppose the $60,000, but I simply rose for the purpose of calling attention to the Appropriations Committee that they should go into the matter thoroughly and give an ample amount. I think we should settle this question once and for all with reference to inordinate profits made by some of these distributors and the conditions of the various milksheds. I am for the bill. Likewise, I am for an adequate amount so that an investigation may be properly conducted.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

One of the main sources of inquiry, I take it, is going to disclose just what racketeering there is going on with respect to the milk industry. I understand there is a great deal of it in connection with the large cities. I hope that that feature of it will be fully developed, so that it may disclose just who it is that is racketeering in this industry. Just who is saying, "Pay us so much for the privilege of conducting this business."

Another thing that should be developed is the large salaries that are paid high officials. I want to say, as one Member of Congress, that I hope before this Congress adjourns we will pass a bill—let it be a rider, if necessary, on some appropriation bill—that will require every corporation in the United States to disclose to its stockholders, when they demand it, every salary that they pay their officials. When I go home I am going to make a few speeches in my district, and I am going to recommend to my constituents that they cease buying a share of stock in any corporation that pays these inordinately large salaries to its officials. It is ridiculous for corporations to list their stocks on the daily market and ask people to buy their stocks when they are paying salaries of $100,000, $125,000, $150,000 $175,000, and $200,000 to some individual who does not earn one tenth or one twentieth of the salary paid.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. GLOVER. Is it not true also that those big corporations evade a great deal of income tax they should be paying this Government by reason of the fact they pay these excessive salaries and they are taken off of the earnings, and they beat the Government out of that much income tax?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly. I had a constituent not long ago who happened to own a few shares of stock in one of the big corporations of America. As a stockholder they wrote the company asking them to please give them a list of the salaries paid their officials. The company refused. They said it was none of their business; that that was a personal matter that did not concern the stockholder. When that was brought to my attention as a Member of Congress I wrote them and I called their attention to this correspondence, and I said, "I demand, as a Member of Congress, that you give me a list of the salaries that you pay your officials." They wrote back and said that it was none of the business of Congress, that it was a personal matter. In other words, it is none of the business of Congress to know what big salaries companies like the Radio Corporation of America pay. It is none of the business of the stockholders. I hope the American people before this year is out will stop buying stocks of corporation that will not list the salaries of their officials.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. I want to remind the gentleman about the American Tobacco Trust paying more than a million dollars in salaries.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, it has to be stopped. We are responsible for it. We ought to pass a law that will force publicity and stop it. Whenever you let the American people know about it they will stop it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield to me? I want to talk about milk.

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking now about these big salaries.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. But this is a milk question we are considering.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me yield first to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHRISTIANSON].

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Why does not the gentleman stop it? If you bring in a bill here, I think we could pass that sort of legislation. We will vote for it.

Mr. BLANTON. We are going to try to get a rider on a bill before we adjourn. It must, however, come from the other end of the Capitol.

We cannot put such a rider on a bill here in the House because our rules will not admit of it, but it can be done at the other end of the Capitol. It takes too long to get legislation through here; but if the distinguished ex-Governor of Minnesota will help me at the other end of the Capitol, we will get a rider put on some appropriation bill before we quit. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in accord with all that the gentleman from Texas has said about high salaries. I am somewhat familiar with the practice that has developed this present distressing milk condition in this country.

I note that in the capital city of my State, Columbus, Ohio, the largest distributing concern we had there, the Moores & Ross Milk Co., was absorbed by the Borden Milk Co. some few years ago; and in the year 1932, I think it was, when every farmer in this country lost at least 2 cents a quart on every quart of milk they produced, the Borden milk trust made a net profit of $20,000,000.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is just exactly what I wanted to bring out.

Mr. TRUAX. I yield for a question, not for a speech.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. To make it a matter of record, I read in a St. Louis newspaper during this past week that where milk producers received less than 3 cents a quart for milk, it is being sold to consumers in my city for 11 cents a quart. There is the trouble which causes the low prices to the farmers. You must close the gap between the consumer and the producer. Someone is getting too much profit. The farmer is not getting his share.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman is right; that is the trouble with the dairy farmer; but the same condition exists with respect to the hog farmer. He gets 3 cents a pound for his hogs, but by the time his hogs get to the market in the shape of pork the butchers receive 17 cents and 20 cents a pound for the choice cuts. The farmer receives 5 cents a pound for fat steers, yet beef is sold in this city as high as 50 cents a pound, and when you go down to the Occidental, the Shoreham, or to Harvey's and pay $3 for a choice steak, of that sum the farmer gets about 10 cents.

The gentleman says a means must be found to bring the producer and the consumer together. We have tried that for 15 years without success. The remedy lies in the fixing of minimum prices for every farm commodity right on the farm, 10 cents for hogs, 10 cents for cattle, $1.25 a bushel for wheat, 30 cents a pound for butterfat, 25 cents a dozen for eggs, and so on. This cannot be done by cooperation, as has been demonstrated time and time again; it cannot be done by reducing acreage. Now, Mr. Wallace says he has changed his mind, and we are going to compete with the world on wheat production and that he will probably take off the reduction program. Congress must fix a price scale for everything that is produced on the farm. In addition we must enact the Frazier bill and the McLeod bill, which goes down to the grass roots and places money in the hands of the people.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. MAY. In the event prices were fixed as suggested by the gentleman—butterfats at 30 cents, hogs at 10 cents, milk at 10 cents a quart—how much would the working people in the city have to pay for these things?

Mr. TRUAX. Not one penny more than they pay now if you restrict prices fixed by the Food Trust. We can take care of that by fixing maximum prices at the packing houses and the plants of the processors.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. DIES. I notice the gentleman overlooked silver in his list of remedies.

Mr. TRUAX. Well, I feel that the Dies silver bill is one of the most important pieces of legislation that could be passed in the interest of the farmer, because it proposes to exchange surplus farm products for silver. This would open up the markets of China and India.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Getting back to the investigation of the milk business, will not the gentleman admit that the Secretary of Agriculture has at the present time the power to investigate; and that, by the power to license, the Secretary can prevent excessive profits?

Mr. TRUAX. As I have stated before, the Secretary of Agriculture has entirely too much work on his hands now. With all of his social duties, his speech-making and writing of books, and his religious utterances, I do not see how he gives any attention to his job as Secretary of Agriculture. [Laughter.]

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRUAX. I yield to the gentlewoman from Arizona.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Does the gentleman realize that of the consumer's dollar, the dairy producer 2 years ago used to get 52 percent, whereas now he gets but 37 percent, while the distributors' profits have gone up in different cities from 26 percent to something approaching 40 percent?

Mr. TRUAX. The gentlewoman from Arizona is absolutely right; and the only remedy for this distressing condition is to fix farm prices, pass the Dies silver bill, enact the Frazier bill to refinance farmers, and enact the McLeod bill so they can get their money out of these closed banks. [Applause.]

By unanimous consent, the pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL OF SCIENTIFIC UNIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6781, to authorize appropriations to pay the annual share of the United States as an adhering member of the International Council of Scientific Unions and associated unions.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that on page 2 of the bill there is no limitation upon the sum which is annually authorized for the purpose of meeting our annual share after 1935? May I also call attention in this connection to the language on page 2, starting with line 5, where it is stated, after authorizing $9,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, "and annually thereafter such sum as may be necessary for the payment of such annual share"?

It seems to me that this is somewhat inconsistent with the bill which we passed last week which did away with most of these annual authorizations, and I think the Congress should adopt the broad policy of not including in any of its bills authorizations for annual appropriations beyond the present fiscal year. For this reason I am constrained to object, but I may say to the gentleman that I have no objection to the authorization for this year, and if he will consent to an amendment striking out the language which I quoted I shall not object to the bill.

My proposed amendment will strike out this language on page 2 after "1935":

And annually thereafter such sum as may be necessary for the payment of such annual share.

Mr. BLOOM. This authorization is all right for 1935?

Mr. WOLCOTT. This amendment does not touch the appropriation of $9,000 for this year. The effect of my amendment will be to compel the sponsors of the legislation to come back to us next year and ask for the same authorization and will give us some jurisdiction over the matter.

Mr. BLOOM. I may say to the gentleman that Dr. Herbert D. Curtis, director of the observatory of the University of Michigan, is one of the sponsors of this bill. It comes from all the great educators throughout the country. But if the gentleman insists upon the amendment, which I hope he will not, I will have to agree to it, because I want to get it through. Would the gentleman make his amendment to cover the year 1937 for the time being, so we can be sure of this year and next year?

Mr. WOLCOTT. If we do that, I do not know of any reason then why we should not make it for 1938 and 1939.

Mr. BLOOM. I wish the gentleman would make it 1937.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentleman that I am not in a bargaining mood now.

Mr. BLOOM. I will have to accept the gentleman's amendment if he insists.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think, in view of the fact that the money will not be needed until some time in June, and a new Congress will have been in session for a matter of 6 months previous to that time, that it is not necessary to provide for more than the present fiscal year.

Mr. BLOOM. We could not get it through in time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. We are getting this through.

Mr. BLOOM. This has been pending for some time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. This bill was introduced in January 1934.

Mr. BLOOM. I wish the gentleman would bear with me in connection with this matter.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentleman that, as I stated previously, I had no objection to the appropriation of $9,000 for this year, but I am going to hereafter take the attitude that we should not make these annual authorizations. We have to be consistent. We have either to cut out the annual authorizations or the work we did last week will be of no avail.

Mr. BLOOM. You will kill all the work——

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; I am not going to kill any work.

Mr. GOSS. Could not the gentleman get this in the Budget next year?

Mr. BLOOM. No.

Mr. GOSS. It was the policy of the House last week to cut out all annual appropriations and have the Departments come up and justify their needs each year.

Mr. BLOOM. This is merely for dues. It is not to cover traveling expenses or any other kind of expense. It is merely for the dues of the Government of the United States.

Mr. GOSS. Will not the State Department put this in their budget next year?

Mr. BLOOM. It was lost last year.

Mr. GOSS. Will they not be able to put it in their budget?

Mr. BLOOM. They cannot afford to because it is taken out of their appropriations. The Appropriations Committee will not give it to them.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will have to insist upon my amendment. If the gentleman will accept it I will not object to the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman might just as well object to the bill in toto.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I, frankly, do not understand what the gentleman means.

Mr. BLOOM. Because the gentleman does not give us a chance. We cannot get this approved next year. We start in January. We will not have the appropriation in time, and then we will be in a worse fix.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not understand the gentleman's attitude when he says this amendment will prevent our participating this year. I have no objection to the sum of $9,000 being appropriated for 1935, but I do object to appropriating money for the fiscal year 1936, if there is any logic to my objection that we should not make these annual authorizations.

Mr. BLOOM. I may say to the gentleman that this means a great deal to the Government. If we do not pass this authorization for $9,000, it will cost the Government 10 times or a hundred times as much.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I cannot follow the gentleman in his argument.

Mr. BLOOM. I have letters here from Dr. George H. Hale, president of the International Hall of the Scientific Union, Dr. W. W. Campbell, Dr. Walter S. Adams, and from 20 professors of California who want this.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I have not much of a quarrel with the gentleman. May I ask the gentleman from New York why he is asking for $9,000?

Mr. BLOOM. On account of the difference in exchange.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Will not $8,000 be adequate?

Mr. BLOOM. If the exchange is changed, $4,000 might be enough or $5,000; but if you change the $9,000 to $8,000, we cannot get that equivalent of money over there to pay the dues. If it is not necessary, the State Department will not pay it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentleman that I cannot offer my amendment without withdrawing my reservation of objection. I have an amendment prepared to strike out the language referred to. I should like the gentleman to agree to the amendment, because we adopted a policy last week of not making any more annual appropriations.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman can do whatever he wants.

Mr. WOLCOTT. However, I may say to the gentleman that was not my responsibility, and I do not consider this my responsibility. So I am going to offer my amendment, and if the gentleman accepts it, all right.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Is the gentleman going to object if the amendment is not accepted?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I shall object unless the amendment is accepted.

Mr. BLOOM. Although there is only one objector and three objections are required, I am willing to accept an amendment to include 1937. I am offering this for the Government, and the one thing they want to go into now is the study of radio. The Government of the United States is asking for this legislation. If the gentleman wants to object, that is his responsibility.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Does the gentleman care to say whether he will accept my amendment or not?

Mr. BLOOM. No; I will not.

Mr. BLANTON. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. ZIONCHECK, and Mr. GOSS objected.

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 9323) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. RAYBURN, HUDDLESTON, LEA of California, COOPER of Ohio, and MAPES.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

RELIEF FOR DISBURSING OFFICERS OF THE ARMY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2046, to provide relief for disbursing officers of the Army in certain cases.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go over without prejudice.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, to read the bill one would judge this is apparently a matter of slight concern, but I rise to say it is a most dangerous piece of legislation. Instead of passing this bill we should immediately repeal the act the bill seeks to amend, because the original act was a war-time measure, and should not be operative during peace times.

Are you aware that under this act the Secretary of the Treasury could relieve any disbursing officer charged with responsibility on account of loss or deficiency of Government funds, vouchers, records, or papers in his charge if the Secretary of War so recommended? No matter the amount, if the Secretary of War made a recommendation, it is mandatory for the Secretary of the Treasury to grant such relief. It could be millions.

Under the existing law the Secretary of the Navy can grant relief to a Navy disbursing officer today. I admit if the Navy is entitled to so provide, the Army should likewise be permitted to grant relief to its disbursing officers, but it is my opinion it should not be extended, but the present law repealed.

I have confidence in the present Secretary of the Navy and Secretary of War, but Congress should not place such responsibilities upon them.

During the period of the war when the Navy was engaged in hostilities, ships were being sunk, and records being lost, the Navy came to Congress and asked for the passage of a bill which would give the Secretary of the Navy the power to relieve certain disbursing officers where it was shown their records were destroyed, and so forth. It was a temporary measure, as the hearings show. Later, despite the fact there were two court decisions in the matter, the then Attorney General, Mr. Daugherty, rendered an opinion that threw the law wide open and gave the Secretary of the Navy the power to relieve disbursing officers of any amount he desired.

I have had some correspondence with the Comptroller General on this subject and I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, at this point in the RECORD, to include the letters I have received from him with reference to this legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. COCHRAN: I have your letter of April 30, 1934, asking for a complete report on S. 2046 and H.R. 6572, originally identical bills, but the former passed the Senate April 25, 1934, in the following form:

"A bill to provide relief for disbursing officers of the Army in certain cases

"Be it enacted, etc., That the act of July 11, 1919 (ch. 9, 41 Stat. 132; U.S.C., title 31, sec. 105), be, and is hereby amended as follows: 'Wherever the word "Navy" appears in said act the words "or Army" be added, and wherever the words "Secretary of the Navy" appear the words "or the Secretary of War" be added.'"

The act of July 11, 1919, 41 Stat. 132, referred to, was a provision contained in the appropriation act for the Navy for the fiscal year 1920.

"The accounting officers of the Treasury shall relieve any disbursing officer of the Navy charged with responsibility on account of loss or deficiency while in the line of his duty, of Government funds, vouchers, records, or papers, in his charge, where such loss or deficiency occurred without fault or negligence on the part of said officer: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall have determined that the officer was in the line of his duty, and the loss or deficiency occurred without fault or negligence on his part: Provided further, That the determination by the Secretary of the Navy of the aforesaid questions shall be conclusive upon the accounting officers of the Treasury: Provided further, That all cases of relief granted under this authority during any fiscal year shall be reported in detail to the Congress by the Secretary of the Navy."

The Navy Department in urging enactment of this legislation (see hearings before the Naval Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives on estimates of appropriations for the Navy Department for the fiscal year 1919, pp. 411, 412) represented that it was to save to disbursing officers who had lost funds by reason of the sinking of naval vessels during the war, the expense of suits for relief in the Court of Claims under sections 145 and 147 of the Judicial Code (36 Stat. 1137 (28 U.S.C. 250 (3) and 253)), or the necessity of securing legislative relief for said loss. The language adopted is substantially the same as that contained in the cited two sections of the Judicial Code, conferring upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction to afford relief in such cases. The Court of Claims has held in Malone v. The United States (5 C.Cls. 486) that a disbursing officer's error or mistake, or omission or forbearance to discharge all lawful duties imposed by virtue of his office would not excuse him under the statute, and in Hall v. The United States (9 C.Cls. 270), that a loss incurred by a disbursing officer because of forged checks drawn against his depository balance was not authorized to be relieved.

Notwithstanding the judicial construction of a statute in pari materia and substantially identical in language, by the only court having such jurisdiction, Attorney General Daugherty, on October 9, 1923 (34 Ops. Atty. Gen. 5) held that the act of July 11, 1919, quoted above, applied to a deficiency in a disbursing officer's account due to payments erroneously made. A more extended discussion of the statute, its proper interpretation, and the apparent unsoundness of the opinion of Attorney General Daugherty is contained in a memorandum attached.

The War Department in its communication of March 29, 1934, as published in Senate Report 707, page 3 (73d Cong., 2d sess.), adopts this interpretation by Attorney General Daugherty as the basis of its action should the act be extended to the War Department and states that it will relieve deficiencies in disbursing officers' accounts for (1) minor overpayments occasioned by misconstruction or misinterpretation of law and regulations; (2) petty errors of calculation; (3) like inadvertent disbursements; and in that letter there is illustrated the character of deficiencies which the War Department will include, as follows: (1) Traveling expenses paid directly contrary to a prohibitory statute; (2) rental of an automobile paid directly contrary to a prohibitory statute; (3) minor errors of calculation.

Whether overpayments are "minor" or whether errors of calculation are "petty" is, under the act as construed by Attorney General Daugherty, left entirely to the judgment and discretion of the Secretary. It gives him authority to relieve for the actual loss of $10,000 or more of funds when lost by fire or other casualty, and he can also, under Attorney General Daugherty's interpretation, relieve "minor" overpayments due to misinterpretation of statutes in the aggregate of tens of thousands of dollars and "petty" errors of calculation of the same extent. The legislation as so construed simply relieves disbursing officers within its terms from the effect of the audit and practically constitutes the Department the final auditing authority; for what is approved by the Secretary, or by his authority by interested subordinates, will be certified for allowance in the disbursing officer's account, and the Government will not thereafter be afforded an opportunity to secure judicial scrutiny of the matter, as the Department of Justice will not institute suit where a certificate has been made by the Secretary of the Navy under the act of July 11, 1919, and the opinion of Attorney General Daugherty cited.

If in the judgment of the Congress it is desirable that disbursing officers of the Army shall be saved the expense of a suit in the Court of Claims to secure relief where a deficiency has been incurred on account of actual physical loss of "Government funds, vouchers, records, or papers" without fault or negligence on the part of the disbursing officer "while in the line of his duty", there is no reason why the same provision should not be extended to them as has been extended to disbursing officers of the Navy, but an appropriate proviso should be inserted to overcome the erroneous and damaging opinion of Attorney General Daugherty. If a proviso is added to the language of the bill as it passed the Senate substantially as follows, that purpose will be secured:

"Provided, That the said act of July 11, 1919, shall be applicable only to the actual physical loss of Government funds, vouchers, records, or papers, and shall not include deficiencies resulting from illegal or erroneous payments in the respective services."

Otherwise the passage of the bill is not recommended.

Sincerely yours,

J. R. MCCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

MEMORANDUM

The act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat. 132), provides:

"The accounting officers of the Treasury shall relieve any disbursing officer of the Navy charged with responsibility on account of loss or deficiency, while in the line of duty, of Government funds, vouchers, records, or papers in his charge where such loss or deficiency occurred without fault or negligence on the part of said officer: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall have determined that the officer was in the line of his duty, and the loss or deficiency occurred without fault or negligence on his part: Provided further, That the determination by the Secretary of the Navy of the aforesaid questions shall be conclusive upon the accounting officers of the Treasury: Provided further, That all cases of relief granted under this authority during any fiscal year shall be reported in detail to the Congress by the Secretary of the Navy."

This office has consistently maintained the position that the term "loss or deficiency while in the line of his duty, of Government funds, vouchers, records, or papers in his charge, where such loss or deficiency occurred without fault or negligence on the part of said officer", applied only to a physical loss or deficiency and not to illegal or unauthorized payments made by a disbursing officer.

In decision of October 12, 1922 (2 Comp. Gen. 277), there was sustained the former action of this office denying credit to P. J. Willett, commander (S.C.), United States Navy, for disbursements in 1914 aggregating $250, illegally paid to a third person by reason of entries of the name of a fictitious person as a laborer on the pay rolls of the Pearl Harbor Naval Station, the Secretary of the Navy on March 31, 1922, having issued his certificate purporting to be under the provisions of the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat. 132), that the amount erroneously paid was a loss or deficiency which occurred without fault or negligence on the part of Commander Willett and that he was in line of duty when the loss or deficiency occurred. As the basis for denying credit it was said:

"* * * In the decision of which reconsideration is requested it was held that the quoted provision of law applied only to cases of actual physical loss and afforded no relief whatever to disbursing officers of the Navy from responsibility for unlawful payments.

"The contention has been advanced in the request for reconsideration that the determination of facts relative to loss or deficiency of public funds by disbursing officers of the Navy rests solely with the Secretary of the Navy, and that the accounting officers are without authority to question such determination, being specifically directed to relieve Navy disbursing officers of amounts so certified.

"The enactment furnishes no authority to the Secretary of the Navy to determine when disbursing officers of the Navy shall be entitled to credit in their accounts for payments made.

"The proper facts must be present, and it is the duty of this office to examine every certificate of relief given under the act to see that the facts necessary to its operation are present. If the proper facts appear, no question arises as to the giving of the certificate. If the facts show there is no question of 'loss or deficiency' of funds, vouchers, records, or papers, but the question is the lawfulness of a payment made, the giving of the certificate is conclusive on none and cannot be acted upon by this office. In the present matter there was no loss of funds, no deficiency in the vouchers, records, or papers. It was simply an unlawful payment—such a payment as it is inherently the duty of the accounting officers to act upon. A certificate of relief in such a case would operate to destroy accounting."

Thereupon, Secretary of the Navy Denby, disregarding the general provision in section 304 of the act of June 10, 1921 (42 Stat. 24, 26), that "The balances certified by the Comptroller General shall be final and conclusive upon the executive branch of the Government", submitted the question to the Attorney General. On October 9, 1923 (34 Op. Atty. Gen. 5, 13), Attorney General Daugherty rendered his opinion that the term "loss or deficiency" included illegal payments, saying:

"I can find no justification for confining the act of 1919 to cases of mere 'physical loss' of funds. The words of the statute are 'loss or deficiency', and effect must be given to both terms. 'Deficiency' is not synonymous with 'loss' and is certainly of broader import than 'physical loss.' There is nothing in the general scope and purpose of the act to limit its ordinary and natural meaning (De Ganay v. Lederer, 250 U.S. 376, 380, 381). Besides, the statute is manifestly a remedial one and should receive a liberal rather than a strict and narrow construction. I am therefore clearly of the opinion that the statute applied to a 'deficiency' due to payments erroneously made, as is the case here."

The Secretary of the Navy, apparently relying on this opinion refused to take any action toward recovering the balance of $250 due the United States from Willett or his sureties and to date the amount has not been collected.

That the opinion of the Attorney General is not sound seems obvious from a survey of the field involved. It is inconceivable that Congress could have intended by a legislative provision inserted in a general appropriation act to summarily oust the accounting officers from their long-established and independent jurisdiction of determining the validity of expenditures and the responsibility for illegal payments and to place in the hands of an administrative officer the final power of relieving officers disbursing a vast sum of money each year under his immediate supervision, from their responsibility for illegal disbursements. That an administrative officer should have such unlimited power to relieve of responsibility for illegal disbursements in his own department is a proposition so revolutionary and far-reaching in its possibilities for harm that it certainly requires a foundation more secure than a forced construction of the meaning of the term "loss or deficiency of funds" to include admittedly illegal payments.

If Congress had intended to include such extensive relief for illegal payments in this provision of the act of July 11, 1919, doubtless language would have been used making that purpose clear as was done both in the same act and in subsequent legislation authorizing restricted relief for illegal payments under defined circumstances. In the same act, at 41 Statutes, 153, there appears the following provision:

"That the accounting officers of the Treasury Department are hereby authorized and directed to allow, in the settlement of the accounts of disbursing officers of the Navy and Marine Corps covering the period of the present emergency, such credits for payments to officers and enlisted men not ordinarily allowable under the statutes, as are certified to them by the Secretary of the Navy as having been incurred under military necessity, or as having been occasioned by accidental circumstances or conditions over which such disbursing officers had no control and for which they were not justly responsible: Provided, That the period of the present emergency as contemplated by this paragraph shall be regarded as beginning on the 6th day of April 1917 and as terminating 6 months after the expiration of the quarter in which peace is declared. And that nothing herein shall be construed to include payments under contracts for supplies or services."

Here, as always, Congress has carefully restricted the granting of relief for illegal payments. They must have been made during the period of the emergency, which is defined, and the Secretary of the Navy must certify that they were made under military necessity or were occasioned by accidental circumstances or conditions over which the disbursing officer had no control and for which he was not justly responsible. Further, payments under contracts for supplies and services were excluded. The very existence of this restrictive provision for relief from illegal payments in the same act containing the provision for relief on account of loss or deficiency of funds is practically conclusive that the provision for loss or deficiency of funds was never intended to include illegal payments. Effect must be given to the provision for illegal payments, and it cannot be assumed that Congress would have included such provision for restricted relief if in the same act they had included a general provision intended to give the Secretary unrestricted power of relief, regardless of time or class of payment, by his certificate that they were made without fault or negligence on the part of the disbursing officer.

Nor is any support found for the view of the Attorney General in the circumstances under which the provision for relief on account of loss or deficiency of funds, vouchers, etc., was included in the act of July 11, 1919. The Navy had been through a period of hostilities, ships had been sunk, funds and records had been lost or destroyed. This measure was urged as desirable in view of such circumstances to save the officers either the necessity of securing individual relief by Congress or the trouble and expense of securing relief from accountability for such funds and records through the Court of Claims under existing legislation. This is made evident from the report of the hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives on estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Navy for 1919. See pages 411 and 412 of such report, where the following discussion took place relative to the purpose of the provision for relief here in question:

"Mr. KELLEY. How about this proviso with reference to accounting officers?

"Mr. KELLEY. Is that a desirable provision?

"Admiral McGOWAN. Yes, sir; it is very desirable. It puts it up to the Navy Department. This is a general provision.

"Mr. KELLEY. How many cases are there of this kind intended to relieve?

"Admiral McGOWAN. At the moment, I think, five.

"Mr. REED. Five cases pending, and there have been several other ships that have gone down with funds on board, but the amounts have not been certified by the accounting officer, and those officers will be entitled to relief, although under present legislation they have to get it through a private bill or a Navy bill, or go to the Court of Claims and hire an attorney and spend several hundred dollars.

"Admiral McGOWAN. This provision was approved as covering a number of meritorious cases on which favorable action was recommended by the Secretary of the Navy.

"Mr. KELLEY. If the Secretary of the Navy should not approve this section, there would be a certain number of special cases that ought to be taken care of?

"Admiral McGOWAN. The Secretary has approved it.

"Mr. KELLEY. My impression was that he did not think this was good legislation.

"Mr. REED. The Secretary recommended it to the naval committee last June.

"The CHAIRMAN. I was sure the House accepted the provision in the bill as reported from this committee providing for the settlement of damages, but it seems to be a Senate amendment.

"Admiral McGOWAN. Yes, sir. My recollection was that the Secretary sent a letter recommending it.

"Mr. REED. I think I can straighten that out. The act of July 1, 1918, contained a provision authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims abroad in amounts not exceeding $1,000. This is intended to cover cases in the United States of losses of property.

"The CHAIRMAN. We reported this provision and endeavored to get it through the House, and I thought it remained in the bill, but I am surprised to find that it comes as a Senate amendment.

"Mr. REED. This amendment was proposed in the Senate by Mr. Calder.

"Admiral McGOWAN. Yes; I was there when the Senator brought this in.

"The CHAIRMAN. Do you know whether the Secretary of the Navy approved this provision?

"Admiral McGOWAN. I do not, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. Have you anything further to say about this amendment?

"Admiral McGOWAN. You mean the Calder amendment?

"The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir; that the accounting office shall relieve any officer, etc.

"Admiral McGOWAN. Yes, sir; I am strongly in favor of it because nothing suggested to the Congress would ordinarily be in a bill without the backing of the Navy Department. It saves Congress the trouble of having to legislate on each individual claim. They are coming up constantly.

"The CHAIRMAN. They go to the Claims Committee?

"Admiral McGOWAN. Usually to the Naval Committee. They go in the appropriation bill, as a rule. If they do not get through here, they find their way into the Senate.

"Mr. KELLEY. I would like to call your attention to these two cases of John R. Martin and Arthur Huntington in case they should be dropped out of the bill. Are those two meritorious cases?

"Admiral McGOWAN. Absolutely meritorious. Both of those men were simply robbed.

"Mr. KELLEY. By a subordinate officer?

"Admiral McGOWAN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. KELLEY. Without their fault.

"Admiral McGOWAN. Without any contributory fault whatever."

Nothing is apparent here of an intent to relieve officers from responsibility for illegal payments. The representatives of the Navy Department cite cases of "ships that have gone down with funds on board" and of men who "were simply robbed" by subordinate officers, meritorious cases for which there would be relief if the officer would "go to the Court of Claims and hire an attorney and spend several hundred dollars." Thus it appears that the class of cases intended for relief were those generally coming within the provisions of existing law allowing relief by the Court of Claims. Such relief was provided for in the act of May 9, 1866 (14 Stat. 44), now sections 145 and 147 of the Judicial Code (36 Stat. 1137), as follows:

"SEC. 145. The Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the following matters:

* * * * * * *

"Third. The claim of any paymaster, quartermaster, commissary of subsistence, or other disbursing officer of the United States, or of his administrators or executors, for relief from responsibility on account of loss by capture or otherwise, while in the line of his duty, of Government funds, vouchers, records, or papers in his charge, and for which such officer was and is held responsible.

* * * * * * *

"SEC. 147. Whenever the Court of Claims ascertains the facts of any loss by any paymaster, quartermaster, commissary of subsistence, or other disbursing officer, in the cases hereinbefore provided, to have been without fault or negligence on the part of such officer, it shall make a decree setting forth the amount thereof, and upon such decree the proper accounting officers of the Treasury shall allow to such officer the amount so decreed as a credit in the settlement of his accounts."

While the Court of Claims has granted relief under this authority in a large number of cases, no record is found of relief for an illegal payment. That such relief could not be granted seems clear from the statement by the court in Malone v. United States (5 Ct.Cls. 486), that a disbursing officer's error or mistake, or omission, or forbearance to discharge all lawful duties imposed by virtue of his office, will not excuse him. In Hall v. United States (9 Ct.Cls. 270) the court said:

"* * * The conclusion, then, is that those funds were not in his possession or charge; and if not, then he did not lose them by capture or otherwise; it was simply a case of more being drawn from the depositary, through forged checks and vouchers, than should have been, resulting in the claimant's being charged with the excess over the amount justly payable. This was an eventual loss to him in the settlement of his accounts, but not such a loss as the Government by the act in question authorizes this court to relieve him from.

"This conclusion is aided by the words of the act, coupling 'funds' with 'vouchers, records, and papers'; which latter would necessarily be in his possession. The kind of loss contemplated by the act was doubtless the same as to all those enumerated articles. Each might be lost by capture, by robbery or theft, by fire or flood, or by unavoidable accident; and it seems to us that it was against such kinds of loss of specific things, for which he could have no other remedy, that the act was intended to afford relief; not against losses suffered by the officer through forgeries committed by his employees or others, for which he would in law be entitled to recourse against both the forger and the depositary who paid the forged checks."

It must be taken that the court's interpretation of the existing law was in the minds of Congress when enacting similar legislation urged by the Navy Department, in view of war-time losses, to save their disbursing officers the trouble and expense incident to taking advantage of relief available in the Court of Claims.

Furthermore, it may well be argued that the authority given the Secretary of the Navy in the act of July 11, 1919, both as to relief for losses (41 Stat. 132), and relief for certain illegal payments (41 Stat. 153), was impliedly repealed by the provision of the act of June 10, 1921 (42 Stat. 24, 26), vesting and imposing "all powers and duties now conferred or imposed upon the Comptroller of the Treasury or the six auditors of the Treasury Department" upon the General Accounting Office to "be exercised without direction from any other officer", and providing that "the balances certified by the Comptroller General shall be final and conclusive upon the executive branch of the Government." Any former power in the Secretary of the Navy to direct relief of a disbursing officer seems highly inconsistent with the powers conferred on this office by the act of June 10, 1921, and to the extent that they are inconsistent were impliedly repealed by such enactment. The view that such former powers were considered by Congress as repealed is strengthened by the passage of the act of April 21, 1922 (42 Stat. 497), authorizing the Comptroller General to allow credit to and relieve disbursing officers of the War and Navy Departments, under conditions similar to those prescribed in the two provisions of the act of July 11, 1919, for loss of funds, records, etc., and for illegal payments. It is difficult to perceive why Congress should have included the Navy disbursing officers in the act of April 21, 1922, if the Secretary of the Navy still had the powers conferred by the act of July 11, 1919. It may be noted here that in the act of April 21, 1922, Congress again set forth carefully the conditions and the time limits in authorizing relief from responsibility for illegal payments, not leaving the matter to a haphazard construction of "loss or deficiency", as is contended by the Navy Department, was done in the act of July 11, 1919. And again in the act of May 26, 1926 (44 Stat. 654), Congress specifically set forth the terms for relief by the Comptroller General from responsibility for illegal payments made by disbursing officers of the Navy as well as the Army on account of commutation of quarters, heat, and light under the act of April 16, 1918 (40 Stat. 530), and for rental and subsistence allowance under the act of June 10, 1922 (42 Stat. 625), apparently considering that the Secretary of the Navy had no authority to direct relief under the act of July 11, 1919.

The position must be maintained that there is no more basis for the Attorney General's interpretation than there was warrant for the Secretary of the Navy, after having secured such an apparently harmless provision in an appropriation act, to attempt by administrative construction to expand it into a power broader than ever known to be vested in an administrative officer over the expenditures of his own department.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

BATTLEFIELD OF MONOCACY, MD.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7982, to establish a national military park at the battlefield of Monocacy, Md.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would call the attention of the Members of the House to the language of this bill and ask the author of the measure to explain the nature of it.

Mr. COFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I reported the bill out of the Military Affairs Committee. It is practically the same bill that passed the Seventieth Congress. It is simply to establish a national monument at the site of the battle of Monocacy, near Frederick, Md. It is to be the same character of park as the ones now established at Gettysburg and Antietam.

Mr. ELTSE of California. It is a fact, is it not, you are asking for an authorization of $50,000 to develop this property?

Mr. COFFIN. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. GOSS. There is a committee amendment that takes care of that, is there not?

Mr. COFFIN. No; the committee amendment covers the authorization of $50,000.

Mr. GOSS. But is not that to be stricken out?

Mr. COFFIN. No; we are striking out the language of the original bill which authorized the P.W.A. to expend the money and substituting a committee amendment authorizing an appropriation of $50,000.

Mr. GOSS. In other words, we are striking out the $50,000 under the P.W.A. and are inserting an authorization to take it out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. COFFIN. That is correct.

Mr. ELTSE of California. It will not come out of the P.W.A. funds.

Mr. COFFIN. No; it will not.

Mr. GOSS. I call attention to the last section. I understand the committee was going to offer to strike that out and then offer an amendment to make it come out of the regular fund for the Treasury. The objection was made by me in the committee, and the committee amended it in that regard.

Mr. MAY. The purpose of the committee in making it was to earmark it so that the Public Works Administration could not do with it as they have been doing with other funds.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Yes; I did not think the P.W.A. funds should be devoted to this purpose.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to commemorate the Battle of Monocacy, Md., and to preserve for historical purposes the breastworks, earthworks, walls, or other defenses or shelters used by the armies therein, the battlefield at Monocacy, in the State of Maryland, is hereby declared a national military park, to be known as the "Monocacy National Military Park", whenever the title to the lands deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Interior shall have been acquired by the United States and the usual jurisdiction over the lands and roads of the same shall have been granted to the United States by the State of Maryland.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cause condemnation proceedings to be instituted in the name of the United States under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, entitled "An act to authorize condemnation of lands for sites for public buildings, and for other purposes" (25 Stat.L. 357), to acquire title to the lands, interests therein, or rights pertaining thereto within the said Monocacy National Military Park, and the United States shall be entitled to immediate possession upon the filing of the petition in condemnation in the United States District Court for the District of Maryland: Provided, That when the owner of such lands, interests therein, or rights pertaining thereto shall fix a price for the same, which, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be reasonable, the Secretary may purchase the same without further delay: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to accept, on behalf of the United States, donations of lands, interests therein, or rights pertaining thereto required for the Monocacy National Military Park: And provided further, That title and evidence of title to lands and interests therein acquired for said park shall be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to enter into leases with the owners of such of the lands, works, defenses, and buildings thereon within the Monocacy National Military Park, as in his discretion it is unnecessary to forthwith acquire title to, and such leases shall be on such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and may contain options to purchase, subject to later acceptance, if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, it is as economical to purchase as condemn title to the property: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may enter into agreements upon such nominal terms as he may prescribe, permitting the present owners or their tenants to occupy or cultivate their present holdings, upon condition that they will preserve the present breastworks, earthworks, walls, defenses, shelters, buildings, and roads, and the present outlines of the battlefields, and that they will only cut trees or underbrush or disturb or remove the soil, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and that they will assist in protecting all tablets, monuments, or such other artificial works as may from time to time be erected by proper authority.

SEC. 4. The affairs of the Monocacy National Military Park shall, subject to the supervision and direction of the Office of National Parks, Buildings, and Reservations of the Interior Department, be in charge of a superintendent, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. It shall be the duty of the superintendent, under the direction of the Office of National Parks, Buildings, and Reservations of the Interior Department, to superintend the opening or repair of such roads as may be necessary to the purposes of the park, and to ascertain and mark with historical tablets or otherwise, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, all breastworks, earthworks, walls, or other defenses or shelters, lines of battle, location of troops, buildings, and other historical points of interest within the park or in its vicinity.

SEC. 6. The said Office of National Parks, Buildings, and Reservations, acting through the Secretary of the Interior, is authorized to receive gifts and contributions from States, Territories, societies, organizations, and individuals for the Monocacy National Military Park: Provided, That all contributions of money received shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and credited to a fund to be designated "Monocacy National Military Park Fund", which fund shall be applied to and expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 7. It shall be lawful for the authorities of any State having had troops at the Battle of Monocacy to enter upon the lands and approaches of the Monocacy National Military Park for the purpose of ascertaining and marking the lines of battle of troops engaged therein: Provided, That before any such lines are permanently designated the position of the lines and the proposed methods of marking them by monuments, tablets, or otherwise, including the design and inscription for the same, shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior and shall first receive written approval of the Secretary, which approval shall be based upon formal written reports to be made to him in each case by the Office of National Parks, Buildings, and Reservations: Provided, That no discrimination shall be made against any State as to the manner of designating lines, but any grant made to any State by the Secretary of the Interior may be used by any other State.

SEC. 8. If any person shall, except by permission of the Secretary of the Interior, destroy, mutilate, deface, injure, or remove any monument, column, statue, memorial structure, or work of art that shall be erected or placed upon the grounds of the park by lawful authority, or shall destroy or remove any fence, railing, enclosure, or other work for the protection or ornament of said park, or any portion thereof, or shall destroy, cut, hack, bark, break down, or otherwise injure any tree, bush, or shrubbery that may be growing upon said park, or shall cut down or fell or remove any timber, battle relic, tree or trees growing or being upon said park, or hunt within the limits of the park, or shall remove or destroy any breastworks, earthworks, walls, or other defenses or shelter or any part thereof constructed by the armies formerly engaged in the battles on the lands or approaches to the park, any person so offending and found guilty thereof, before any United States commissioner or court, of the jurisdiction in which the offense may be committed, shall for each and every such offense forfeit and pay a fine, in the discretion of the United States commissioner or court, according to the aggravation of the offense, of not less than $5 nor more than $500.

SEC. 9. The Secretary of the Interior shall have the power to make all needful rules and regulations for the care of the park, and for the establishment and marking of lines of battle and other historical features of the park.

SEC. 10. To enable the Secretary of the Interior to begin to carry out the provisions of this act, including the condemnation, purchase, or lease of the necessary land, surveys, maps, marking the boundaries of the park, opening, constructing, or repairing necessary roads, pay and expenses of the superintendent, salaries for labor and services, traveling expenses, supplies, and materials, the sum of $50,000 is hereby authorized to be allotted by the Federal Administrator of Public Works out of any moneys appropriated for use under his direction, said sum to remain available until expended, and disbursements under this act shall be annually reported by the Secretary of the Interior to Congress.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out section 10 and insert the following:

"SEC. 10. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act the sum of $50,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ENROLLMENT OF MEMBERS OF THE MENOMINEE INDIAN TRIBE

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 8541, to provide for enrollment of members of the Menominee Indian Tribe of the State of Wisconsin.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to prepare a certified roll of the members of the Menominee Indian Tribe in the State of Wisconsin, and from time to time to add names to such roll in accordance with the provisions of this act, which roll shall constitute the official roll of members of said tribe for all purposes. The names of all persons on the tribal rolls on the date of the enactment of this act shall automatically be placed on the roll authorized to be prepared under the provisions of this act and shall be used as a basis for the compilation and preparation of said roll by the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior shall, from time to time, place on said roll the names of such additional persons as are entitled to the privilege of enrollment under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. Any person whose name is not on the roll of the Menominee Indian Tribe on the date of the enactment of this act may at any time hereafter apply to the Secretary of the Interior to have his name placed thereon. Such application shall be in writing, shall contain such information as the Secretary of the Interior may require, and shall be subscribed and sworn to before an official authorized to administer oaths; except that in the case of minors under the age of 18 years and in the case of persons who are mentally incompetent such application may be executed by any member of the Menominee Tribe of Indians in behalf of such minor or mentally incompetent person.

SEC. 3. At the end of each fiscal year the Secretary of the Interior shall compile a list of all persons who have applied for enrollment as a member of the Menominee Indian Tribe during the past fiscal year, and he shall certify such list of applicants to the general council of the Menominee Indian Tribe requesting said general council to investigate the qualifications of such applicants and to report its findings to the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior shall take no action on any application for enrollment until after the expiration of 1 year from the date the certified list of applicants was forwarded to the general council of the Menominee Indian Tribe, unless the said general council of the Menominee Indian Tribe shall have previously filed its findings and recommendations with reference thereto with the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 4. No person whose name does not appear on the tribal roll of the Menominee Indian Tribe on the date of the enactment of this act shall hereafter be eligible to enrollment unless he possesses at least one fourth of Menominee Indian blood, and any person who possesses one fourth or more of Menominee Indian blood shall be entitled to have his name placed on the tribal roll by the Secretary of the Interior in the manner provided for in this act and shall be entitled to all the privileges of membership in said tribe: Provided, That no person who participated in the so-called "half-breed payment of 1849" shall, for the purposes of enrollment as a member of the tribe, be considered as possessing any Menominee Indian blood, and no person claiming to possess one fourth or more of Menominee Indian blood shall hereafter be placed on the tribal roll unless he can establish the fact that he possesses the required one fourth or more of Menominee Indian blood as a descendant of a person or persons possessing Menominee Indian blood other than those persons who participated in the so-called "half-breed payment of 1849."

SEC. 5. No. person whose name shall hereafter be placed on the roll of the Menominee Indian Tribe shall be entitled to any back annuities or per capita payments made to the members of the tribe out of tribal funds which were authorized to be paid to the members of said tribe before such person's name shall have been placed upon such roll.

SEC. 6. Any person whose application for enrollment as a member of the Menominee Indian Tribe is denied by the Secretary of the Interior shall have the right of appeal to the Federal District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin at any time within 2 years after the denial of such application by the said Secretary of the Interior, and the general council of the Menominee Indian Tribe shall have the right to appeal to said court from any order or decision of the Secretary of the Interior granting any such application or placing the name of any applicant on the tribal roll, at any time within 2 years after such order or decision of the Secretary of the Interior. Notice of such appeal and of the hearing thereof shall be given to the Secretary of the Interior, the applicant and the general council of the Menominee Indian Tribe, in such manner as the court, by order, shall direct: Provided, That failure on the part of the Secretary of the Interior to approve or deny any application, within 2 years after the same has been filed with him, shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed a denial of such application. Said district court shall consider all affidavits on file with the Secretary of the Interior with reference to the particular application and shall also consider such additional evidence as may be presented in the form of affidavits or otherwise by any of the parties in interest and shall hear such witnesses in open court as either party may present, and at the conclusion thereof the court shall either affirm or deny the right of said applicant to enrollment as a member of the Menominee Indian Tribe, which judgment shall be conclusive. In the event the court decides that the applicant is entitled to enrollment, the court shall order the Secretary of the Interior to place the applicant's name on the tribal roll as of the date upon which said application was denied by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 7. The provisions of this act shall be applicable to the enrollment of members of the Menominee Indian Tribe of the State of Wisconsin notwithstanding any conflicting tribal custom of said tribe, and any act or acts of Congress in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 3, line 14, after the word "blood" strike out "and any person who possesses one fourth or more of Menominee Indian blood" and insert the following: "And any person possessing one fourth or more of Menominee Indian blood who has been or may be born of parents residing, at the time of such birth, upon the Menominee Reservation, at least one of whom is an enrolled member of the Menominee Tribe, or has been or may be adopted by the Menominee Tribe."

On page 6, line 4, after the word repealed, insert "insofar as the same relates to the Menominee Indians."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADJUSTMENT OF CO-CALLED "OLMSTEAD LANDS" CLAIMS

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 8779, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to adjust claims to so-called "Olmstead lands" in the State of North Carolina.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust all claims to the so-called "Olmstead lands" in the State of North Carolina, which were placed under his administrative care by the act of July 6, 1912 (37 Stat. 189).

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, upon a finding by him, and approved by the Attorney General, that by reason of long-continued occupancy and use thereof a party is justly entitled to any of said Olmstead lands, to convey by quitclaim deed to such party the interest of the United States therein, or to pay to such party from any appropriation which hereafter may be made to carry out the purpose of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. 936), such sum as the Secretary of Agriculture shall find to be just compensation for the release of the claim of such party to said lands, other claims of title to said Olmstead lands found to be superior to that of the United States may be settled by the Secretary of Agriculture through allowing the removal of timber from the lands claimed in such an amount as he finds equitable and acceptable to the claimant in full satisfaction of his claim, or with the approval of the National Forest Reservation Commission the Secretary of Agriculture may make payment in satisfaction of the claim from funds appropriated for carrying out the provisions of the said act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. 936).

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS, FORT MOJAVE INDIAN RESERVATION

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1807, to provide for the exchange of Indian and privately owned lands, Fort Mojave Indian Reservation, Ariz.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept, in his discretion, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, conveyances to the Government of privately owned lands contiguous to the even-numbered sections added to the Fort Mojave Indian Reservation, Ariz., by Executive order of February 2, 1911, and to permit lieu selections of land approximately equal in value from the even-numbered sections by those surrendering their holdings, so that the lands retained and acquired through exchange for Indian use may be consolidated and held in a solid area so far as may be possible: Provided, That upon conveyance of any privately owned lands to the Government pursuant thereto, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue to the person or persons making the conveyance, patent of appropriate form and legal effect for the lieu lands. The areas consolidated in the Government pursuant to this act are hereby declared to be held for the benefit of the Indians of the Fort Mojave Reservation: Provided further, That the title or claim of any person or persons who refuse to convey to the Government shall not be affected by this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

RADIO STATION LANDS, GRAND ISLAND, NEBR.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 9394, to authorize the Federal Radio Commission to purchase and enclose additional land at the radio station near Grand Island, Nebr.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Federal Radio Commission is authorized to purchase an additional tract of land containing approximately 10 acres adjacent to that now owned by the United States at Grand Island, Nebr., and to enclose the same for use in connection with the constant-frequency monitoring station located at said place. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $1,200 to carry out the purposes of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

MILITARY AND NAVAL TOURS IN THE TROPICS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8567, to amend the laws relative to the length of tours of duty in the Tropics and certain foreign stations in the case of officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. There is no report here from the Navy Department, although there is one from the War Department. I happen to be on the Military Affairs Committee and my chairman has asked that this bill be put over by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, this bill was passed by the Senate on May 10, with an amendment. The amendment is as follows: After the word "hostilities", in line 10, page 2, insert the words, "and except in the discretion of the Secretary of War for temporary emergencies" so that the provision will read:

No officer or enlisted man in the Army shall, except upon his own request, be required to serve in a single tour of duty for more than 2 years in the Philippine Islands, on the Asiatic station, or in China, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, or the Canal Zone, except in case of insurrection or of actual or threatened hostilities, and except in the discretion of the Secretary of War for temporary emergency.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Do I understand that as it affects the Navy those provisions have been removed?

Mr. SPENCE. No; it merely qualifies the provision that was added after the repeal of the former acts.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I understand, but we have no report here from the Secretary of the Navy, and this has not been passed upon by the Naval Affairs Committee in the House.

Mr. SPENCE. It applies only to the Army.

Mr. ELTSE of California. It says the Navy.

Mr. SPENCE. The clause that is added is:

No officer or enlisted man of the Army shall, except upon his own request be required to serve in a single tour of duty for more than 2 years, etc.

Mr. GOSS. Is there not a similar Senate bill over here?

Mr. SPENCE. The Senate bill is here. That bill adds:

And except in the discretion of the Secretary of War for temporary emergency.

The Senate committee made this report:

As a result of the hearings and documentary evidence, the committee is convinced that the present law prescribing 3 years as a fixed tour of foreign service for personnel of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps is unreasonable, unwarranted, and inhumane in its effect on the personnel and their families, and is contrary to the best interest of the Government and the efficiency of the service.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Will the gentleman yield to me before he makes that request?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Yes.

Mr. HOEPPEL. I should like to explain the provisions of this bill. There are very few men of the Navy on shore duty ever beyond the territorial limits of the United States. The Chief Surgeon of the Navy, I know, is fully cognizant of this bill and is in accord with its provisions. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his request and permit the bill to be enacted.

Mr. GOSS. Does the Senate bill in any way tie the Navy up?

Mr. SPENCE. It is my opinion it does not.

Mr. GOSS. If the Navy is out of it, you could substitute the Senate bill.

Mr. SPENCE. It is my opinion it only applies definitely to the Army.

Mr. ELTSE of California. It is difficult for me to understand how that could be true when you are talking about the Army and the Navy.

Mr. SPENCE. I should like to read a letter from the Surgeon General of the Army:

1. Ever since Moses led Israel out of Egypt it has been a recognized fact that protracted residence in the tropics, and even the subtropics, on the part of the white man has been associated with an increase of sickness and poor health in contrast to living conditions in temperate zones. The baneful effects of living in the tropics is properly attributed to three factors: (a) The presence in hot climates of many diseases not found in temperate zones, or, as is the case in two common diseases—malaria and dysentery—the greater prevalence and severity of these diseases in Panama and the Philippines over and above their occurrence in the continental limits of the United States; (b) factors associated with tropical climates, per se, as high temperatures, increased humidity, and the evil effects of strong solar action; it is universally conceded that subjecting the white man to the above morbid influences for any great length of time saps his vitality, diminishes his energy and activity, and increases sickness and disease; (c) isolation and its attending distractions, as changes in modes of living, character of food, and especially monotony and ennui. The last two are in a great measure due to the absence of the usual diversions and amusements that one is accustomed to at home. For the enlisted man the absence of congenial, sympathetic, and righteous companions is a large factor in reducing morale and bringing about nervous disorders.

2. Our statistics, computed over a 10-year period, tend to prove the correctness of the above views. Admission rates per 1,000 for all cases: United States, 668; China, 888; Panama, 893; Philippines, 934. In view of the above, it is the considered professional opinion of the Surgeon General of the Army that a protracted continual residence in the tropics directly promotes sickness and ill health and lowers efficiency. It is fully appreciated that some of our foreign stations from the standpoint of health and living conditions are worse than others. Our highest sick rates have always occurred in the Philippines. Hawaii has always been the most sanitary of our island possessions.

3. In my opinion, the brief submitted justifies the conclusion that a 3-year compulsory tour of duty in our tropical possessions is both unwise and uneconomical.

ROGER BROOKE,
Colonel, Medical Corps, Acting, the Surgeon General.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice. Meantime, the gentleman could probably get in touch with the Chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee and iron out the objection that he has given to the gentleman from California. It would not affect his bill in any way.

Mr. SPENCE. I feel this bill will not have any compulsory effect on the Navy. It simply applies to the Army.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss]?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I object.

TO AUTHORIZE DOUGLAS CITY, ALASKA, PUBLIC WORKS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 9371, to authorize the incorporated town of Douglas City, Alaska, to undertake certain municipal public works, including construction, reconstruction, enlargement, extension, and improvements of its water-supply system, and construction, reconstruction, enlargement, extension, and improvements to sewers, and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $40,000.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporated town of Douglas City, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to undertake the municipal public works herein especified and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $40,000. Said town is hereby authorized and empowered to construct, reconstruct, enlarge, extend, and improve its water-supply system and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $25,000; to construct, reconstruct, enlarge, extend, and improve sewers and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $15,000.

SEC. 2. That before said bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the said town of Douglas City, at which election the question of whether such bonds shall be issued in the amounts above specified for either or both of the purposes hereinbefore set forth shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said town of Douglas City whose names appear on the last assessment roll of said town for municipal taxation. The form of the ballot shall be such that the electors may vote for or against the issuance of bonds for each of the purposes herein specified in the amounts herein authorized. Not less than 20 days' notice of such election shall be given by posting notices of the same in three conspicuous places within the corporate limits of the town of Douglas City, Alaska, one of which shall be at the front door of the United States post office. The registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, and the canvass of the returns of said election shall be, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law in general or special elections in said municipality, and said bonds shall be issued for either or both of the purposes herein authorized only upon condition that not less than a majority of the votes cast at such election in said town shall be in favor of the issuance of said bonds for such purpose.

SEC. 3. Such bonds shall be coupon in form, may bear such date or dates, may be in such denomination or denominations, may mature in such amounts and at such time or times, not exceeding 30 years from the date thereof, may be payable in such medium of payment and at such place or places, may be sold at either public or private sale, may be redeemable, with or without premium, or nonredeemable, and may carry such registration privileges as to either principal and interest, principal only, or both, as shall be prescribed by the common council of said town of Douglas City at the time such bonds are authorized to be issued. The bonds shall bear the signatures of the mayor and clerk of the town of Douglas City, and shall have impressed thereon the official seal of said town. In case any of the officers whose signatures or countersignatures appear on the bonds shall cease to be such officers before delivery of such bonds, such signatures or countersignatures shall nevertheless be valid and sufficient for all purposes the same as if they had remained in office until such delivery. Said bonds shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by the common council of the said town of Douglas City, not to exceed 6 percent per annum, payable semiannually, and the bonds shall be sold at not less than the principal amount thereof plus accrued interest.

SEC. 4. The bonds herein authorized to be issued shall be general obligations of said town of Douglas City, payable as to both interest and principal from ad valorem taxes which shall be levied upon all the taxable property within the corporate limits of said town of Douglas City in an amount sufficient to pay the interest on and principal of such bonds as and when the same become due and payable. Such of the bonds as may be issued to construct, reconstruct, enlarge, extend, or improve the water-supply system of said town of Douglas City may, if so provided by the common council of said town of Douglas City, be additionally secured by a direct pledge of all or any part of the revenues of said water-supply system and any subsequent additions or extensions thereto, remaining after provisions for the payment of the reasonable costs of operation and maintenance of said system and the cost of such repairs, improvements, and betterments thereto as shall be necessary to keep the same at all times in good repair and working order.

SEC. 5. No part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any purpose or purposes other than those specified in this act. Said bonds shall be sold only when and in such amounts as the common council of the town of Douglas City shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be disbursed for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned and under the orders and directions of said common council from time to time as the same may be required for said purposes.

SEC. 6. The town of Douglas City is hereby authorized to enter into contracts with the United States of America or any agency or instrumentality thereof, under the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act and acts amendatory thereof and acts supplemental thereto, and revisions thereof, and the regulations made in pursuance thereof, and under any further acts of the Congress of the United States to encourage public works, for the sale of bonds issued in accordance with provisions of this act or for the acceptance of a grant of money to aid said town in financing any public works herein authorized; or to enter into contracts with any person or corporation, public or private, for the sale of such bonds; and such contracts may contain such terms and conditions, subject to the provisions of this act, as may be agreed upon by and between the common council of said town of Douglas City and the United States of America or any agency or instrumentality thereof, or such terms and conditions, subject to the provisions of this act, as may be agreed upon by and between the common council of said town of Douglas City and any other purchaser of said bonds.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MOUNT HOOD NATIONAL FOREST, OREG.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1982, to add certain lands to the Mount Hood National Forest in the State of Oregon.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described lands, title to which was conveyed to the United States in part settlement of a fire trespass and which are located within the boundaries of the Mount Hood National Forest, in the State of Oregon, be, and the same are hereby, added to said national forest and are made subject to all laws and regulations relating to the use and administration of the national forests:

Township 4 south, range 5 east, Willamette meridian: Last half northeast quarter, northwest quarter northeast quarter, northeast quarter southeast quarter section 18; southeast quarter northeast quarter, west half northeast quarter, east half northwest quarter, east half southeast quarter, northwest quarter southeast quarter, southeast quarter southwest quarter section 20; section 22; southwest quarter section 24; sections 25 and 26; north half northeast quarter, northeast quarter northwest quarter section 29; section 36.

Township 4 south, range 6 east, Willamette meridian: Lots 3 and 4, east half, east half southwest quarter section 20; southwest quarter section 28; lots 3 and 4, east half northeast quarter, northwest quarter northeast quarter, northeast quarter northwest quarter, southeast quarter, east half southwest quarter section 30; lots 1 and 2, northeast quarter, east half northwest quarter section 31.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HAMPTON ROADS NAVAL OPERATING BASE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6847, providing for the acquisition of additional lands for the naval air station at Hampton Roads Naval Operating Base, Norfolk, Va.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, it does not seem to me quite proper that a bill authorizing an expenditure of $400,000 should be passed in this House by unanimous consent. For that reason I am constrained to object.

Mr. DARDEN. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I reserve the objection for the purpose of allowing the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. DARDEN. Before any final action can be taken it will have to go to the Committee on Appropriations and be returned to the House. This simply authorizes the presentation of the project to the committee. It is something that is vitally needed for the Navy. The present field at Norfolk will only accommodate 120 planes. It is a large naval base, and there are 235 planes in the fleet that will base on it in the next month or two. Certainly the House will not be prejudiced in any way by allowing it to go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In view of the fact that this will have to be ironed out later on before the Committee on Appropriations, I will withdraw my reservation of objection, but I still contend that $400,000 should not be authorized by this House under unanimous consent, as a matter of policy; however, inasmuch as I do not have the establishment of policy, I will withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase or condemnation, additional tracts of land adjacent to and lying southeastwardly from the Hampton Roads Naval Operating Base, Norfolk, Va., said land being generally known as "East Camp", together with such additional land adjoining same as is necessary for the development and expansion of naval air activities at said station, and comprising approximately 540 acres and being bounded by Masons Creek on the north and east, Bush Creek on the west, and the Virginian Railway on the south; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purchase of this entire tract the sum of $400,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STILLAGUAMISH RIVER, STATE OF WASHINGTON

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3353, to provide a preliminary examination of Stillaguamish River and its tributaries in the State of Washington, with a view to the control of its floods.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill, Calendar No. 253, and the four succeeding bills, Calendar Nos. 254 to 257, inclusive, have about the same status. They are all bills authorizing resurveys of projects where the original survey had been authorized by the Rivers and Harbors Committee under the Rivers and Harbors Act of January 21, 1927.

There has been a good deal of comment within the last few weeks with regard to the jurisdiction of these committees. I presume I made a lifelong enemy a matter of 3 or 4 weeks ago by trying to protect the jurisdiction of the Rivers and Harbors Committee.

I am not going to object any further to these bills if it is the policy of the majority leaders to transfer jurisdiction over these bills from the Rivers and Harbors Committee to the Flood Control Committee. I am not going to object to it; but I call attention to the fact that there is absolutely no need of passing these five bills, because all that is needed is for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to report a resolution for the resurvey desired. It will be done upon application to that committee, and it will save us all the time and bother of bringing these bills in here. For the life of me I cannot see why these bills were ever introduced.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. What expense is involved if these bills are passed?

Mr. WOLCOTT. There is very little expense involved.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. The expense is merely nominal.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is not so much the matter of expense as it is the matter of precedent.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. WILSON. May I not call attention to the fact that where surveys are made on account of destructive floods covering the watersheds of these rivers, where these surveys are made for the purpose of flood control there is no conflict with the Rivers and Harbors Committee over the question of jurisdiction. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] asked questions relative to the jurisdiction of these committees the other day when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] addressed the House. The gentleman from Texas said that when the legislation was for flood-control purposes it should come from the Flood Control Committee but that when it was for navigation purposes it should come from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the gentleman if, in the case of any of these bills, a request was made for a resolution by the Rivers and Harbors Committee?

Mr. WILSON. I doubt if a resolution by the Rivers and Harbors Committee could serve the purpose, because the War Department asked for additional surveys for the purpose of flood control covering the watersheds in question. The War Department is asking this because there have been floods on these rivers which have destroyed millions of dollars worth of property and which have endangered human lives. It calls for action by the Flood Control Committee.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I hope the gentleman appreciates my position. I have no objection to the bills; I am simply trying to protect the precedent which has been established.

Mr. WILSON. There is no conflict of jurisdiction. Survey after survey has been made on various rivers throughout the United States. The same authority handles it, no matter which committee reports the legislation—the Corps of Engineers of the Army—whether the purpose of the bill is for flood control or navigation. The expense comes from the same fund, but for the one purpose legislation is reported by the Committee on Flood Control and for the other purpose by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I should like to ask the Chairman of the Flood Control Committee whether or not these surveys include anything except flood control? For instance, is navigation taken into consideration?

Mr. WILSON. Of course, the jurisdiction given the Flood Control Committee includes all those things where flood control is the paramount objective.

Mr. DONDERO. Does the gentleman mean that that includes navigation and commerce as well?

Mr. WILSON. It might be said to include navigation where navigation is incidental. On the other hand, where the improvement of a river is primarily for the purpose of navigation, flood control being incidental, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors would have jurisdiction.

Mr. DONDERO. If the jurisdiction of the Committee on Flood Control extended to matters of navigation, what is the necessity for having the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. WILSON. I call the gentleman's attention to the case of the Choctawhatchee River, which runs a distance of 178 miles through Alabama. It has been improved for navigation for 27 miles. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] asked a survey for flood-control purposes of 178 miles of this river and tributaries because it endangered a number of small cities on the river and its tributaries. That survey for flood-control purposes was made and the project adopted as part of the Public Works relief program. So there is no conflict. As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] answered the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], if the purpose is for flood control, the Committee on Flood Control has jurisdiction; if the purpose is for navigation, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has jurisdiction. We have never asked that anything come to the Committee on Flood Control which should go to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and we do not intend to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In view of the gentleman's statement I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Stillaguamish River and its tributaries in the State of Washington, with a view to the control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS LAKE SABINE

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, the official objectors inform me that they are not prepared to go farther than no. 276 on the calendar. I have a bill no. 291 on the calendar, for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge over Lake Sabine similar to the first one on the calendar, which was objected to.

It is very important that this bill pass, because we have an application for a loan before the P.W.A., and everything is waiting for this bill to pass.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the bill H.R. 8513 is considered by the House this afternoon, that the bill H.R. 9526 may be called out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARMICHAEL. Mr. Speaker, I have a very important bill, H.R. 9141, pending on the calendar. This bill grants the consent of Congress to the State of Alabama, its agents or agencies, to erect a bridge across the Tennessee River. This is in the same condition as the bill of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. We have applied for our loan, and the granting of the loan depends upon the passage of this bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object for the time being. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] spoke to me about the other bill, and I was familiar with the matter.

SNOHOMISH RIVER AND ITS TRIBUTARIES

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3354, to provide a preliminary examination of Snohomish River and its tributaries in the State of Washington, with a view to the control of its floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of Snohomish River and its tributaries in the State of Washington, with a view to control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of the floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NOOKSACK RIVER AND ITS TRIBUTARIES

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3362, to provide a preliminary examination of the Nooksack River and its tributaries in the State of Washington, with a view to the control of its floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Nooksack River and its tributaries in the State of Washington, with a view to the control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SKAGIT RIVER AND ITS TRIBUTARIES

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3363, to provide a preliminary examination of Skagit River and its tributaries in the State of Washington, with a view to the control of its floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Skagit River and its tributaries in the State of Washington, with a view to the control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore and hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GREEN RIVER, WASH.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5175, to provide a preliminary examination of the Green River, Wash., with a view to the control of its floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Green River, Wash., with a view to control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of the floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONNECTICUT RIVER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8562, to provide for a preliminary examination of the Connecticut River, with a view to the control of its floods and prevention of erosion of its banks in the State of Massachusetts.

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Connecticut River, with a view to control of its floods and prevention of erosion of its banks in the State of Massachusetts, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, California, and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917 (U.S.C., title 33, sec. 701), the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONTROL OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES IN THE CANAL ZONE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8173, authorizing the President to make rules and regulations in respect to alcoholic beverages in the Canal Zone, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LEA of California. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I withhold my objection.

Mr. LEA of California. May I inquire as to what is the gentleman's objection to the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It goes to the delegation of power to the Executive to make rules and regulations which are punishable by fine and imprisonment. I think this is a power we should reserve to ourselves.

Mr. LEA of California. This has been the practice ever since the law was established in the Panama Canal Zone. There is no legislative body in the Canal Zone. Congress is the only body that has a right to legislate for the Zone.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentleman if it has been, then there is no justification for the bill.

Mr. LEA of California. After the prohibition law was passed it left the zone without powers to regulate the liquor business, and the transportation of liquor.

Mr. WOLCOTT. They were subject to the Volstead Act?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. They were subject, therefore, to an act passed by this Congress. There is no reason why these regulations should not be embodied in an act for the regulation of the liquor traffic in the Canal Zone, to be introduced and passed by this House.

Mr. LEA of California. They are without any law at the present time to regulate the liquor business, and this is no time to start in with a new law this late in this session of Congress.

Mr. WOLCOTT. My statement was there has been ample time for this Congress to pass upon a liquor control act for the Canal Zone. I am seriously, conscientiously, and fundamentally opposed to the delegation of power to any individual outside of the legislative establishment to make regulations the breach of which is punishable by fine or imprisonment.

Mr. LEA of California. All rules and regulations must be punishable under the criminal laws in order to be effective. There is nothing new in this. It is the common practice of Congress to pass such laws. It has been the practice of some 20 years in reference to Panama Canal Zone legislation. All administrations have concurred in this procedure for control of the liquor business. The Canal runs right through the Republic of Panama. If the gentleman's objection prevails it will deprive the United States of any power to control this movement of liquor. I hope the gentleman will not make his objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I cannot see where my objection will prevent this Congress from passing legislation immediately establishing a liquor law for the Canal Zone.

Mr. LEA of California. I think the gentleman will recognize that there is not time to institute and pass such legislation in this Congress.

Mr. EDMISTON. Is the Canal wet now?

Mr. LEA of California. They have no law down there, so I suppose you would say it is "wet."

Mr. WOLCOTT. This bill was introduced on February 21. If a bill for the regulation of liquor in the Canal Zone had been introduced on that date, there would have been ample time for its passage. The statement that, because we have not had time to pass the legislation, is no justification for the delegation of this power to the Executive. We should stay here and take the time to see that it is done properly and in accordance with the spirit of the Constitution.

Mr. LEA of California. In the last Congress we passed a law giving the President regulatory powers in reference to the Panama Canal Zone, including liquor regulation. This has been the undebated policy of Congress for 20 years.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Why should there be a necessity for this legislation if we passed a bill last year for the same purpose?

Mr. LEA of California. Since then the Prohibition Act has been repealed and a different situation exists.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Were they not operating under the Volstead Act before that?

Mr. LEA of California. They were; yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What was the need of the legislation last year?

Mr. LEA of California. It was simply legislation revising existing law.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am sorry and I may be considered a fundamentalist in this particular, but I think it is time we should save to ourselves the lawmaking powers given us under the Constitution and I shall have to insist on my objection.

Mr. LEA of California. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that Congress has passed numerous laws providing various penalties for violation of rules and regulations during this session and relating to matters for which there is no such necessity as in this case. I hope the gentleman will not object in this case where his objection may so greatly interfere with the proper administration of the Government's business in the Canal Zone.

Mr. WOLCOTT. All over my protest, and I have made up my mind I am not going to consent to any more delegations of power of this nature to the Executive or to anyone else outside of the legislative establishment.

I object, Mr. Speaker.

MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS USING THE PANAMA CANAL

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7667, to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object to that request, but not to the bill.

Mr. BLAND. Then I object to the bill, Mr. Speaker.

CODE OF LAWS FOR THE CANAL ZONE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8700, to establish a code of laws for the Canal Zone, and for other purposes.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, a half hour ago was the first time I had an opportunity to look at this bill, but I understand all the members of the committee were in favor of the bill.

Mr. LEA of California. Yes; there is a unanimous report from the committee, and so far as I know the measure has the unanimous approval of everybody interested in the Panama Canal Zone.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ST. LOUIS RIVER NEAR CLOQUET, MINN.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3144, to legalize a bridge across the St. Louis River at or near Cloquet, Minn.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the bridge now being constructed over St. Louis River at or near Cloquet, Minn., by the Highway Department of the State of Minnesota, if completed in accordance with plans accepted by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War as providing suitable facilities for navigation, and operated as a free bridge, shall be a lawful structure, and shall be subject to the conditions and limitations of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PAINT ROCK RIVER, JACKSON COUNTY, ALA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8234, to provide a preliminary examination of the Paint Rock River in Jackson County, Ala., with a view to the control of its floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Paint Rock River, in Jackson County, Ala., with a view to the control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of the floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GEN. THOMAS J. (STONEWALL) JACKSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8513, to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the birthplace and boyhood home of Gen. Thomas J. (Stonewall) Jackson.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection a moment?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will be pleased to do so.

Mr. EDMISTON. I want to explain to the gentleman that this bill differs to a certain extent from the other coinage bills which have gone through on this calendar without objection.

The objection by the Treasury Department to those bills has been that the coins are not sold. The gentleman probably does not understand that this is a State 4-H camp and these 4-H boys and girls of West Virginia want to sell these coins. They will not sell them for just a year, but they will keep right at it until they dispose of the number authorized. I wish the gentleman would reconsider his objection. The bill has much more merit, to my mind, than the ones for a short exposition of 2 or 3 months or something of that sort.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentleman that I see nothing in the report with reference to a 4-H camp. The bill, as I read it, authorizes the Treasury Department to coin 50,000 silver 50-cent pieces to commemorate the boyhood home of Gen. Thomas J. (Stonewall) Jackson.

Mr. EDMISTON. The home has been purchased by the State of Virginia and is a State 4-H camp.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am sorry, but I am afraid I shall have to object.

Mr. EDMISTON. On what grounds?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object, Mr. Speaker.

BRIDGE ACROSS LAKE SABINE

The SPEAKER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the Clerk will report the bill (H.R. 9526) authorizing the city of Port Arthur, Tex., or any commission designated by it, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge over Lake Sabine at or near Port Arthur, Tex., by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, is this going to be a toll bridge until the actual cost is paid, and then it is to be a free bridge?

Mr. DIES. That is it.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the report of the Secretary of War.

Mr. DIES. Let me say to the gentleman that that is an error. The committee rejected the bill drawn by the P.W.A. attorneys and reported out this, and the report of the Secretary of War refers to the first bill.

Mr. ELTSE of California. This bill will supersede no. 9?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the city of Port Arthur, Tex., or any commission designated by it, and its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Lake Sabine, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between a point at or near Port Arthur, Tex., and a point opposite in Cameron Parish, La., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the city of Port Arthur, Tex., or any commission designated by it, and its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, maintenance, and operation of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said city of Port Arthur, Tex., or any commission designated by it, and its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible, under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall hereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL OF SCIENTIFIC UNIONS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 238, H.R. 6781, and agree to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman agree to the amendment I suggested?

Mr. BLOOM. Certainly.

Mr. McFARLANE. What is the object of this bill?

Mr. BLOOM. This is to permit the United States to join in the scientific unions.

Mr. McFARLANE. What will it cost?

Mr. BLOOM. The regular annual fee is $4,500, but we must figure on the exchange.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, in paying the annual share of the United States as an adhering member of the International Council of Scientific Unions and associated unions, including the International Astronomical Union, International Union of Chemistry, International Union of Geodesy and Geophysics, International Union of Mathematics, International Scientific Radio Union, International Union of Physics, and International Geographical Union, and such other international scientific unions as the Secretary of State may designate, the sum of $9,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and annually thereafter such sum as may be necessary for the payment of such annual share.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Page 2, line 5, after the figures "1935", strike out the comma, insert a period, and strike out the balance of line 5 and lines 6 and 7.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE TENNESSEE RIVER BETWEEN SHEFFIELD AND FLORENCE, ALA.

Mr. CARMICHAEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H.R. 9141) granting consent to build a bridge across the Tennessee River.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H.R. 9141

A bill granting the consent of Congress to the State of Alabama, its agent or agencies, and to Colbert County and to Lauderdale County in the State of Alabama, and to the city of Sheffield, Colbert County, Ala., and to the city of Florence, Lauderdale County, Ala., or to any two of them, or to either of them, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge, and approaches thereto, across the Tennessee River at a point between the city of Sheffield, Ala., and the city of Florence, Ala., suitable to the interests of navigation

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State of Alabama, its agent or agencies, and to Colbert County and to Lauderdale County in the State of Alabama, and to the city of Sheffield, Colbert County, Ala., and to the city of Florence, Lauderdale County, Ala., or to any two of them, or to either of them, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge, and approaches thereto across the Tennessee River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between the city of Florence, Ala., and the city of Sheffield, Ala., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS SAVANNAH RIVER, SYLVANIA, GA.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up Calendar No. 287, H.R. 9313, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Burtons Ferry, near Sylvania, Ga.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved May 26, 1928, heretofore revived and reenacted by the act of Congress approved May 27, 1933, to be built by the South Carolina and Georgia State Highway Departments across the Savannah River at or near Burtons Ferry, near Sylvania, Ga., are hereby further extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "approved", insert "April 22, 1932, and extended by an act of Congress approved."

The committee amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

SELECTION OF CERTAIN LANDS FOR USE OF UNIVERSITY OF ARIZONA

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill, H.R. 7237, no. 279 on the Consent Calendar, to provide for the selection of certain lands in the State of Arizona for the use of the University of Arizona.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill.

There was no objection.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute Senate bill 2379, a similar bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the similar Senate bill, No. 2379, will be considered in lieu of the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, subject to lawful claims initiated by settlement or otherwise prior to August 2, 1932, and maintained in the manner required by law, the State of Arizona may select for the use of the University of Arizona by legal subdivisions all or any portions of sections 11, 14, 22, and 28 and the east half section 21, township 14 south, range 16 east, Gila and Salt River meridian, Arizona, and upon the submission of satisfactory proof that the land selected contains saguaro groves or growths of giant cacti or are necessary for the care, protection, and conservation of such groves or growths, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause patents to issue therefor: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all coal, oil, gas, or other mineral contained in such lands together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same at such times and under such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The bill H.R. 7237 was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS OPERATING UNDER CODE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H.R. 9002, to provide relief to Government contractors, whose costs of performance were increased as a result of compliance with the act approved June 16, 1933, and for other purposes, being no. 277 on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The reason these bills are being called up in this manner is because the objectors on the Democratic side have not received copies of the bills nor have they received the reports from the Clerk. After this bill, with the exception of a couple of bills with respect to Alaska, I shall object to any further consideration of the bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President, through such agency or agencies as he may establish or designate, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to hear and determine, on a fair and equitable basis, claims of persons who entered into a contract or contracts with the United States, including subcontractors and materialmen, for additional costs incurred by reason of compliance with a code or codes of fair competition approved by the President under section 3 of the act approved June 16, 1933, known as the "National Industrial Recovery Act", or by reason of compliance with an agreement with the President executed under section 4 (a) of said act. In the event that such contract was performed, wholly or in part, by a surety on the bond of the contractor, the claim may be presented by such surety.

SEC. 2. In order to be entitled to a consideration of his claim, the person presenting the same shall be required to establish (1) that the contract or contracts were entered into prior to August 10, 1933, or that the bid resulting in the contract was submitted prior to said date; (2) that the contract was performed wholly or in part subsequently to said date; (3) that in the performance of such contract or contracts, he fully complied with the terms of the approved code or codes of fair competition for his trade or industry, or subdivision thereof, or that, in the absence of such code, he entered into and fully complied with an agreement with the President under section 4 (a) of the said act of June 16, 1933; and (4) that the cost of performance of such contract or contracts has been directly increased over the cost prevailing at the time that the bid was submitted, by reason of such compliance, and the amount of such increase.

SEC. 3. In no event shall any award exceed the amount by which the cost of performance of such part of the contract as was performed subsequently to August 10, 1933, was directly increased by reason of compliance with a code or codes of fair competition, or with an agreement with the President, as aforesaid.

SEC. 4. In no event shall any award be made which would result in a profit to the claimant exceeding 7 percent on the cost of performance of the contract in respect of which the claim is made. The agency or agencies to be created or designated thereunder shall have the authority, from time to time, to determine the actual cost and profit thereon.

SEC. 5. No claim hereunder shall be considered or allowed unless presented within 6 months after the President shall have established or designated an agency or agencies to whom such claims may be submitted; or, at the option of the claimant, within 6 months after the performance of the contract is completed.

SEC. 6. Appropriations for the purpose of paying claims allowed hereunder and the expenses of determining the claims are hereby authorized.

SEC. 7. In all proceedings under this act, the agency or agencies to be created or designated hereunder shall have the power to compel the attendance of witnesses to testify under oath and to produce books, papers, letters, or other documents.

SEC. 8. The agency or agencies created or designated hereunder are hereby authorized to make, adopt, and promulgate rules and regulations for the determination of claims.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, is that in connection with the increase caused by N.R.A.?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. It is very well safeguarded.

The bill was ordered to be engrossd and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

PUBLIC WORKS, FAIRBANKS, ALASKA

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of H.R. 9402, to authorize the incorporated town of Fairbanks, Alaska, to undertake certain municipal public works, including construction, reconstruction, and extension of sidewalks; construction, reconstruction, and extension of sewers, and construction of a combined city hall and fire-department building, and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $50,000, Calendar No. 281.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporated town of Fairbanks, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to undertake the municipal public works herein specified and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $50,000. Said town is hereby authorized and empowered to construct, reconstruct, and extend sidewalks and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $10,000; to construct, reconstruct, and extend sewers and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $10,000; to construct a combined city hall and fire-department building and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $30,000. All of said public works are to be undertaken in the said town of Fairbanks, Alaska.

SEC. 2. Before said bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the said town of Fairbanks, at which election the question of whether such bonds shall be issued in the amounts above specified for any or all of the purposes hereinbefore set forth shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said town of Fairbanks whose names appear on the last assessment roll of said town for municipal taxation. The form of the ballot shall be such that the electors may vote for or against the issuance of bonds for each of the purposes herein specified in the amounts herein authorized. Not less than 20 days' notice of such election shall be given by publication thereof in a newspaper printed and published and of general circulation in said town before the day fixed for such election. The registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, the canvass of the returns of said election shall be, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law in general or special elections in said municipality, and said bonds shall be issued for any or all of the purposes herein authorized only upon condition that not less than a majority of the votes cast at such election in said town shall be in favor of the issuance of said bonds for such purpose.

SEC. 3. Such bonds shall be coupon in form, may bear such date or dates, may be in such denomination or denominations, may mature in such amounts and at such time or times, not exceeding 30 years from the date thereof, may be payable in such medium of payment and at such place or places, may be sold at either public or private sale, may be redeemable, with or without premium, or nonredeemable, may carry such registration privileges as to either principal and interest, principal only, or both, as shall be prescribed by the common council of said town of Fairbanks at the time such bonds are authorized to be issued. The bonds shall bear the signatures of the mayor and clerk of the town of Fairbanks, and shall have impressed thereon the official seal of said town. In case any of the officers whose signatures or countersignatures appear on the bonds shall cease to be such officers before delivery of such bonds, such signatures or countersignatures shall nevertheless be valid and sufficient for all purposes the same as if the officers of the town signing the same had remained in office until such delivery. Said bonds shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by the common council of the said town of Fairbanks, not to exceed 6 percent per annum, payable semiannually, and the bonds shall be sold at not less than the principal amount thereof plus accrued interest.

SEC. 4. The bonds herein authorized to be issued shall be general obligations of said town of Fairbanks, payable as to both interest and principal from ad valorem taxes which shall be levied upon all the taxable property within the corporate limits of said town of Fairbanks in an amount sufficient to pay the interest on and principal of such bonds as and when the same become due and payable.

SEC. 5. No part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any purpose or purposes other than those specified in this act. Said bonds shall be sold only when and in such amounts as the common council of the town of Fairbanks shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be disbursed for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned and under the orders and directions of said common council from time to time as the same may be required for said purposes.

SEC. 6. The town of Fairbanks is hereby authorized to enter into contracts with the United States of America or any agency or instrumentality thereof, under the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act and acts amendatory thereof and acts supplemental thereto, and revisions thereof, and the regulations made in pursuance thereof, and under any further acts of the Congress of the United States to encourage public works, for the sale of bonds issued in accordance with provisions of this act or for the acceptance of a grant of money to aid said town in financing any public works herein authorized; or to enter into contracts with any person or corporation, public or private, for the sale of such bonds; and such contracts may contain such terms and conditions subject to the provisions of this act, as may be agreed upon by and between the common council of said town of Fairbanks and the United States of America or any agency or instrumentality thereof, or such terms and conditions, subject to the provisions of this act, as may be agreed upon by and between the common council of said town of Fairbanks and any other purchaser of said bonds.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

MUNICIPAL LIGHT AND POWER PLANT, SEWARD, ALASKA

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H.R. 9468) to authorize the incorporated town of Seward, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $60,000 for the purpose of constructing and installing a municipal light and power plant in the town of Seward, Alaska.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GOSS. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman if this town has any other power plant now?

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, the town has another power plant, but the people of the town are very much dissatisfied because the service is unsatisfactory.

Mr. GOSS. Is it a privately owned plant?

Mr. DIMOND. It is a privately owned plant.

Mr. GOSS. What you want to do now is to legislate them out of business and bond the town for $60,000 for another plant; is that it?

Mr. DIMOND. The town wants to build another plant.

Mr. GOSS. Have you had a referendum on it?

Mr. DIMOND. There was a vote on it that carried, I am told, 8 to 1 in favor of it.

Mr. GOSS. You have had a vote already?

Mr. DIMOND. They have had a vote already, informally; not under any authority of any statute.

Mr. GOSS. Is it simply going to legislate this other plant out of business, or will they be able to get back some of the investment?

Mr. DIMOND. That is a question that I cannot answer with any degree of certainty, but I think the other plant will be practically out of business. It may be that a part of the other plant will be purchased, particularly the distribution system.

Mr. GOSS. Is there anything in this bill authorizing the purchase of this private plant or any of its lines?

Mr. DIMOND. No.

Mr. GOSS. There is nothing?

Mr. DIMOND. No, sir.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Will the gentleman from Alaska state about what the investment in the privately owned plant is?

Mr. DIMOND. That is a disputable question. It is probably around $100,000.

Mr. GOSS. Does the gentleman think it is fair to come in here and legislate a private industry out of business without giving in this bill any authority to purchase the old plant or to purchase any of the existing transportation lines or any of the equipment; just simply automatically wipe them out of existence?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. It is barely possible that the people of Seward have no intention of building a municipal lighting plant, but they are probably being held up in rates in such manner that they want to have the authority in order to force the rates down.

Mr. GOSS. May I ask who sets the rates?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The Power Trust.

Mr. GOSS. They may have a utilities commission. Have they?

Mr. DIMOND. The rates are fixed in the first instance by the private utility, but the municipal corporation, acting through the common council, is given authority under the Territorial law to revise the rates.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Unless we can have a clear explanation of the damage to the private plant, I will have to object.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GOSS. Yes, Mr. Speaker; I object.

TERMINAL RAILWAY POST OFFICES

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H.R. 9392) to reclassify terminal railway post offices.

I spoke to one of the members of the committee on the Democratic side and another member of the committee on the Republican side and explained the bill to them.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Reserving the right to object, with whom did the gentleman take it up on this side?

Mr. MEAD. With the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 9392) to reclassify terminal railway post offices.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Reserving the right to object, I have had many letters with reference to this measure. This is a bill to reclassify the railway terminal post offices, as I understand it.

Mr. MEAD. If the gentleman will reserve his objection, I should like to proceed for a few minutes to explain the bill, and then I shall be glad to answer any objections, if there be any.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I will reserve the right to object so my friend can proceed.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I thank you; this is a bill to reclassify the employees of the terminal-railway post offices. In 1911 or 1912, as the result of the establishment of the Parcel Post, it was necessary to secure space in the railway terminals to handle the large volume of mail developed as the result of the inauguration of that service. In the interest of economy, space in the railroad terminals was secured because of the expensive cost of space in railway postal cars. From that time to this there has been a controversy over the jurisdiction of the terminals and the classification of the railway-terminal clerks. There has been a desire on the part of Postmasters General to transfer this work from the railway terminals to the city post offices. This transfer would entail a reduction in salary of the railway-terminal clerks. Within the last month our committee, acting as a committee of arbitration, heard the Department and the terminal clerks, and they both have agreed to this legislation. It will save the Post Office Department approximately $450,000 a year after reclassification becomes effective. It is fair to the employees and satisfactory to them as well. Therefore this bill is in the interest of economy and it is recommended by the Post Office Department. It is reported unanimously by our committee. We believe it will settle this controversy for all time and the employees will enjoy greater contentment.

About a week ago we were given a rule by the Committee on Rules for the consideration of this bill, and that action was unanimous also. In view of the fact that it effects a saving, in view of the fact that it is satisfactory to the employees, and in view of the fact that the Post Office Department has approved of it, I should like to see the bill pass at this time.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield gladly to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Everyone here knows that the post-office clerks have not a better friend in Congress than the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD]; he has demonstrated that time and time again. The employees realize that. Therefore, with his assurance that the railway postal clerks are satisfied with this bill, and with his further assurance that he will do what he can to see that the Senate does not add any amendment which might be detrimental to the interest of the railway postal clerks, I shall withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. MEAD. I may say to the gentleman from Missouri that a copy of this bill has been given to the Senate committee; and that committee has been informed that the Department is in favor of the measure we are acting on now.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. And the gentleman can assure me that the employees are satisfied?

Mr. MEAD. I can assure the gentleman and other Members of the House that the employees have assured me through their representatives that they are satisfied with this bill, and that the Department likewise is satisfied. It represents as fair a settlement as we could secure.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I accept the gentleman's statement and, knowing his interest in the clerks, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the terminal-railway post office system shall be maintained for the purpose of handling and distributing all transit mail not handled or distributed in railway-post-office lines, and the clerks in said terminal-railway post offices shall be classified as railway postal clerks and progress successively to grade 4. Clerks in charge of terminals, tours, or crews consisting of less than 20 employees shall be of grade 5. Clerks in charge of terminals, tours, or crews consisting of 20 or more employees shall be of grade 6. When a terminal-railway post office is operated in three tours there shall be a relief clerk in charge: Provided, That the clerk in charge of terminals having 75 or more employees shall be of grade 7: Provided further, That no employee in the Postal Service shall be reduced in rank or salary as a result of the provisions of this act.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 4, strike out at the end of the line the words "all transit."

Page 1, line 6, at the beginning of the line insert the words "or post offices."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT BROWNVILLE, NEBR.

Mr. MOREHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 296, H.R. 9567, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Brownville, Nebr.

I may state that this project has the approval of the Department. The county authorities feel there is some chance of financing this project, thus providing another crossing of the Missouri River. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman from Nebraska understands that this places the men on the floor at a great disadvantage, not having the bills before us; we have to take the gentleman's word for it, not knowing what is in the bill. I join the gentleman from Washington in expressing the hope that no more of these bills will be urged, because we have no way of examining them.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I shall have to take the gentleman's word for what is in the bill. As I understand, this is merely an extension of authority.

Mr. MOREHEAD. I have a copy of the bill and also a report from the Department. I thought perhaps by pushing it now I might have some chance of getting it through the other body.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. As I understand, this bill provides for an extension of the time.

Mr. MOREHEAD. Yes; this is just an extension. The Department has approved it.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Is it an application by a municipality, a city, or a county?

Mr. MOREHEAD. It is an application by a county.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman say this authority is to be given to the county and not to individuals?

Mr. MOREHEAD. That is my understanding; that it is a request by the county.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Formerly the grant was to individuals, was it not?

Mr. MOREHEAD. I am not positive about that.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. We have discussed this bill for the last 8 years. I have always contended the bridge would never be built.

Mr. MOREHEAD. Yes. This bill grants an extension.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. As the gentleman from Nebraska states that this grant goes to the county, I shall not object. I will object to granting permission to a private individual or promoter to build a toll bridge.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] had a bill on the calendar today to which I objected, because it sought to grant authority to private individuals to construct a toll bridge. There are plenty of Members here who object to such bills.

The same gentleman had another bill farther down the calendar which authorized the construction of a bridge at the same place by officials of the county. To this I did not object. We do not want any more toll bridges built by private individuals, but when the State or any subdivision accepts the responsibility for the construction and financing of a toll bridge, permission is granted without debate.

Some Members say the Public Works Administration will supply funds for toll bridges to be constructed by individuals. I have assurance from the Public Works Administration officials they will not, but they do consider assisting States and counties that make applications. The individual cannot get recognition from the Public Works Administration on a project of this character.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved February 26, 1929, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved June 10, 1930, and March 4, 1933, to be built by the Brownville Bridge Co. across the Missouri River at or near Brownville, Nebr., are further extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from the date of approval thereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "are", insert "hereby"; page 2, line 2, strike out the words "the date of approval thereof" and insert in lieu thereof "March 4, 1934."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the Private Calendar, commencing with the starred bill.

PETE JELOVAC

The Clerk called the first bill on the Private Calendar, H.R. 4913, for the relief of Pete Jelovac.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JUDD W. HULBERT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4932, for the relief of Judd W. Hulbert.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as far as I can gather from the bill, the claimant was over 60 years of age at the time of his injury and is now 74.

I think under the circumstances a lump sum might be agreed to, not over $1,000, because he was over 60 years of age at the time he was injured.

Mr. WEST of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I yield.

Mr. WEST of Ohio. This bill passed the House at the last session, but failed of passage in the Senate.

This is a very worthy case.

The claimant received a lump-sum payment. It was established that his injury was service-connected and there was no question of his disability's coming from the injury. The man is totally disabled at the present time and has no means of earning a livelihood. We have the records and the reports establishing the facts in the case. There is no question of the fact that he is entitled to this compensation and then to the restoration of his status on the compensation roll that he was on before the lump-sum payment.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Before he took the lump-sum settlement of $2,500?

Mr. WEST of Ohio. Yes; and then to have his compensation continued at the old rate. The case has been thoroughly investigated. It seems to be a perfectly reasonable thing to place him back on the roll, take the lump sum out of the balance, and then allow him to continue at the regular rate.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. In addition to the $2,500 he will be on the roll at $66 per month?

Mr. WEST of Ohio. But his age is such that the probability of the payment of a large amount is not great The man is in a feeble and invalid condition, and is totally disabled, as established by the facts in the report.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEST of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLANCHARD. What justification can there be for upsetting a lump-sum settlement and going back to the compensation plan of payment?

Mr. WEST of Ohio. When the lump sum was agreed upon the gentleman did not understand the conditions. He was in such condition that he did not realize the significance of the settlement and accepted it without proper knowledge. He wants to go back to his old status, taking the lump sum away from the balance that would be due and letting the regular payments continue. In view of the fact that he has a very short expectancy of life because of his advanced age, I do not think the payments will amount to very much.

Mr. BLANCHARD. What is the man's age?

Mr. WEST of Ohio. His age is 74. His expectancy of life is not great.

Mr. BLANCHARD. How is it proposed to take out the lump-sum settlement?

Mr. WEST of Ohio. It is proposed to take the lump-sum settlement out of the balance due him according to the provisions of this act.

Mr. BLANCHARD. How is it proposed to take the lump-sum settlement out of $66 a month?

Mr. WEST of Ohio. He would be put on the rolls at the date he was taken off.

Mr. BLANCHARD. That is 1922?

Mr. WEST of Ohio. Yes; out of the balance due to date deduct $2,500, the lump-sum settlement, and give him the balance.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Twelve years is 144 months. This happened in 1922?

Mr. WEST of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. At the rate of $66 a month that amounts to $700 a year. Twelve times $700 would be over $8,000; but it is not proposed to pay him an additional lump sum settlement. He gets restoration to the compensation rolls?

Mr. WEST of Ohio. That is right.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman stated his age is 74?

Mr. WEST of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I would be willing to accept an amendment which would make this point clear; that is, he is restored to the rolls at the old rate and the lump sum is to take the place of the balance due.

Mr. WEST of Ohio. If the bill does not make that point clear, I would be willing to accept an amendment that would make it clear.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I would be willing to accept that amendment to the bill if that will clear up the point. If the gentleman will draft an amendment to make that clear I would be willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over temporarily.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

F. M. PETERS AND J. T. AKERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4957, for the relief of F. M. Peters and J. T. Akers.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, as I gather from this bill, it is proposed to give two claimants $3,250 and $4,400. This is money that they paid out by reason of embezzlement in a post office over which they had jurisdiction?

Mr. KEE. Yes. One of these claimants, J. T. Akers, was a former postmaster and he had a man working in the post office under the civil service. They could not discharge him. He had charge of the c.o.d. packages. The Government had a system of keeping those accounts. They simply used tags, and this clerk who had charge of the c.o.d. accounts submitted the tags to him and then money orders were issued and sent back to the shippers of the c.o.d. packages. This clerk was under bond, but the bond was for only $1,000 and had been the same as required for 10 years.

Mr. HOLLISTER. May I ask the gentleman a question? I know the case very well. There is a Supreme Court opinion which apparently is on all fours with this case.

Mr. KEE. Yes.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Can the gentleman tell me if that is true?

Mr. KEE. That is true.

Mr. HOLLISTER. The individual who had charge of the c.o.d. collections had to remit in turn by getting a money order from some other department, remitting the proceeds in that way to the sender of the c.o.d. packages. The Supreme Court decided the matter on the theory that money of that kind was not public money.

Mr. KEE. That is the decision, and the decision also held that the postmaster was not responsible. The decision was rendered by the Supreme Court after these postmasters had paid the Government.

Mr. HOLLISTER. And the facts in this case are identical?

Mr. KEE. Yes. The Government has this money which it is not entitled to under that decision.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,250 to F. M. Peters, former postmaster at Bluefield, W.Va., and the sum of $4,400.82 to J. T. Akers, present postmaster at Bluefield, W.Va., such sums representing those paid by the said F. M. Peters and J. T. Akers to the United States Government to replace funds embezzled by a former clerk in the post office at Bluefield, W.Va.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 1, after the words " West Virginia ", insert the following: " Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WALLACE E. ORDWAY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4966, for the relief of Wallace E. Ordway.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state what liability the Government has in a case like this where a child crawled through a fence and fell into an irrigation ditch?

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, this is a claim I inherited from my predecessor.

In the city of Klamath Falls there was an irrigation ditch constructed by the Government. They have a right-of-way about 150 feet wide. The city has grown around that right-of-way, extending about 3 miles. The Government has never fully protected the irrigation ditch. At the upper end of it they built a woven-wire fence. There is left out for the public something like 30 to 50 feet that the public use as a sidewalk and for automobiles.

Then it was fully 50 feet down to the ditch where the water was. They allowed the water to run across there and wash away the bank until it made a hole about 10 feet wide and 6 feet deep, which went right into the ditch. Pedestrians could go around it, but this 5-year-old child came down that pathway and went in and was drowned. Suit was brought against the city for maintaining this death trap and the city defended on the ground it was Government property. Sinnott, who sat in the seat I now occupy some years ago, was in the city at the time and he had them cover up this death trap with planks and they have since moved the fence back so it is no longer a menace.

It was a pure matter of negligence on the part of the Reclamation Service in leaving this hole in the pathway that led immediately down to the water where this child had no chance to protect itself.

The bill, as originally introduced, provided for $7,500 and this was reduced by the committee to $5,000. The Senate bill has reduced the amount to $4,000. The bill has twice passed the Senate and is now up to the House.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. In the event this was a natural river instead of an irrigation ditch.

Mr. PIERCE. It was not a natural river.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. But in the event it had been a natural river instead of an irrigation ditch and the child fell into it, whom would they sue?

Mr. PIERCE. It was not a natural river, it was a ditch constructed by the Government of the United States for the irrigation of a tract of land below Klamath Falls.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Where was the fence the gentleman speaks of in relation to the ditch—on the outside of the path?

Mr. PIERCE. The fence was not on the Government line. There was a pathway along the fence on the outside.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. On the outside of the fence and the child coming along fell through the fence.

Mr. PIERCE. No; they had allowed the water to come in and wash away the pathway and when the child came down the pathway it went into this death trap.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Was the child on the outside of the fence at the time it fell through?

Mr. PIERCE. The child was on the path side.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. And that was on the outside of the fence?

Mr. PIERCE. And the child went under the fence where they had allowed this hole to exist.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I do not know how the gentleman from Ohio regards this matter, but under the circumstances I shall accept the $4,000, which is the amount the Senate passed, by way of amendment. If the gentleman from Ohio wants to go further into the question of liability, of course, he can do so.

Mr. PIERCE. I think there is no question about the liability.

Mr. HOLLISTER. If the gentleman could substantiate what he has stated—and I have no doubt the gentleman means to state the facts—the situation would be quite different; but the report does not so state the facts. The report of the Acting Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation of the Department of the Interior states that the evidence produced showed that the child crawled through a hole under the fence.

Mr. PIERCE. He did not crawl under; he fell through the hole on the path.

Mr. HOLLISTER. What evidence have we to substantiate that statement?

Mr. PIERCE. The suit, of course, was thrown out on the ground it was Government property and not city property.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Therefore, that is immaterial.

Mr. PIERCE. Yes.

Mr. HOLLISTER. So the question is simply one of whether this is a negligence case.

Mr. PIERCE. I think so; without any question.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Can the gentleman produce any evidence that the committee had to contradict the statement I have referred to in the report?

Mr. PIERCE. The committee made a report based on the evidence.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The report shows that the child fell through the fence and into the ditch.

Mr. PIERCE. No; it fell into this hole that was left there.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. A hole in the fence.

Mr. PIERCE. The child did not fall through the fence. There was a hole under the fence that the Government officials had allowed to remain there.

Mr. HOLLISTER. May I suggest that the gentleman produce the evidence the committee had to demonstrate that?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. May I call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that on the first page of the report there is some language that may be so construed:

> The only protection to the public along this canal was a wire fence. A small culvert had been built across the street, emptying its water into the canal and washing away a part of the embankment, leaving a hole about 8 feet long and 4 feet wide.

Mr. HOLLISTER. But here is the point that is not made clear: It is not clear on which side of the fence that was. The claim of the Government, apparently, is that the child crawled under the fence and there was a hole on the other side and the child fell in. On that basis there could be no liability on the Government. If the hole was on the street side of the fence, then undoubtedly there could be recovery.

May I suggest to the gentleman that we pass this bill over without prejudice and the gentleman produce the evidence referred to?

Mr. PIERCE. I dislike to see the bill passed over, because it would be pretty nearly fatal at this session. It is old matter which I inherited from Nick Sinnott and then from Butler, the Member who preceded me.

Mr. HOLLISTER. The gentleman may be able to get the evidence within the next half hour.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be the first bill considered on the call of the Private Calendar tomorrow evening.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

LAURA ROUSH

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4992, authorizing the payment of compensation to Laura Roush for the death of her husband, William C. Roush.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JOE PETRAN

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H.R. 5004, for the relief of Joe Petran.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I object.

WILLIAM S. STEWART

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H.R. 5122, for the relief of William S. Stewart.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I object.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman withhold that?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will.

Mr. JONES. We had this bill up once before. The report does not disclose the full facts of the case. I did not get the facts in before until after the bill had been presented. The purpose of this measure is to place this man on the same plane that 19 others who were injured prior to April 1916 have been put on by special bills. I have here a letter from the Secretary of War and the Governor of the Canal Zone. They show that there have been 19 bills passed for those who were injured between 1908 and 1915. The Governor of the Canal Zone says there are not more than five or six cases that could be brought in under this policy. The act of 1916 gave compensation to these injured employees. This bill is simply to put this man who was injured in 1912 on the same parity for compensation that these other men have been put on. The previous objection was made on the ground that the cases back of 1916 should not be opened up. But, as a matter of fact, that field has already been opened up. Here is a letter from the Secretary of War, who gives the names of the men injured in the same line of work from 1906 to 1912—19 of them who have been granted relief by special bills.

Mr. BLANCHARD. How many were injured in this same accident?

Mr. JONES. I do not know whether there were any injured in the same accident or not. These men that I speak of were injured between 1908 and 1912 or 1915. These other 19 men were injured in the Canal Zone in the same character of work.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Does the gentleman believe it is the proper policy to go back of 1916, when the Compensation Act was passed?

Mr. JONES. I do not know that I would have favored going back originally, but they have gone back in 19 cases—men injured in 1908, 1909, 1911, and 1914. It would be manifestly unfair to go back in some cases and not go back in others.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am particularly interested in the policy of going back of the original act. This claimant has received $1,788, representing 1 year's salary.

Mr. JONES. They all did; they all got that prior to the 1916 act. I understand they all received the salary for 1 year.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am perfectly willing to give this bill further consideration. Will the gentleman be satisfied to let this go over until tomorrow evening?

Mr. JONES. I am glad to do so. In the meantime I would like to have the gentleman read the report from the Secretary of War which I have here.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over and be the second bill on the calendar tomorrow night.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EUSTACE PARKS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5142, for the relief of Eustace Parks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I object.

WIENER BANK VEREIN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5161, for the relief of Wiener Bank Verein.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. I object.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. BLOOM. May I give the gentleman any information that he would like to have about this bill?

Mr. TRUAX. This bill proposes to pay a claim in the amount of $30,208.67.

Mr. BLOOM. That is correct.

Mr. TRUAX. This claim originated on April 21, 1917.

Mr. BLOOM. That is correct.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman state why the claim has not been allowed before this?

Mr. BLOOM. I should be glad to do that. It is just because it got mixed up in the Private Calendar heretofore.

Mr. TRUAX. It got mixed up?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes; it got mixed up just the same as this is going to be mixed up if the gentleman objects to it. This has never been objected to. President Coolidge, President Hoover, and President Roosevelt each sent special messages to the Congress asking that the amount be paid.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman mean to tell me that President Coolidge and President Hoover and President Roosevelt have all argued on one policy?

Mr. BLOOM. With reference to this amount of money; yes.

Mr. TRUAX. On this bill?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes. Our Ambassador in Turkey at that time was requested to borrow $150,000 from this bank.

Mr. TRUAX. For what purpose?

Mr. BLOOM. To purchase food for the starving people.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Is not this a case of the payment of salaries?

Mr. BLOOM. Oh, no. This has nothing to do with salaries. The United States paid the principal but have not paid the interest.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Drafts for salaries.

Mr. TRUAX. The report states that the interest for the period of the delay on the transfer of $50,000, 4 years, 4 months, and 13 days, was $10,377.

Mr. BLOOM. That is at 4¾ percent.

Mr. TRUAX. To whom was the interest to be paid?

Mr. BLOOM. The Wiener Bank Verein loaned to our Ambassador in Turkey $150,000, and that money should have been deposited with their correspondent the next day in New York.

Mr. TRUAX. At what rate of interest?

Mr. BLOOM. No rate of interest then, but they withheld payment of the money for 4 years.

Mr. TRUAX. What was the nation?

Mr. BLOOM. Turkey.

Mr. TRUAX. Who made the loan?

Mr. BLOOM. The Wiener Bank Verein.

Mr. TRUAX. Does that country owe us some money?

Mr. BLOOM. This is a bank. This bank loaned the money to our Ambassador for the Government and they were to deposit immediately that money in New York City. The Government did not deposit it for 4 years, and it is for the interest on the money that the Government did not pay them from 1917 to 1920 or 1921 that this claim is made. This bank loaned the money to the United States without interest provided it would be paid immediately in New York City, which was not done. If the gentleman will read carefully this report and the bill and the last statement of President Roosevelt, I feel sure that he will not object. Three Presidents have recommended its payment.

Mr. TRUAX. But we know that it was the policy of two Presidents to refund income taxes to the extent of four and a half billion dollars. We are now trying to get away from that sort of procedure.

Mr. BLOOM. This bank trusted the Government of the United States. It did not expect any interest provided the money would be turned back to them within the course of a few days, but for 4 years the United States Government failed to pay this $150,000, and they are only asking for interest on that money for the time of the default in payment.

Mr. TRUAX. That is the reason I object to it, because it is interest. The United States Government loaned billions of dollars to Europe and those countries have never paid us that money.

Mr. BLOOM. Oh, the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. TRUAX. Not with an outfit like this.

Mr. BLOOM. But this is a private concern.

Mr. TRUAX. Yes; and the private bankers ruined the country, J. P. Morgan especially.

Mr. BLOOM. You can put it in the bill that Mr. Morgan will not get a cent of this.

Mr. TRUAX. If the gentleman could guarantee that, I might withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLOOM. Just one moment. I accept the gentleman's proposition. I will guarantee that J. P. Morgan will not get a cent of this. The gentleman said if I would do that he would withdraw his objection.

Mr. TRUAX. Oh, no; I did not say that. I said I might.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. I object.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE—GRACE G. COOLIDGE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5344, granting a franking privilege to Grace G. Coolidge.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all mail matter sent by post by Grace G. Coolidge, widow of the late Calvin Coolidge, under her written autograph signature, be conveyed free of postage during her natural life.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALBERT M. JOHNSON AND WALTER SCOTT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3726, to grant a patent to Albert M. Johnson and Walter Scott.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Will the gentleman reserve his objection, and let the bill go over until tomorrow evening?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes; I will reserve it.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I want to assure the gentleman that this is a most meritorious measure, and if the gentleman wants any information between now and tomorrow night, I shall be glad to show him the whole history of the case.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I think I have a bowing acquaintance with this case. This is Death Valley Scotty, whose place you pass as you go through Baker. I understand this was a promotion scheme by this gentleman in Chicago and Death Valley Scotty for the selling of borax.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. It is 50 miles north of any borax deposits, and if the gentleman will permit me, I will give him an outline of the case. Death Valley Scotty is an old prospector, as the gentleman knows, in Death Valley. He has lived at the upper end of the valley, at what is known as Grapevine Ranch, as long as I can remember; for 25 or 30 years, to my knowledge. A number of years ago he made the acquaintance of Johnson, of Chicago. Johnson at that time, I understand, was suffering an illness. He went down into the Death Valley country and recovered his health. He started by building a substantial house on this land.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. It is a Turkish castle, is it not?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. But there is nothing for sale.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Is there any harem there?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. There is nothing for sale. They endeavored to homestead it, but it was on unsurveyed land. After a survey was extended they found they were in another township. Then the Death Valley Monument, which has withdrawn a great many hundred square miles of land, was established, and these people agreed not to make any protest, with the understanding that they could come to Congress and perfect their title. If the gentleman will read the report, he will find that the Secretary of the Interior sets out clearly that even if there was a reservation of mineral they, the Government, would not be keeping faith with the agreement.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Death Valley Scotty is living there now, is he not?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. And nobody is bothering him?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Nobody is bothering him.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. And nobody will bother him as long as he lives there, and then after he dies there could be an amusement park, the Death Valley Park, for the benefit of the public?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. No; that is not the fact.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Oh, it could be.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. They have a color of title, and it is questionable whether they can go ahead and perfect their title, but it will involve a great deal of delay.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. It will require an act of Congress, will it not?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. No; I do not agree with the gentleman. They could go ahead with proceedings in the land office, but it will take time, and it is a rank injustice to require them to do so. They have spent their money. They are one of the largest taxpayers in the county.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. It is a $2,000,000 castle, is it not?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Will the gentleman withhold his objection or let it go over?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I will let it go over.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. And I will show the gentleman the records, and I am sure he will be as enthusiastic as the people of the county are to have this straightened out.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over until the call of the calendar tomorrow evening.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

JEANNETTE S. JEWELL

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1769, for the relief of Jeanette S. Jewell.

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the author of the bill a question or two. A few days ago the President of the United States vetoed a bill similar to this. Does the gentleman know about that?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I can tell the gentleman about that. That was a bill that passed through the Claims Committee. It did not come out of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It was a year's salary for a widow where the party had retired before his death. It is the policy of this committee not to report out any bill for a year's salary unless the party dies in the service.

Mr. TRUAX. Is that the policy of the President?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I would judge so from his veto.

Mr. TRUAX. Can the gentleman assure me that the President will approve of this bill if it is enacted?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I could not do that. I say he vetoed the other bill on the ground that the man was not in the service. He had retired prior to his death. That bill came out of the Claims Committee and it passed this House, but that was the ground upon which it was vetoed.

Mr. TRUAX. What year was this?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Jewell entered the foreign service in 1902, and he died while in the service in 1927.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I had never known of a bill providing payment of a year's salary for a retired officer to be paid. One of that kind came from the Senate, and I immediately called the State Department and found this other one was there and called their attention to it.

The President's attention was called to the matter. This officer was a retired officer. He was not, therefore, in the service and his widow was not entitled to the year's salary. The Committee on Foreign Affairs have taken steps to see that no bills are reported out for a year's salary to widows in the case of retired officers.

Mr. TRUAX. With the gentleman's assurance that he believes the President will not object to this bill, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Jeanette S. Jewell, widow of John F. Jewell, late American consul at Birmingham, England, the sum of $7,000, being 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died of illness incurred while in the Consular Service; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum to carry out the purpose of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PIERRE E. TEETS

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to calendar no. 340, a bill (H.R. 206) for the relief of Pierre E. Teets.

This bill was passed over without prejudice the other day, I think through some misapprehension. The gentleman from Ohio, with whom I have consulted, says he has no objection to my request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of Pierre E. Teets, first lieutenant, Field Artillery Reserve, United States Army, under section 6 of the act approved June 3, 1924 (Public, No. 1826, 68th Cong.), representing pay and allowances, and as reimbursement for approved amounts expended by him for medical and hospital treatment for injuries sustained while under active-duty training from July 3, 1927, to July 17, 1927, at Camp Pine, N.Y.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, after the enacting clause, strike out all of the remainder of page 1, and lines 1 and 2 on page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to certify for payment the claim of Pierre E. Teets, first lieutenant, Field Artillery Reserve, United States Army, for 6 months' pay and allowances, and reimbursement for such amounts as may be approved by the Secretary of War expended by him for medical and hospital treatment for injuries sustained while under active-duty training from July 3, 1927, to July 17, 1927, at Camp Pine, N.Y."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MUCIA ALGER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4030, for the relief of Mucia Alger.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar Senate bill will be considered in lieu of the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mucia Alger, widow of William E. Alger, late American consul at Fernie, British Columbia, the sum of $2,500, being 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died March 19, 1917, while in the Foreign Consular Service.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

HARRIET C. HOLADAY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6647, to compensate Harriet C. Holaday.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar Senate bill will be considered in lieu of the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Harriet C. Holaday, widow of Ross E. Holaday, late American consul at Manchester, England, the sum of $6,000, being 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while in the Foreign Service, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum to carry out the purpose of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

FRANK W. MAHIN

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 696, to authorize Frank W. Mahin, retired American Foreign Service officer, to accept from Her Majesty the Queen of the Netherlands, the brevet and insignia of the Royal Netherland Order of Orange Nassau.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Frank W. Mahin, retired American Foreign Service officer, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept from Her Majesty the Queen of the Netherlands the brevet and insignia of officer of the Royal Netherland Order of Orange Nassau, which has been tendered to said officer, through the Department of State, in appreciation of services rendered the people of Holland.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EMMA R. H. TAGGART

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2326, for the relief of Emma R. H. Taggart.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Emma R. H. Taggart, widow of Giles Russell Taggart, late American consul at Belize, British Honduras, the sum of $4,000, equal to 1 year's salary of her deceased husband.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LAKE OF THE WOODS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6161, to fulfill certain treaty obligations with respect to water levels of the Lake of the Woods.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a bill to appropriate a sum exceeding $73,000 to fulfill certain treaty obligations with Great Britain. In view of the fact that Great Britain is already a large debtor of this country I object to the bill.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The gentleman has the wrong conception of the matter.

Mr. TRUAX. Many thousands of dollars are involved in such bills on the calendar.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The gentleman misunderstands the situation. This money is not appropriated to go to Great Britain; it is to go to these farmers up in Wisconsin and Minnesota the gentleman from Ohio has been fighting for on this floor.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The gentleman has been fighting for the people of Ohio.

Mr. TRUAX. I have been speaking for those in Ohio.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. This is a claim the United States assumed when the treaty was made between Canada and the United States.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I now realize that when I made my first objection to the bill and the statement that this money was to be paid to Great Britain that I did not understand the bill. I beg the gentleman's pardon for having made a misstatement in the premises.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I object.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then I object to the bill.

SHELBY J. BEENE ET AL.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5736, for the relief of Shelby J. Beene, Mrs. Shelby J. Beene, Leroy T. Waller, and Mrs. Leroy T. Waller.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Shelby J. Beene the sum of $14,739.58, to Mrs. Shelby J. Beene the sum of $15,227.80, and to Leroy T. Waller and Mrs. Leroy T. Waller each the sum of $14,531.79, together with interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum thereon in each case from December 28, 1929, to the date of making payment under this act. Such sums represent overpayments of income taxes made (under protest) on such date by the said persons for the years 1921 and 1922. The said persons were 4 of 48 partners composing a partnership, each member of which was assessed with deficiency assessments for 1921 and 1922. Depletion on account of certain bonuses and advanced royalties received by the partnership was not allowed, and each partner's taxable income was correspondingly increased. Forty-four of the partners paid under protest and entered suits for refunds. The other four partners named in this act appealed from the deficiency assessment, but the Board of Tax Appeals and Circuit Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, maintained the validity of the assessments as to them, and the United States Supreme Court refused to grant them writs of certiorari. Subsequently the United States Supreme Court in the case of Palmer v. Bender (287 U.S. 551) (being the consolidated suits of the 44 remaining partners before the Supreme Court on writs of certiorari to the Circuit Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit) held that the depletion claimed by the partnership should have been allowed, and the 44 partners were allowed refunds accordingly. The 4 partners' claims for refunds involved the same facts and law as those of the 44 partners.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 24, after the word "partners", insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CAROLINE M. EAGAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 194, to refund to Caroline M. Eagan income tax erroneously and illegally collected.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund and pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Caroline M. Eagan, Eagan Apartment, Board Walk and Florida Avenue, Atlantic City, N.J., the sum of $10,950.19 for income tax erroneously and illegally collected from her for the calendar year 1925, together with interest thereon at the rate allowed by law on overpayments of internal-revenue taxes.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "taxes", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FLORENCE OVERLY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 872, for the relief of Florence Overly.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the author of the bill, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMNECK], why the father is liable for the support of the daughter?

Mr. LAMNECK. I do not know as I can give the gentleman the information at this time.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Unless they can show some legal liability of the father to support the daughter at the time he was killed, or at this time, I will have to object to the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice, to be brought up tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

GEORGE E. Q. JOHNSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4460, to provide for the payment of compensation to George E. Q. Johnson.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 1761 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, George E. Q. Johnson shall be paid the sum of $5,500 as compensation for services for the period from August 17, 1932, to March 4, 1933, both days inclusive, during which time he held the office of United States district judge for the northern district of Illinois. There is authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "act" insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JAMES P. SPELMAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4567, for the relief of James P. Spelman.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman withhold his objection? This is a meritorious bill, and should pass.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I withhold my objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. What is the trouble with this bill? Why does the gentleman object? I should like to answer his objections.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I cannot understand why the Government should pay a refund to a person who made a bid because the bid required putting a sample in. What harm was there in complying with the sample?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Does the gentleman know that practically all the bids of the office of the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Post Office Department require bidders to submit a sample? As I understand it, the Bureau of Indian Affairs accepted the sample, and after they accepted the sample and awarded the contract they came to the conclusion the sample did not meet the specifications. This was an honest bid. The Department itself recognized it was an honest bid and recommended, not the amount that was in the bill, but the difference between the lowest bidder and the next lowest bidder. They realized the bidder felt his bid should be accepted or rejected on the sample he submitted.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Under those circumstances a person could come in here and get the difference between the lowest bidder and the next lowest bidder, and there would be no reason for bidding at all.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. No. The Department accepted the bid despite the sample, and later held it did not meet the specifications.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. He furnished the material as per the sample?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. What is wrong?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I repeat, it was found that the sample did not meet the specifications. They had changed the specifications after the previous proposal, and the bidder had not noticed the change in the specifications. This man was forced to go out of business. He is in need, and I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JERRY O'SHEA

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4666, for the relief of Jerry O'Shea.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Jerry O'Shea, of Blackwater, N.Dak., the sum of $275 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for damages arising out of the destruction of his crops in August 1930 by a herd of horses belonging to Indians of the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "reservation", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MASSACHUSETTS BONDING & INSURANCE CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4838, for the relief of the Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be passed over without prejudice, to be brought up at the next call of the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CONNERY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present. There should be more Members here. We ought to have the Members who introduced these bills here at any rate.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. As long as there are no speeches made I do not see why we need an audience.

Mr. TRUAX. We need consideration, not oratory. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

AMERICAN-LA FRANCE AND FOAMITE CORPORATION OF NEW YORK

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5170, for the relief of the American-La France and Foamite Corporation of New York.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ALICE M. A. DAMM

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5357, for the relief of Alice M. A. Damm.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill carries an appropriation, does it not?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. It ought not to. The language is, "There is hereby authorized to be appropriated."

Mr. GOSS. The gentleman assures us of that fact?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. That is all it is; yes.

Mr. GOSS. What does the gentleman say about the amendment on page 2—

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent—

And so forth? Why not amend it and put in the words "authorized to be"?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GOSS. With the understanding we adopt an amendment, in line 11, after the word "amount", inserting the words "authorized to be", and then on page 2, line 6, after the word "amount", insert the words "authorized to be", I shall not object.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Alice M. A. Damm, widow of Henry C. A. Damm, late American consul at Nogales, Mexico, the sum of $5,000, being 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while in the Foreign Service; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum to carry out the purpose of this act:

With the following committee amendment:

At the end of the bill insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the committee amendment offered by Mr. Goss: In line 11, after the word "amount", insert "authorized to be"; and in line 6, page 2, after the word "amount", insert the words "authorized to be."

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Is the Claims Committee authorized to appropriate direct?

The SPEAKER. The Claims Committee has such power.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the Claims Committee usually appropriates direct, but in this instance the bill authorizes an appropriation, and my object was to have the committee amendment conform with the language of the bill.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALBERT GONZALES

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5357, for the relief of Albert Gonzales.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DOMINIC FRACAPANE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5417, to reimburse Dominic Fracapane for injuries sustained in an accident with a Government-owned motor truck.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the chairman of the committee, is the gentleman willing to let this bill go over and be called up during the consideration of the calendar tomorrow night?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes; if the gentleman wants that.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over and be called tomorrow night following the last bill so passed over.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

JUDD W. HULBERT

Mr. WEST of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Private Calendar No. 424, the bill (H.R. 4932) for the relief of Judd W. Hulbert, and if consent is granted I shall offer the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and it hereby is, authorized and directed to restore Judd W. Hulbert to the rolls of employees entitled to compensation under the provisions of the compensation acts and to give him the benefits of said acts.

SEC. 2. That said Commission pay to the said Judd W. Hulbert out of the employees' compensation fund, which is hereby made available for this purpose, a sum equal to the amount of $66.66 per month from the date of the last monthly payment made to him, less the sum of $2,500 paid to him in lump-sum settlement under the provisions of section 14 of the Compensation Act: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent of the lump sum appropriated in section 2 shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent of the lump sum appropriated in section 2 on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEST of Ohio: Page 1, lines 10 and 11, after the word "purpose" in line 10, strike out all through the word "last" in line 11; and on page 2, strike out all preceding the colon in line 3 and insert in lieu thereof "the sum of $66.66 per month from the date of enactment of this act until the date of his death"; and on page 2, after line 16, insert the following new section:

"SEC. 3. The payment of the sums authorized to be paid under this act shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of the injury of the said Judd W. Hulbert."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANNIE MORAN

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 191, H.R. 4272, for the relief of Annie Moran.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object.

Mr. BLOOM. This bill was passed over March 15. At that time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] made the unanimous request that the bill be passed over without prejudice, and to be called up on the first call of the next Private Calendar.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. What does the bill provide for?

Mr. BLOOM. It is for payment to the mother of a young boy who was killed by an automobile mail truck in New York.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I think I ought to make a short statement. I objected to the bill at the time it first came up and told the gentleman from New York that I could not see in the facts of the case where a private individual or a corporation would be liable. I told the gentleman that I had not had much experience in handling damage cases, but I would submit the facts to someone who had. I did so, and I got a letter back from a man whom I consider an excellent lawyer in such cases saying that on those facts he would settle this case as soon as he could. I told the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] he had won.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. What was the injury?

Mr. BLOOM. The boy was killed.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. How old was he?

Mr. BLOOM. Twenty-one or twenty-two.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. And he had a mother dependent upon him?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Was he married?

Mr. BLOOM. No.

There being no further objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Annie Moran, New York City, the sum of $12,500. Such sum shall be in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States for damages sustained by the said Annie Moran as the result of the death of her son, Edward Moran, who was struck and fatally injured by a United States mail truck in New York City, May 12, 1930.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$12,500" and insert "$5,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

T. BROOKS ALFORD

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H.R. 5543, for the relief of T. Brooks Alford.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE. I object.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. HOPE. I will.

Mr. McMILLAN. If the gentleman is going to object in spite of anything I may say, I do not wish to delay the action of the House, but I am satisfied that the gentleman from Kansas does not sufficiently understand the merits of the case.

Mr. HOPE. I will say that I have gone over the committee report, and I cannot find anything to convince me that there is any liability on the part of the Government. However, I am willing to listen to any statement the gentleman may make.

Mr. McMILLAN. In the Sixty-eighth or Sixty-ninth Congress there was an omnibus law passed, approved by the President, taking care of many cases just like this. I have known this man personally for the past 20 years, and I know exactly the condition he was up against and the experiences he has had. If the gentleman is going to object, that is the end of it. I may say that this man appeared before the committee in an extended hearing, and I would be glad to have the gentleman look over that hearing, and I hope he will do so.

Mr. HOPE. Let me ask the gentleman. He stated that some years ago an omnibus bill was passed covering a large number of cases similar to this.

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes. It was reported out by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I have a copy of the bill in my office, but I did not bring it over here, not knowing this matter would come up.

Mr. HOPE. Can the gentleman tell why his bill was not included in it?

Mr. McMILLAN. For the reason that the gentleman will find in the report. Let me read the gentleman a paragraph from a letter from the Acting Secretary of State, dated February 13, 1930:

The records of the Department do not reveal any circumstances which will bring Mr. Alford within the scope of existing law under which a recommendation for his relief could properly be made. Consequently I regret that the Department is obliged to conclude that any relief which may be afforded would result from action, the nature of which only Congress itself can determine.

On the strength of that statement, Mr. Alford appeared before the committee in an extended hearing. I have a copy of those hearings and I have a copy as well of the omnibus bill to which the gentleman referred. I hope the gentleman will not object to this bill.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is willing to have the bill passed over at the present time, I shall be glad to give consideration to what he says.

Mr. McMILLAN. Of course, if the gentleman is about to threaten me with an outright objection, I shall be glad to consent to anything. I should be glad to let the bill go over until tomorrow evening under the circumstances.

Mr. HOPE. I would not want to agree that the bill might be called up tomorrow night, because I am not sure that I shall have time to give the matter study between now and tomorrow night, but I shall be glad to consider what the gentleman has said.

Mr. McMILLAN. I hope the gentleman will oblige me by letting me get a copy of this hearing before him and a copy of this omnibus bill. I think the gentleman can give that attention tomorrow, and I shall be glad if he will permit me to have the bill brought up tomorrow evening.

Mr. HOPE. I would not want to go that far, but I shall be glad to have the bill passed over without prejudice, and if I have time to study it between now and tomorrow night I should be glad to consider the matter further.

Mr. McMILLAN. Very well.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice and that we may return to its further consideration at a later date.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CLAIMS FOR EXTRA LABOR AT CERTAIN NAVY YARDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5567, for the allowance of certain claims for extra labor above the legal day of 8 hours at certain navy yards certified by the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This bill calls for an appropriation of $332,347.74. I believe the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] is here, and I yield to him for a statement. In advance I may say that with probably 40 Members here out of 435, in my humble judgment it is an ill-advised time in which to legislate on sums of money involving hundreds of thousands of dollars as this bill does.

Mr. SNELL. But a great many have gone through in the same way.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield to the gentleman from New York, the minority leader.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I should be very glad to make a short statement. I have no personal interest in this bill. I do not know a single one of the claimants and not one of them lives in my district. A good-looking laboring man came into my office about 10 years ago and said to me that a small claimant against the United States Government had no opportunity to get his money. But if his claim was large enough he could get it. I did not like to see a good citizen go away with that feeling. I asked him to tell me why he felt that way. He went on and explained about these labor claims that were performed in the navy yard back in 1877 or 1878, a long time ago. I then said that if the situation were as he said I would personally introduce his bill and do what I could to get it through. The gentleman came to my office about a month or so after that and brought all of his proof, and it was just exactly as he said. Therefore I was forced to introduce the bill and do what I could for him, because there was not one mark against this claim from start to finish so far as I could see. These men performed the labor under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy. The Navy agreed to pay a certain amount. The matter ran along for several years because they had to have a special legislation from Congress to pay them. Every one of the 1,500 claims has been to the Court of Claims and has been passed upon, and the exact amount that is due to every man is set forth in the bill. It is as honest a claim as ever was presented to the Federal Government. The fact of whether it is more or less, large or small, has nothing to do with it, I should expect from the standpoint of the gentleman, if it is a just claim.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman's statement is logical, and I, of course, do not want for one moment to question his sincerity or integrity.

Mr. SNELL. There is the proof. It is not a question of logic or sincerity. It is just a question of fact ascertained by the Court of Claims.

Mr. TRUAX. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that on Thursday last or Friday we spent 2 or 3 hours in debating on the floor of this House about an appropriation for the World's Fair at Chicago, which resulted finally in reducing the appropriation from $405,000 to $200,000. There are other bills, for instance, the Minnesota fire bill, which involves millions of dollars and a number of other bills for a million or two million dollars, but when we pass a single one of these bills we make no provision to raise the revenue with which to pay those bills.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman forgets the fact that this has been to the Court of Claims, our own court, that it has passed upon them and that it says the Federal Government owes these men these amounts. Also the Secretary of the Navy and Comptroller General approve. In the name of justice or anything else, what right is there to deny payment? Why do we continually send claimants to the Court of Claims to have their claims adjudicated if we do not intend to pay them after they have proved their case? If this claim was against one of us and we were responsible, they could collect it.

It has passed the Senate four or five times. It has been reported by the House Committee on Claims a great number of times, but there has always been somebody who said on account of the amount of it that it ought not be paid. If a claim of $10 is just, it should be paid. If it is ten thousand or ten million and it is just, in my judgment it ought to be paid.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. In just a moment. What the gentleman from New York says is true, but the point I am making is that we are all trying to reduce the expenditures of this Government.

Mr. SNELL. But here is something that has been adjudicated by the courts, and it is a judgment against the United States.

Mr. TRUAX. But has the money been provided to pay it?

Mr. SNELL. The money has not been provided for one tenth part of all we are passing. What about all the claims you are passing here today? There has not been any money provided for a single claim that you have passed today, or those you sent to Court of Claims last week.

Mr. TRUAX. And that is the reason I am objecting.

Mr. SNELL. But the gentleman does not object to all of them.

Mr. TRUAX. That is true.

Mr. SNELL. I have told you all that I can about the case. It is an absolutely honest case. It has been adjudicated in the Court of Claims, and the Court of Claims says the Federal Government owes these men this amount of money.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Certainly.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. In what years was this money earned?

Mr. SNELL. In 1877, if I remember correctly.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. 1877?

Mr. SNELL. It has been passed in the Senate five times; it has been reported from the Claims Committee of the House five or six or seven times.

Mr. TRUAX. Has it been objected to previously?

Mr. SNELL. Sometimes it has and sometimes we never reached it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. One of the greatest injustices to the Government is the feeling that the Government takes the position that it can do no wrong, and on that basis just tramples rough-shod over the people. If it is a just claim it should be paid.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this is one of my pets. I have been objecting to this $332,347.74 bill, not as far back as 1877, when it originated, but during my service here, and I object.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman kindly tell the House the basis on which he makes his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. If you will look back at some of those old speeches of mine you will see why I have objected.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

W. R. M'LEOD

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5605, for the relief of W. R. McLeod.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, I will object unless the author of this bill submits to an amendment. The bill calls for $374, but the Post Office Department finds that only $100 is really involved, and that they should not have kept over $100 in the safe. I think if the author of the bill consents to an amendment to make the amount $200, which is twice the amount they should have kept in the safe at that time, I will not object.

The author of the bill does not seem to be on the floor at the moment, Mr. Speaker, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

HARRIET V. SCHINDLER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5639, for the relief of Harriet V. Schindler.

There being no objection, the Clerk read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 17 and 20 of the Employees' Compensation Act of September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in favor of Harriet V. Schindler, widow of Frederick S. Schindler, deceased, formerly employed at the post office, Utica, N.Y., and the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is authorized and directed to consider and determine her claim for compensation, notwithstanding the limitations in the first paragraph of section 10 of the aforesaid act. The Commission is further authorized and directed to pay such expenses for medical treatment furnished Frederick S. Schindler on account of his injury as it may determine to have been reasonable and necessary.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

G. T. FLEMING

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, at the call of the Private Calendar on April 3, Calendar No. 316, H.R. 4930, for the relief of G. T. Fleming, was objected to. Two bills arising out of the same transaction for the relief of two other individuals passed the House on that day, but this bill for $500, for some reason, was objected to. If we are going to pass two bills arising out of the same transaction, we certainly should pass this one. This man certainly is deserving more than the other two. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 316, H.R. 4930.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk called the bill, H.R. 4930, for the relief of G. T. Fleming.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, what bill is this that the gentleman has asked to return to out of regular order?

Mr. BLANCHARD. This is no. 316 on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. What does it involve?

Mr. BLANCHARD. The payment of $500 to one G. T. Fleming, of Pelzer, S.C.

Mr. BLANTON. I remember the bill. I have no objection to it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute a similar Senate bill, Senate 3364, for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar Senate bill will be considered in lieu of the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500 to G. T. Fleming, of Pelzer, S.C., which sum represents the loss sustained by the said G. T. Fleming on the bail bond of Reuben G. Johnson, who was afterward captured and returned to the United States officers by the said G. T. Fleming; record of said estreatment of bond is shown in order of Hon. H. H. Watkins, United States district judge, at Greenville, S.C., May 22, 1923.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the usual attorneys' fee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANCHARD: At the end of the Senate bill add the following attorneys' fee proviso: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

WILLIAM H. CHAMBLISS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5783, for the relief of William H. Chambliss.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BEN D. SHOWALTER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5900, for the relief of Ben D. Showalter.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

M. P. CREATH

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6016, for the relief of M. P. Creath.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I object.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my objection.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, this seems to be a case of considerable merit. According to court decisions the 5,818 pounds of butter forming the basis of the claim was not adulterated but was made in the regular way. It was made at a time when the help of this young gentleman had been drafted into the Army and when he himself had been drafted into the service and had 3 weeks' time to close his business and go into the Army. The complaint of the butter was that it had too high a moisture content. There is nothing in the case to show that anything illegal was used in the manufacture of the butter or that adulterants were used. The Supreme Court decision of Justice Butler held that butter with additional moisture was not a law violation, if adulterants were not used. No adulterating compounds were used.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Was it not the law that if there were more than a certain moisture content the butter was illegal?

Mr. CROWE. According to the Court decision, the moisture content did not have to be a fixed and certain amount, but could be more or less. That is the substance of a decision rendered by Mr. Justice Butler of the Supreme Court in October 1923.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Perhaps I am not clear. Is the gentleman referring to a case involving this particular butter?

Mr. CROWE. No; it is a case involving the Lynch & Tilden Produce Co. in which a decision was handed down by Mr. Justice Butler in the October 1923 term of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HOLLISTER. As I understand the pending bill it is a claim for a refund of taxes assessed against this butter. On what grounds does the gentleman think recovery should be had?

Mr. CROWE. Because the man's help was drafted at that time, and he himself was drafted into the service. He had about 3 weeks' time in which to dispose of his plant.

Mr. HOLLISTER. What has that to do with it?

Mr. CROWE. He filed his claim and handled it as best he could while he was in the service.

Mr. HOLLISTER. With all due respect to the claimant, just because he went into the military service are we going to refund him taxes he may have properly paid? It seems to me such a course would open up a great attack on the Government. A great many men went into the service leaving their businesses to take care of themselves as best they could. A great many Members of Congress did so.

Mr. CROWE. That is all true, but according to this decision the moisture content does not have to be a certain fixed minimum; it may be more or less. No adulterant was used in the manufacture of this butter. The only thing that happened was that the moisture content was higher than expected.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Does the gentleman mean that in every case where the amount of moisture in butter exceeds a limit we should make a refund? If so, then we had better bring in a general bill covering all similar situations. What I am trying to get at is why we should pick out the case of one man who paid certain taxes and make a refund thereof to him simply because he went into the service.

Mr. CROWE. For the reason there was not anything of an adulterating nature used in the butter.

Mr. HOLLISTER. There must be other people in the same condition. Let us bring in a general bill. I object to these individual bills covering a general picture of this kind unless there are some particular facts which puts this man in a different class than perhaps 500 other men.

Mr. CROWE. I think if he had been in the position to have had an attorney file his claim, the situation might have been different.

Mr. HOLLISTER. This is just like these questions involving the statute of limitations. Individuals come in and ask the Government to return them money because they did not have an attorney and did not know about the statute of limitations. It seems to me if we grant individual bills of this kind, then we will be met with an attempt on the part of 40, 50, or 500 other individuals asking for the same kind of relief.

Mr. CROWE. This man was in the service; he was a young man and inexperienced, and he filed his claim in his own way, the best he knew how, and because he did not have it on the regular form they objected to his claim. His claim was as just as though it had been on a regular form.

Mr. HOLLISTER. But might there not be many cases of this kind?

Mr. CROWE. I do not think there would be.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I am constrained to object unless the gentleman can tell me why this individual case differs from other cases of the same nature.

Mr. CROWE. Will the gentleman object to the bill going over without prejudice?

Mr. HOLLISTER. No. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

M. R. WELTY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6238, for the relief of M. R. Welty.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be is enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to M. R. Welty the sum of $750 for damages to his automobile by a mail truck belonging to the Government.

With the following amendment:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "Government" insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was greed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow evening when the Private Calendar is again taken up that the bills H.R. 6241, S. 503, and H.R. 8482 be given a preferred status for consideration at that time. These are the three jurisdictional bills that were not considered when seven others were brought up a few days ago. I understand it is agreeable that they be placed at the head of bills on the Private Calendar to be called tomorrow evening.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I presume these are the three jurisdictional bills that were the subject of the unanimous-consent request of the majority leader?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. Why should they be preferred?

Mr. BROWNING. All the jurisdictional bills except these three were preferred. There is no more reason why they should be than these. There are only three of them conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims. One of the arguments that the minority leader makes against them is age, and out of respect for their age we wish to bring them up.

Mr. SNELL. When they go to the Court of Claims and you get a judgment, it does not make very much difference if they are objected to here because the amounts are large. I know these claims are rather large, and you ought to let them go.

Mr. BROWNING. I think the minority leader should not object to their being called in conjunction with the consideration of the Private Calendar tomorrow.

Mr. GOSS. There are requests for four or five other bills to be called when we take up the Private Calendar. I presume these will be called after the others.

Mr. SNELL. I do not know why they should have a preferred status any more than other claims. We have had some claims passed over on account of personal objections. I think the time has come when we should start at the beginning of the Private Calendar and go through the Calendar in the regular way under the rules of the House.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I may say to the minority leader that it does not make very much difference, because if they come up out of order I am going to object to all of them, anyway.

Mr. GOSS. I understand these bills will be called after the other requests already granted have been complied with?

Mr. BROWNING. That is agreeable.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. EICHER, for 4 days on account of illness in his family.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Puerto Rico, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

Concurrent resolution to declare that the final status of Puerto Rico should be statehood and that the people of Puerto Rico desires that Puerto Rico become a State, forming a part of, and associated with, the federation of the United States of America; to petition the Congress of the United States of America for legislation authorizing the people of Puerto Rico to adopt its own State constitution for its approval by the Congress of the United States of America, after it has been ratified by a plebiscite to which it shall be submitted; to demand from the Congress of the United States of America an immediate liberalizing reform, of a political and economic nature, of the autonomic regimen of government at present enjoyed by Puerto Rico, through amendments to the organic act in force, and for other purposes

PART I

Whereas for more than 35 years the people of Puerto Rico, in a state of deep preoccupation, has suffered the disappointments inherent in a regime under which it has been working among difficulties caused by differences in systems, laws, customs, and language, assimilating, however, with clear vision of the future, the fundamental ideals which serve as a basis for the institutions of our government;

Whereas during that interregnum in which the people of Puerto Rico has lived trusting in the justice of the people of the United States of America, the latter, believing the former capable of living a life of equality, dignity, and honor in their relations with each other, granted to the Puerto Ricans, through Congress, American citizenship with all the prerogatives inherent therein;

Whereas the consensus of opinion of the people of Puerto Rico shows that it is advisable to know what is to be the final status of Puerto Rico in its relations with the United States of America, with the understanding that the preservation of its characteristics and other traditions are not in conflict with the principles and ideals of the American Nation, and that the vernacular may subsist in conjunction with the use of the English language, all within the new structure of government within which the people of Puerto Rico will live in dignity in association with the people of the United States of America, under the same flag;

Whereas the people of Puerto Rico has always aspired, and continues to aspire, to the fulfillment of the words which, in the lexicon of liberty of the United States of America, involved the consecration of the principle that "peoples have the right to determine their own destinies": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of Puerto Rico—

SECTION 1. That the people of Puerto Rico desires that Puerto Rico become a State and be admitted to the Union under the same conditions as the States which integrate the same.

SEC. 2. To request from the Congress of the United States of America, as it is hereby requested, legislation authorizing the people of Puerto Rico to frame its own State constitution in order to submit it for the approval of the Congress of the United States of America after it is ratified by the electoral body of Puerto Rico to which it shall be submitted through a plebiscite for such purpose, the result of which shall be certified by the executive secretary of Puerto Rico; and the Governor of Puerto Rico shall give notice thereof to the President of the United States for the proper purposes.

PART II

Whereas, until the proceedings heretofore referred to in this resolution have been carried out, the people of Puerto Rico needs urgently to improve the conditions of its internal life by protecting its agriculture and promoting the development of its industry by reorganizing its government institutions, by regulating the application to Puerto Rico of certain acts of Congress, and by securing exemption from the effect of certain fiscal acts already enacted in the United States by obtaining Federal aid in temporarily balancing its annual budgets without detriment to essential services, and by securing amendments to the organic act in force in order to attain said ends; and

Whereas, with the enactment of measures of this kind, while the proceedings are being carried out and the obstacles in the way of enjoying the final status of statehood are being overcome, the people of Puerto Rico shall have full political and fiscal autonomy to solve its own problems, and may temporarily enjoy its internal independence and its internal sovereignty: Now, therefore, be it

Further resolved by the Legislature of Puerto Rico:

SEC. 3. That the people of Puerto Rico demands an immediate liberalizing reform, of a political and economic nature, of the autonomic regimen of government which it now enjoys, petitioning the Congress of the United States of America, as it is hereby petitioned, to amend the organic act of Puerto Rico in force, in accord with the following:

1. Recognizing the right of the people of Puerto Rico to elect its own Governor.

2. Granting powers to the Governor of Puerto Rico, so that he may, with the advice and consent of the insular senate, appoint all the heads of department of the insular government of Puerto Rico.

3. Granting authority to the Legislature of Puerto Rico to fix the salaries of the heads of department, their powers and duties, and the number and titles thereof, without exceeding the number now existing.

4. Authorizing the Governor of Puerto Rico to fill the vacancies among senators and representatives without the need of holding partial elections, and on proposal of the directing body of the party to which the legislators whose post is vacant belonged.

5. Granting power to the Legislature of Puerto Rico to revoke the veto of the Executive by the vote of two thirds of the total number of members of each legislative house.

6. Providing that the jurisdiction of the United States District Court for Puerto Rico be limited to the same jurisdiction as that which belongs to courts of like nature in the States of the Union; and likewise providing that the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico or, by delegation, any of the associate justices, shall act as judge of said Federal court.

7. Stating that the decisions of the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico shall be reviewable only by the Supreme Court of the United States through the same procedure as that followed in regard to final judgments of the supreme courts of the States of the Union; adopting, moreover, the remedy of certiorari before said court in those cases in which there is a controversy in regard to the American Constitution or in regard to treaties or Federal laws.

8. Establishing that statutory acts hereafter enacted by the Congress of the United States shall govern in Puerto Rico when made expressly applicable to the island and adopted by the Legislature of Puerto Rico, except when they refer to the organization and operation of the Federal agencies, offices, and departments functioning in Puerto Rico.

9. The modification of all laws preventing competition in the transportation of freight and passengers between the United States and Puerto Rico in order to obtain a low-priced and adequate transportation service, and chiefly to avoid the rise in price of merchandise due to high freight rates.

10. That the Congress of the United States, as a rehabilitation measure, authorize Puerto Rico to establish fiscal tariffs, the object of which shall be:

(1) To provide revenues to meet the expenses of the current budget.

(2) To protect all the products of our agriculture and industry.

(3) To declare free from import duties all such articles of prime necessity for our people as are not produced in Puerto Rico.

And likewise to authorize the Legislature of Puerto Rico to exempt from customs duties and to levy taxes on construction materials and raw materials necessary for the promotion of the industrialization of the island; and likewise to prohibit the importation of all articles injurious to health due to the loss of their food value in the course of their preparation, or otherwise.

SEC. 4. To request the Congress of the United States of America, as it is hereby requested, to enact legislation for the consolidation of the public debt of Puerto Rico as far as it may be possible, to make extensive to Puerto Rico the Federal Reserve Act and any other measures enacted for the benefit of national banking for the benefit of banking in Puerto Rico; likewise making extensive to Puerto Rico all the Federal acts already enacted or to be hereafter enacted for the protection and promotion of the agriculture, industry, and commerce of Puerto Rico.

SEC. 5. To request the Congress of the United States of America, as it is hereby requested, to authorize the Legislature of Puerto Rico to adopt legislation tending to solve the problem of absenteeism and, as a consequence thereof, the concentration of property of nonresidents.

SEC. 6. To request the Congress of the United States of America, as it is hereby requested, for the purpose of improving the health of the people of the island, a work already begun with the amounts appropriated and which are being distributed by the Federal Relief Administration, to appropriate in its annual budgets—as it is accustomed to do as aid to the Federal States—such sum as it may deem fair in order to drain the miasmal mangrove swamps and to combat tuberculosis and uncinariasis in Puerto Rico.

MIGUEL A. GARCÍA MÉNDEZ,
Speaker House of Representatives of Puerto Rico.
RAFAEL MARTÍNEZ NADAL,
President of the Senate of Puerto Rico.

The undersigned secretaries of the House of Representatives and of the Senate of Puerto Rico do hereby certify that the preceding resolution was duly adopted this 15th day of April 1934.

ANTONIO ARROYO,
Secretary House of Representatives of Puerto Rico.
ENRIQUE GONZÁLEZ MENA,
Secretary Senate of Puerto Rico.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Ohio Typographical Conference, assembled at Cleveland, Ohio, favoring the passage of the so-called "Connery 30-hour-week bill", which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the American Society of Mammalogists in convention assembled at New York City, N.Y., protesting against the enactment of legislation removing protection from the sea lions of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate telegrams in the nature of petitions from C. H. Smith, Toledo, Ohio; and George E. Lowe, secretary and treasurer of Division No. 369, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, St. Paul, Minn., on behalf of that organization, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 3231) to provide a retirement system for railroad employees, to provide unemployment relief, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram from Helen P. Beattie, State corresponding secretary, Federation of Women's Clubs, Redlands, Calif., on behalf of 45,000 members of the California Federation of Women's Clubs through their representatives in convention assembled, endorsing Senate Resolution No. 206 (submitted by Mr. NYE and Mr. VANDENBERG, and agreed to on Apr. 12, 1934), appointing a special committee to make certain investigations concerning the manufacture and sale of arms and other war munitions, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2673) to correct the military record of Carl Lindow, alias Carl Lindo, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1011) thereon.

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2499) to define the exterior boundaries of the Navajo Indian Reservation in Arizona, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1012) thereon.

Mr. AUSTIN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 3569) to provide for the acquisition of land in the District of Columbia in excess of that required for public projects and improvements, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1013) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DILL:

A bill (S. 3615) authorizing the county of Wahkiakum, a legal political subdivision of the State of Washington, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Columbia River between Puget Island and the mainland, Cathlamet, State of Washington; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 3616) granting a pension to Minnie O. Draper (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. VANDENBERG:

A bill (S. 3617) authorizing the city of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the St. Marys River at or near Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. THOMAS of Utah:

A bill (S. 3618) to grant a portion of the Fort Douglas Military Reservation to the University of Utah, Salt Lake City, Utah; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (for Mr. REYNOLDS):

A bill (S. 3619) authorizing the attendance of the Marine Band at the reunion of the Thirtieth Division, American Expeditionary Forces, at Asheville, N.C.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 3620) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the executors of the estate of George F. Morgan against the United States; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BYRNES:

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 120) authorizing and directing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate and report regarding the piracy, infringement, imitation, or simulation of designs, trade marks, patterns, shapes, forms, and other distinctive marks or dress of goods; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

COINAGE OF 3-CENT NICKEL PIECE—AMENDMENTS

Mr. HAYDEN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3500) authorizing the coinage of a 3-cent nickel piece, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

POSITION OF SILVER IN THE WORLD—ADDRESS BY SENATOR PITTMAN

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a very able address delivered by the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. The address is entitled "The Position of Silver in the World" and was delivered before the American Mining Congress on December 15, 1933, in this city. The Senator from Nevada has taken a leading part in the movement to secure the restoration of silver to the high position which for centuries it occupied, and his views upon what is called the "silver question" are entitled to great weight. In view of the promise in the Democratic platform that silver would be rehabilitated, and in view of pending measures dealing with silver and of the interest this subject has aroused throughout the country, I think the address is most timely.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE POSITION OF SILVER IN THE WORLD—ADDRESS BY HON. KEY PITTMAN, CHAIRMAN SENATE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

Mr. Chairman, I understand that I was on the program for the 14th; but through some error in communications I was put down for the 15th instead. I realize that you are now moving to another subject, other than the raw production of minerals, and I shall be as brief as I may, so as not to interrupt your program.

In a short extemporaneous address I find it quite difficult to know how even to approach the silver problem. I think the great trouble about the silver problem is that it is generally written about by those who know nothing about the production and consumption of metals. They know all about the theory of economics. They are perfectly familiar with what we understand as monetary systems.

Another great error that is made is the belief that no one is interested in this subject except the comparatively few producers of silver throughout the world. If that assumption were true, it would be a great waste of time to bring a matter of this kind to the consideration of the American Mining Congress or the Congress of the United States, or a great gathering such as we had in London a few months ago, at which 66 governments were represented. As a matter of fact, those 66 governments did not consider the question as a commodity question only. The United States, Canada, Mexico, Peru, Ecuador, and Australia produce nearly all the silver that is produced in the world. If the matter were of interest solely from the commodity standpoint, we would expect only those governments to be interested and not the rest of the 66 governments that actually were interested.

That in itself is an answer to the unfortunately ignorant discussion of this matter purely from the commodity standpoint.

At London two things were presented, and they were presented on behalf of the United States. The first was a resolution dealing with the whole monetary problem. I had the honor, on behalf of our delegation as a member of the Monetary Commission, to present our monetary resolution. Probably because I presented it, most of the press of the world took note only of the resolution dealing with silver. As a matter of fact, the resolution dealt with both gold and silver and was prepared before we left Washington. It was discussed in the informal conferences held here in Washington between our Government and the representatives of various governments who came here.

The gold part of the resolution was substantially this, as I remember:

"It is the sense of the governments represented at this Conference that governments return to the gold-standard measure of international exchange as soon as practicable."

The question arose as to what the word "practicable" meant. The Japanese delegate said:

"It is not practicable for us to return to the gold standard at the present time, because we have not the gold reserves, and we cannot obtain them. We desire, however, to return to the gold-standard measure of international exchange as soon as possible."

Lord Hailsham arose, representing the delegation from England—he was a member of the Cabinet and, as a member of the Cabinet, the Secretary of War—and said:

"If I understand the delegate from the United States, he means by the word 'practicable' that each government is to determine for itself the time of the return to the gold-standard exchange and the ratio."

As that was my understanding of the matter, I accepted that amendment. It was unanimously adopted by all the 66 governments. As a matter of fact, under the rule of the League of Nations, which governed the Conference, everything must be adopted unanimously.

When that part of the resolution was adopted, it was separated from the portion of it dealing with the silver question. The first issue that arose was whether we should treat silver as a commodity, just as they were trying to treat wheat and cotton, or whether it should be treated from the monetary standpoint, as money. The decision of that would cause it to be referred either to the Economic Commission or to the Monetary Commission. After a very full discussion of the subject they decided to discuss it from the monetary standpoint, and it was referred to the Monetary Commission, and there the questions were considered and determined.

The silver resolution that was adopted by the 66 governments was substantially this: They all agreed, on behalf of their governments, as far as they could bind their governments, that they would no longer permit the debasement of silver coin; that they would replace low-valued paper currency with silver coin; and that they would not enact legislation that could depreciate the value of silver on the market of the world. I think that is a substantial advance for 66 governments to agree to unanimously.

As we know, the depreciation in the value of silver money is due entirely to prejudicial action of governments in the past; and when they agree to stop that, you know that sooner or later the natural law of supply and demand will govern. The supply of silver will then be scarce, and the world silver price will rise. I will get to that question a little later. I may say, just in passing, that the Government of France is now replacing its low-valued paper currency, its 5- and 10-franc notes, little disagreeable shin plasters, with silver coins. This process will greatly increase the demand for silver.

In addition to that, the resolution which we took over to London provided that every effort should be made to bring about an understanding or agreement between countries producing large quantities of silver and countries holding or using large quantities of silver. In fact, that was a condition of the adoption of the main resolution. The reason of that was plain. It was, first, the debasement of the silver coins of Great Britain, France, Belgium, and other countries, and the consequent dumping of the surplus silver derived from such debasement upon the market of the world, that started the downward price of silver. But they said, "Why should we desist from this practice if India, which holds probably a billion ounces of silver in the form of silver rupees, is going on arbitrarily without restriction and possibly without reason to continue to melt up those silver coins and dump them on the market of the world in any quantities, at any price? Therefore we want you to obtain that agreement."

Two days before the conference adjourned we obtained the agreement, signed up. It provided that the Government of China would not sell any silver derived from the debasement or melting up of silver coins; that the Government of Spain would not sell to exceed 5,000,000 ounces a year for a period of 4 years, commencing January 1, 1934, and that at the end of 4 years they would go under the general resolution of never again debasing or melting up silver coin; that the government of India agreed to limit its sales of silver to 35,000,000 ounces of silver annually, commencing on the 1st of January 1934, for a period of 4 years, and that after that they would go under the general resolution, and would sell no more silver derived from the debasement or the melting-up of silver coins.

There was a limitation; there was a certainty that people could count on. On the other hand, the producing governments of the United States, Canada, Mexico, Peru, and Australia were required by these holding governments to offset this limited oversupply by taking from their own mines 35,000,000 ounces of silver a year for 4 years during the same period of time. That neutralized the limited oversupply. That agreement would result in the total supply coming from mines.

The President has full authority to carry out that understanding. India already has carried it out. The Indian Council has passed an order, which is a law in India, prohibiting the sale of over 35,000,000 ounces of silver a year, commencing on the 1st of January 1934, for a period of 4 years. They have acted. Now it is up to us to act. We have the authority to act. The President has the authority to act. In the so-called "Thomas amendment" it was provided that the President of the United States might fix the ratio between gold and silver and that he might coin silver at that ratio. It was also provided in the same act that if an agreement should be reached at the world conference, in which Congress authorized the President to participate, he should carry out that agreement. He now has this power. If he does not see fit to exert it, Congress undoubtedly will exert it, because it is a moral obligation imposed upon us since our Government, with the authority of Congress, initiated this understanding. I think you will find that it will be carried out either by the President or by Congress. It may be carried out in many ways, either by opening the mint to the coinage of American silver—which would take off the world market 24,000,000 ounces a year, deducting a certain portion of the bullion so deposited as seigniorage and as cost to the Government—or through direct purchase by act of Congress.

What will be the effect upon the world price of silver? In 1932 the total mine production of silver in the world was only 167,000,000 ounces. I have not the figures for 1933, but they probably will be about the same. Conditions indicate that production will not be much larger in 1934. Such production is about 30 percent below normal. When the countries of the world become aware of the situation, they will commence to buy. The United States must bid for American silver above the world price, because it is obligated to take at least 24,000,000 ounces annually from our mine production. Silver may rise to the parity price of $1.29 an ounce.

That is the situation with regard to silver as it stands today.

Now, let me briefly go to the more important phase of the subject for a few minutes.

It is constantly contended by economists of reputation that the price of silver does not in any way, or not materially, affect our export trade; that China, for instance, does not buy from us with silver, but she buys from us with her exports. In theory that is true. If we take as example two well-developed countries, such as Germany and France, the balance of trade probably would limit exports and imports. It was not true in the United States in the early days, when we had this vast territory back of us, with raw resources. We had no money to start with here. It all came in from somewhere else. We finally melted up foreign gold and silver coins and made them into our own money.

A prospector would go out in the hills with a slab of bacon and some beans and a burro and find a mine—a gold mine, a silver mine, a copper mine, a coal mine, or what not. He would sell that mine to a British syndicate for something—$50,000, $100,000, or $1,000,000—and that man had this money with which to buy anywhere in the world. He did not get it from exports. That money did not come in from exports.

We must add to the balance of trade other factors. We must add the invisible income which everyone recognizes, such as money sent back to China from here by the Chinese, back to Italy from here by the Italians, and the income from the tourist trade. To be added to that is still another factor which always exists in the development of a pioneer country, and that is the creation of new wealth by discovery and by making it available for the world. That is the position of China today—a country as large as the United States and nearly all of Mexico combined, with nothing but the fringe of it developed in great cities. There is that vast country waiting for development, 400,000,000 energetic people desiring to have their standards raised, and in the past few years they have made remarkable strides toward the desired result.

When I was in China in 1925 there had been little change. When I was there in 1931 I saw the girls on the street wearing American clothes, American hats, and American shoes, and with their hair bobbed. Our trade commenced to do well with China, and so did Great Britain's trade.

But what happened? There may be some other explanation for it; but since the fall of silver started in 1928, we have lost 75 percent of our manufactured exports to China. "Oh", it will be said, "but we lost it elsewhere." We did; but elsewhere there was poverty and distress such as we have experienced in 3 years, while during that time in China there was a boom going on every minute, and it is going on today. Why? Because China is becoming industrialized. When the exchange value of the Chinese money was so low that it took from four to five of their dollars to exchange for one of ours with which to buy our goods, they ceased to buy anything except what they had to have, and what they are buying is raw material.

I do not want to take your time with figures, but let us see what happened to Great Britain in that period of time.

In 1928 Great Britain exported to China 153,399,100 square yards of cotton piece-goods. In 1929 the export of those goods dropped to 149,000,000 square yards; in 1930 it dropped to 41,000,000 square yards; in 1931 to just a little less than 41,000,000 square yards.

What happened to us? Take our exports of raw cotton to England. In 1928 they were about 1,997,000 bales. In 1931 they were 899,000 bales—less than half. Why? Because Great Britain is our great market for raw cotton, and China was one of her great markets, and India, too, for her cotton piece-goods. She not only lost her cotton piece-goods market to China but she lost it to India and Mexico and South America and everywhere else in tropical countries where cotton piece-goods are used. Why? The economists will say that we lost our market everywhere because of the depression, but that is not a fact. China was prosperous.

Take the report of the great commission which was sent over from London to China in 1930 and 1931 under Sir Ernest Thompson, called the British Economic and Monetary Commission to the Far East. What did they report? They reported these facts, and they gave us the cause. They reported that the low price of silver had lowered the exchange value of Chinese money with the pound sterling to such an extent that the Chinese could not afford to buy British piece-goods. They could not buy them from Japan. What did Japan do? Japan did what the British did. They went into China with their gold. They exchanged it for the cheap silver money on a ratio of 4 or 5 to 1. They bought factories, enlarged factories, built new factories, and put the Chinese to work making cotton piece-goods. That market is gone forever.

Our own exports to that country are quite interesting. Apparently we were all right, but only apparently. In 1929 we exported to China, of raw products, $40,000,000 worth; in 1930, $38,000,000 worth; in 1931, $55,000,000, an increase of 38 percent. Those are raw products, largely cotton. But what happened to our manufactured exports? In 1929 they were $2,531,000; in 1930, $1,898,000; in 1931, $1,119,667. In other words, our exports dropped from the index figure of 100 in 1929 to 43 in 1931. Those are the last exact figures I have.

What happened to silver during that period of time? Silver was around 60 cents an ounce when this movement started, and it dropped in 1931 to 25.5 cents an ounce. The figures are so simple, so plain, as to what is happening to us. The reports of this great commission from Great Britain, under the auspices of the Cabinet member in charge of the board of trade, show what is happening. In their reports they put their finger on it, and they state that it is the duty of Great Britain to take the initiative in removing the obstacles to the natural rise in the price of silver. Great Britain does not produce any silver, except possibly in Canada, and Australia a little bit. They were not interested in the price of silver except as it affected the commerce of the world.

Everyone now is coming to understand the effect of depreciated currency on exports and imports. Everyone who knows anything about exports and imports knows now that a government with depreciated money has an advantage in export trade, and a disadvantage in import trade. People understand that with regard to the currencies of countries that formerly were on the gold standard, but for some mysterious reason they cannot understand that the same law applies to countries that have nothing but silver money. It does not make any difference what kind of money it is. As a matter of fact, today in the world there are few standard moneys. There is no gold standard.

The standard in France or Switzerland or Holland or Italy might be called a gold standard, but it is a managed gold standard, so tied and held in that it is just a little local secret affair among themselves. There is no such thing among the great nations of the world as a gold standard, except that it is the intention of Great Britain and it is the intention of every one of those 66 governments to go back to the use of gold as the measure of the value of currency in international trade and as a limitation of issue. If it were not for that, gold would not be worth much more than iron is worth today. These nations are bidding for gold because they know that gold is scarce, and they believe that in some way, somehow, at some time it will be reestablished as the measure of the value of the currencies of the world in international trade, and I believe it will, too.

Getting down now to bimetallism, there are two different definitions of bimetallism. We have bimetallism in the United States today, but it is not the same kind of bimetallism that we had in the beginning of this Government. It is not the same kind that we had down to 1873. Originally our bimetallism meant that one measure of the dollar was 23.2 grains of gold (it was a little more than that at the start but it is that now), and that the other measure of the dollar was 371.25 grains of silver, and that one could pay his debts in either measure, until 1873, of course, when we adopted the single gold-standard measure.

That, however, has not made any particular difference to us here, except to this extent: Today 12 percent of the currency of this country is silver, and that silver is running on a parity with all gold currencies, and has run on a parity with all gold currencies through this century, and it has run on a parity of 16 to 1. I know that if a person uses the term "16 to 1" somebody will immediately think he is crazy; but the reason the ratio is 16 to 1 is that 371.25 is about 16 times 23.2. In other words, it takes 16 times as many grains of silver as it does of gold to measure a dollar.

Why was that done? That is not just an arbitrary thing that happened. Napoleon, away back in the early days of 1818, established the ratio at 15 to 1, after he had had the greatest statisticians and scholars of that age determine the preciosity of gold and silver. They determined that the production of the two was as 15 to 1, and that the demand being exactly the same for money, the ratio of exchange should be 15 to 1.

Then it is said that the law of supply and demand is working. If there were taken away from gold the possibility of its ever again being used as money, I doubt if it would be as valuable as tin. What would anyone want with it if it were not used for money? Half of it is used for jewelry and the arts and sciences. What would become of the other half if it were not needed for money?

If exactly the same demand existed for silver as for gold for use as money, the law of supply and demand undoubtedly would run right along. Today we have nearly $800,000,000 in silver in circulation in this country, 12 percent of all of our currency. Every one of those dollars today is circulating and paying debts at $1.29 an ounce. Nobody ever questioned it. Our Government since 1873 has made about $265,000,000 in profit from buying the silver from the miner and selling it to the banker and the grocer and the merchant with which to do business. There has not been any strain on our credit. In 1900, 30 percent of all the circulating currency of the United States was silver. We could increase the silver circulation in this country $1,500,000,000 without reaching the proportion of silver currency to gold currency that existed in 1900.

Why should there be any great fear of inflation even if we should coin the annual production of this country of 24,000,000 ounces of silver a year at a value of $1.29 an ounce? It would add but a little over thirty millions a year to our currency, and we could keep adding to it until we had added $1,500,000,000 before the proportion would be as it was in 1900. What is the meaning of all this talk about being afraid that the ratio and bearing of the currencies of the United States will be disturbed by any of these small acts? It is perfectly absurd.

Why is it that people want gold? It is not a particularly serviceable metal. There are not enough teeth to be filled to use 1 percent of it. Men want it for the same reason they have wanted it throughout the ages—because it is a precious metal, recognized as precious throughout the world. From the time of barter and trade, when men wanted to reach out and have a substitute for exchanging a cow for a horse, they found that a chunk of metal about as big as a match case was scarce, and that if they took that chunk of metal for a cow, another man somewhere else would take the chunk of metal for a horse. It was because of the scarcity of it. The functions of money are to transport things, like a railroad; and not only that but to measure excess labor for the future, to hold it to hand down to one's children and to posterity, to meet the hard times of poverty. Not only that, but it must be so limited in its production that it will be a sound measure of money. It must be found everywhere—not like platinum, which is found in a few places only.

So we find that from the beginning of time people everywhere have recognized that there were two precious metals, gold and silver; that Nature limited their production, and that natural limitation gave them their value as money and made them stable. People not only found that out in the course of time; but even before professors and statisticians existed and roved the country, men found out that there was just about 14, 15, or 16 times as much silver as gold. They established the ratio themselves in their trades with silver before it even had the stamp of a weight or a government on it.

The same thing that causes our most intelligent, educated people—our great bankers, for instance—to long to get gold into their hands is that they do not trust anything else. I do not blame them much. No one who has observed what has happened to the great power governments of Europe and their paper money, which has no intrinsic value, no value whatever outside of their own countries, can help fearing what we call "fiat paper money."

I have read the story of my friend, Barney Baruch, in a magazine about the terrible destruction that follows the issuance of fiat money. I thoroughly agree with him. He does not have to paint the history of Europe, the history of the mark. We all know it. That is the reason why Barney wants gold; and if he could not get gold, he would want silver, just as the Chinese want silver and the Indian wants silver. The Indian has his wife covered with bracelets, anklets, breast plates of silver, because the Indian woman cannot inherit, but she can keep that; and when poverty comes, when drought comes, she cuts off a little piece of that silver and takes it into the bazar and buys food and clothing with it. During good times they have hoarded silver. There are probably 6,000,000,000 ounces of silver hoarded in India. Nothing on earth could drag it out of India save necessity, poverty, famine, distress.

When silver was $1.38 an ounce, the highest in the history of the world—in 1919, I think—the Chinese were buying more silver than they ever bought before. The more valuable it becomes, the more they want it. When there is a bear movement on silver, such as India created, the Chinese speculators know that it is going down, and they join in the selling movement and buy gold and hoard gold; and they have been hoarding gold in India and China to an estimated amount of probably a billion dollars.

As silver starts up, their gold comes out to buy silver, and they buy silver. I should not be afraid now to open the mints of the United States to the coinage of the silver of the world, because my studies of it have convinced me that not over 250,000,000 to 300,000,000 ounces would come in here for coinage. As a matter of fact, if there should be a tendency to draw silver to this country, China would put an embargo upon the exportation of silver, because she does not intend to have her country denuded of silver; and so with other countries.

All we have to do is simply to remove Government restrictions and limitations that have been put on silver money. A rise in the price of silver will not make China buy from us. She can buy somewhere else. Some economist the other day said that in the first 8 months of this year our exports to China fell off 16 percent, and during that time silver was 4 cents higher than it was in 1932. He picks out a little period like that, but he forgets that the price of cotton went up from 5½ to 9 cents during that period of time, and the rise in the price of silver was not nearly so great as the rise in the price of cotton and wheat and other things. That is typical of the statistician. He picks out a little speck, a little section, and says: "Look at that!" instead of taking an average of 3 or 4 years. The price of silver dropped from 65 to 25.5 cents in 3 years. If we measure our exports as did Great Britain, we will find out what has happened.

What I mean is this: Some of the members of the American Mining Congress are engaged in coal mining, others in iron mining, others in silver mining, lead, gold, copper, zinc, what not; and therefore I am discussing the economics of this proposition. Our automobile sales in China went to pieces. We sold 80 percent of all the automobiles used in China, and yet Mr. Soong, the minister of finance, who was educated in this country and is a great banker, testified before the economic conference over in London: "Of course we cannot afford to buy your trucks and your automobiles, because a little truck for which we paid $1,200 in our money 3 years ago we now pay $3,400 for in our money."

They said, "But would not China benefit by cheap silver? Is it not industrializing China?"

He said, "Yes; it is industrializing the coast cities; but my ambition is to develop China, the great resources back of it, and I cannot do it without credit. I cannot keep my credit unless I can pay the foreign service debt on the $500,000,000 of gold that we owe. When we borrowed that gold, one billion Chinese dollars would pay for it. Today it takes two and a half billions of Chinese dollars to pay for it. We can collect $4 on the hundred in taxes, as you might, in silver dollars; but when we go to pay it on the debt, it is only $1. No government can live in China without credit, and no government in China can get credit until it can pay its foreign service debts, and it cannot pay the foreign service debts when you value our money at one fourth or one fifth of your money."

That is a matter of history. If you who are interested in metals would only carry the truth to the country, would answer the foolish articles that are written in the papers, such as the one written by Mr. Robey the other day, your action would help the situation. He said, "Why, there are only four or five States interested in silver. There are only probably 100,000 people directly interested in silver. The gross value of it last year was only about, I should say, $8,000,000. Why should we worry ourselves about that little crop?"

Well, we should not if that were all there is to it; but it has never occurred to Mr. Robey to read the undisputed reports of other countries on these various questions. Our commerce and our exports to China, ever since silver went up above 40 cents, have been increasing right along. Why does he not segregate that period? Of course it was not a fair comparison to take the difference of 4 cents an ounce between 1932 and the 8 months in 1933, when we had raised the cost of everything.

Those are some of the foolish answers to these questions. We are told, "If the Chinese citizen's bank account were doubled, he would not buy any more." Well, it is human nature that if a man's bank account is doubled, he is going to buy just a little more. If my bank account were doubled, I should probably buy a new automobile instead of running the one that I have been running for 5 or 6 years. If the Chinese dollar were given even the purchasing power that it had in 1926, 1927, and 1928, and for years, of 60 to 65 cents an ounce, it would pretty nearly double China's purchasing power in the United States and allow her to pay interest on her national debt. It would allow her to borrow more money. It would allow her to carry out the program that the National Government promised, which was to build railroads and wagon roads and canals. The only reason they could not carry it out and the only reason the National Government of China was under fire was that they could not carry out the promise; and they could not carry out the promise because they had to buy these things outside of their country, where their currency was depreciated.

We are now depreciating the dollar deliberately—there is no use denying that—and for exactly the same reason that Great Britain depreciated the pound and France depreciated the franc, because a country with a depreciated currency compared with other currencies has the best of the export trade. France depreciated her currency first and prospered all during the hard times. Great Britain, when she depreciated the pound, found that the same thing happened, and now we are finding it out. But if we recognize that law with regard to export, if we appreciate the currency of another country instead of depreciating ours, why are we not accomplishing the same thing? We are. Appreciating or reestablishing the value of silver money throughout the world by comparison with our own currency has the same effect that always follows the law of depreciation and appreciation. Over half the people of the world will have their purchasing power in our country—not at home but in our country—doubled, and they will buy from us. There is not any question about that at all, and it is coming.

People are afraid to start coining in the United States the silver of the world, and there is a basis for fear. While I may believe that only 250,000,000 to 300,000,000 ounces would come in here, others may say, "Why not 11,000,000,000 ounces? That much exists in the world. Why will it not come in? There is no proof that it will not." It was that argument that did more to destroy the Bryan movement than any other argument that was ever offered.

The cheap-money argument had not half as much to do with it as did the argument that a flood of silver would flow into our country and drive out gold. It is for that reason that I feel that the logical, natural, and easy step to take, which will get support, will be first to try it out by limiting the coinage to our own silver that is produced in this country. We know how much that is. Our production never has been over 62,000,000 ounces annually. It certainly cannot be that much for a long time, because 80 percent of the silver that is produced in this country is a byproduct of the mining of copper, lead, and zinc; and until there is a demand for copper, lead, and zinc the production of silver cannot increase. It is a safety valve. There can be no such thing as an overproduction of silver. When silver was over $1 an ounce for 3 years, and all the mining companies sent out their scouts and engineers and geologists and took the old pillars out of mines and worked all the old dumps throughout the world, the total increase over the prior period was not over 10 percent, and a part of that was involved in the natural increase of about 3 percent per annum.

I say to you that the fear of all this is based upon the willful ignorance of economists and statisticians and writers as to the basic facts of production and consumption of these metals. They are not interested. They still preach that there is a great stream of silver flowing somewhere that may be poured in here and drive out the gold. There is not any danger of driving out the gold at present, and in my opinion there never will be. If we should give to the silver of the world the value that we give to our $800,000,000 worth in this country, we should have a basic purchasing power of silver of $15,000,000,000 throughout the world instead of $5,000,000,000. There is not enough gold to reestablish the old gold standard, and every government knows it. There never will be enough gold to reestablish the old gold standard. There may be enough if it is in a closed circuit in central banks, used solely for the purpose of the settlement of the balance of trade between countries; but if we are to have sound local currency we must have it based on metal, and there will not be enough gold to serve the purpose. The logical, the sound, the safe way to do it is to base it on the other precious metal as a supplement to gold. Then we need have no fear of the issue of fiat money in this country or anywhere else throughout the world.

I thank you.

SAVINGS BANK LIFE INSURANCE—ADDRESS BY GOVERNOR ELY, OF MASSACHUSETTS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, Mr. Justice Louis D. Brandeis, of the United States Supreme Court, has distinguished himself as a great jurist. Outside of Massachusetts, however, it may not be generally known that he is the founder and chief promoter of a great social institution, authorized under the laws of Massachusetts and known as "savings-bank life insurance."

Recently His Excellency Joseph B. Ely, Governor of Massachusetts, delivered an address on this unique institution, namely, Savings Bank Life Insurance, which I request to be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAVINGS BANK LIFE INSURANCE—A UNIQUE INSTITUTION

By His Excellency Joseph B. Ely, Governor of Massachusetts

Many years ago President Eliot, at a dinner given to Booker T. Washington, told a story of men adrift many days off the coast of Brazil. Their supply of fresh water became exhausted and sighting another vessel they signaled their distress, "Bring us fresh water. We are dying of thirst." The other vessel signaled back, "Dip down where you are." You see, the ship in distress had been for several days in the Amazon River, the delta of which is so wide that the shores were not visible from the ship. They were dying of thirst with many fathoms of fresh water beneath their keel. This story illustrates the fact that frequently we cry for relief from afar when help is near at hand.

I wish to call your attention to an agency of Massachusetts of which few people have any knowledge. It is savings-bank life insurance. I think I am correct in saying there is no other such agency in any other State in the Union. It is an insurance organization which has no solicitors, and therefore no cost imposed upon it for acquiring the business. That is the secret of its rates. If you want the insurance you voluntarily walk into a savings bank and ask for it. There are 21 savings banks in Massachusetts issuing it, and 130 banks where you may obtain it. No bank can write a policy in excess of $1,000, but you may take a policy from any of the 21 banks writing it or from all of the 21 banks.

MILLIONS IN PREMIUMS

Last year the working people of Massachusetts paid out nearly $55,000,000 for weekly premium life insurance. This amount is almost as much as the entire budget appropriation for the Commonwealth, which for 1933 was $57,000,000. There are 5,000,000 of these weekly premium policies in force in the State, averaging about $200 each and representing over a billion dollars of insurance. Most of this is carried by people of small means.

In this phase of the life-insurance business, which is a great and honorable business, those who can least afford it, of necessity, pay the highest price. Weekly premium insurance, written through the recognized companies, costs more than the same amount of protection would cost on the ordinary basis in the same companies, and costs about three times what the same amount of protection would cost in the savings-bank life-insurance system. Approximately three quarters of these 5,000,000 policies of Massachusetts workers have no cash value until after 10 years' premiums have been paid. The remainder have a cash surrender value only after 5 years. Savings-bank life insurance gives a cash surrender value on every policy after 6 months. When it is recognized that such a large percentage of men and women, for one reason or another, let their policies lapse—each year a number equal to about 80 percent of the entire number written—you get an idea of the enormous amounts of money forfeited by the workers of Massachusetts under the weekly premium plan. The lapse ratio in savings-bank life insurance is only about 2 percent. Every policy has a cash surrender value after 6 months' premiums have been paid, and thereafter no forfeiture can occur.

ASSOCIATED INDUSTRIES' ATTITUDE

The Massachusetts Commission on Stabilization of Employment, in a release by its chairman, Mr. Stanley King, now president of Amherst College, under date of September 23, 1932, stated that in 1931 the payments for weekly premium life insurance in Massachusetts were more than $55,000,000, and that fully $24,000,000 of that amount could have been saved had these workers been insured in the savings-bank life-insurance system. The Associated Industries of Massachusetts, after a thorough study of savings-bank life insurance, decided that this method of insurance warranted the cooperation of all employers in the State. Under their direction, surveys have been made in many manufacturing plants, indicating that at least 90 percent of the weekly wage earners of Massachusetts carry this most expensive weekly premium insurance and demonstrating that about one half of the sum so paid could be saved if savings-bank life insurance had been taken instead.

These surveys indicate that the average payment of each industrial wage earner in Massachusetts for this form of life insurance is $1.60 a week. The officers of the Plymouth Cordage Co. estimate that each of 300 families in Plymouth is saving $100 a year, or a total saving of $30,000, in that single plant by the substitution of savings-bank life insurance for the usual weekly premium plan.

The $24,000,000 which could be saved to the workers of Massachusetts each year is an important sum of money. It is nearly as much as all the people in Massachusetts paid for shoes in 1933. It is 20 percent more than the entire direct debt of the Commonwealth. It is five times as much as the annual interest on both the direct and contingent public debt of the State. The savings which would thus be effected amount to more than 5 percent of the total earnings of the workers in manufacturing industries in Massachusetts for the year 1931. A saving of an amount equal to more than 5 percent of the manufacturers' pay roll is a very real advantage, available to Massachusetts and not available in any other State in the Union.

PURCHASING POWER

Not only would the saving of this amount of money to the wage earners materially ease the burdens of those directly making these savings but it would have another very important result for the industries of Massachusetts generally, not only the particular industries in which the wage earner making such saving is employed but those which produce goods for his use. We may have learned a number of lessons from the depression. One thing we certainly have learned, and that is that to have any real prosperity we must have wide-spread purchasing power; we have learned that it is the purchasing of goods by the millions of people and not by the few which keeps the factories running.

Twenty-four million dollars saved to the wage earners of Massachusetts in the purchase of this one very real necessity of life would make that amount available for the purchase by them of other necessities. That would be a much-needed help to the producing industries of Massachusetts. We need purchasing power for consumer goods on the part of the masses and the saving of $24,000,000 or more each year to the wage earners of Massachusetts by the purchase of savings-bank life insurance would release that sum of money for use in the purchase of boots and shoes, coats and hats, eggs and butter and milk, and other necessities of life which many working people are doing without or buying in such small amounts as to leave the producers with a restricted market.

Savings-bank life insurance is unique as an insurance institution. The investment and payment of money are handled by the savings bank. The medical supervision necessary to the safety of a life-insurance institution is in the hands of an officer of the Commonwealth. The actuary, constantly deciding questions affecting the insurance bank on one hand and the policyholders on the other hand, is an officer of the Commonwealth, and, besides the supervision of the commissioner of banks and the commissioner of insurance, the general management of the system is in the hands of an officer of the Commonwealth. It now has about $96,000,000 of insurance in force.

Savings-bank life insurance has demonstrated not only the vision of its founders but their wisdom and the soundness of their economics. The trustees of the Massachusetts savings banks handling the people's money in their insurance departments restricted to the best class of investments, still earn a better return on it than has been the case of the large life-insurance companies, illustrating that size does not always indicate returns and that the trustee of a small savings bank in Massachusetts may be, and often is, a better financier than many who are handling billions.

STOOD THE TEST

This method of insurance has stood all the tests. Its opponents contended that an epidemic in Massachusetts would be fatal to it. But it came through the "flu" epidemic of 1918 with a mortality record much better than any of the companies. Through the present hard times it has made liberal loans to its policyholders, but in spite of the unusual demands in that regard has not at any time been obliged to use but a small fraction of its new premium income for that purpose. Through the 4 years of the depression, from October 31, 1929, to October 31, 1933, it increased its reserve and surplus by more than 35 percent. On the fourth day of March a year ago, when every bank in America was closed, the insurance departments of the savings-and-insurance banks in Massachusetts were open doing business, receiving premium income, making policy loans, and paying death losses.

If properly utilized, this method of insurance could be made of great advantage to the manufacturing interests of the State where group insurance plays an important part in factory operation. I would not advise any individual to take it unless he is prepared to meet the test of carrying his premium to the bank or sending it by mail, because no one calls for it. But to one who wishes to save money and is willing to tend to it, it is an important bit of saving.

MASSACHUSETTS ACCOMPLISHMENT

This advantage to Massachusetts is not an unfair one in any way. The system was the product of the statesmanship of a Massachusetts man, long one of our leading citizens and now for many years an honored and respected member of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Honorable Louis D. Brandeis. Massachusetts employers and industrialists were prominent among those who assisted him in laying the groundwork for this great system of savings-bank life insurance and in bringing about its adoption by the Legislature of Massachusetts. Leaders of industry here, such as ex-Governor Douglas, the late Charles H. Jones, Elmer J. Bliss, James L. Richards, Henry S. Dennison, and many others are among those who helped Mr. Brandeis in the fight for the establishment of this system and defended it against its enemies for many years. Massachusetts industry then is fairly entitled to reap the great benefits which are ready at hand from the operation of this system.

I point this out to you as a unique accomplishment of Massachusetts. It is one of the many things that show the progressive tendencies of this State—a sanely progressive State. It is one of those things carried out after careful deliberation, thought out to the end, which is a compliment to the great mind of a great jurist.

REGULATION OF COMMUNICATIONS BY WIRE OR RADIO

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3285) to provide for the regulation of interstate and foreign communications by wire or radio, and for other purposes.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the communications bill is a bill of 104 printed pages. That, of course, is rather a large legislative document. I call attention, however, in the beginning to the fact that probably 70 to 75 pages of it comprise a rewriting of existing radio law and its amendments and of the Interstate Commerce Act and its amendments, and that the other parts of the bill which are new are the parts which create the new commission and provide for certain additional powers which the committee thought were necessary for the newly created commission to have for effective regulation.

There are a few sections in the bill which adapt certain provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act heretofore applying only to railroads, making them applicable to telephone and telegraph regulation. There are some sections in regard to radio regulation which were in H.R. 7716, a bill passed by both Houses of Congress in 1933, which did not receive the signature of the President and died with the end of the session.

Briefly, the bill creates a new commission to be known as the "Communications Commission." It abolishes the Radio Commission and transfers all radio regulation to one division of the Communications Commission. It also repeals the radio laws which now exist and substitutes the provisions of this bill. It also transfers all powers over telephone and telegraph communications from the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Postmaster General to the Communications Commission.

I invite attention as to why it seemed important to us that we should enact new legislation rather than merely transfer the existing powers in present law. The Interstate Commerce Act has been evolved over a period of about 50 years. I have in my hand a book of 242 pages and a supplement of 59 pages comprising the Interstate Commerce Act and amendments to it written primarily for the control of transportation. In 1910 an amendment was adopted which applied certain provisions of the then Interstate Commerce Act to telephone and telegraph companies and added certain new provisions. Since that time the Interstate Commerce Commission has given what might be called cursory attention to the regulation of telephone and telegraph matters, but in practical operation the regulation of the telephone and telegraph companies has been really nothing effective. It has amounted to very little. The Interstate Commerce Commission has been so busy with railroad questions that it has never given much attention to telephone and telegraph companies, and the latter business has grown only recently to such proportions that there have been sufficient complaints on the part of the public to seem to justify a separate organization to regulate and control them.

The Radio Act had in it certain provisions which have become obsolete. When written it referred to the Commerce Department certain powers for certain purposes. It also had a number of amendments made to it, and it seemed desirable to collect all those provisions in the new bill.

Then, too, there should be a regulation of the rates of radio telephone and radio telegraph if we are to have regulation of the rates of wire telephone and wire telegraph. I shall not today take the time of the Senate to enlarge at any length upon the size of the industry or all that it involves. I do want to call attention, however, to just a few facts.

The telephone monopoly and associated corporations have a capitalization and a tentative valuation of more than $5,000,000,000. There are more than 20,000,000 individual telephones in the United States. Last year it was reported there were 27,000,000,000 individual telephone calls made by the people of the United States and more than 200,000,000 written messages over telegraph and cable. That is the largest use of communications service of any part of the world; in fact, I think it is as large as all the rest of the world combined.

Before I attempt to analyze the bill in detail, permit me to say that the bill has been prepared with great care. After rather lengthy hearings, a subcommittee of five members was appointed. I then secured the assistance of a representative of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Mr. Stough, who is an examiner; a representative of the Radio Commission; the acting chief counsel, Mr. Porter; and a representative from the State Department, Mr. Stewart, who handles communications. We had also Mr. Boots, of the legislative counsel of the Senate. In addition I had assisting me in connection with the legislation Mr. Stephan, who is an examiner of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and who was loaned to the committee for this work. These gentlemen went over the bill, not once but again and again, line by line, to see that it covered so far as possible all the existing law that is in the statutes which we are proposing to repeal, and also to see that it did not seriously conflict. I am safe in saying, therefore, it is one of the most carefully prepared bills that have been reported for some time, at least by this committee.

After the subcommittee had gone over it with great care and revised it repeatedly, it was reported to the full committee and given some consideration there. Like any other piece of legislation, it may have its mistakes and weaknesses; but from a drafting standpoint, I maintain it is a very carefully prepared bill.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. May I ask if my understanding is correct that there is no authority in the bill to permit any consolidation of radio, telegraph, and telephone companies?

Mr. DILL. There is not. The bill reenacts section 17 of the present radio law of 1927, which specifically prohibits any merging of radio, telegraph, and cable services. It reenacts, however, that provision of the Interstate Commerce Act which permits the continuation of the merging of telephone companies which has been going on for many years.

Mr. COUZENS. But it would not permit the consolidation of the Postal and the Western Union?

Mr. DILL. No; it would not permit that, primarily because of the fact that the Postal and the Western Union are tied up with radio and cables in such a manner that a union of their subsidiary corporations would bring about a union which is forbidden by section 17 of the existing radio law.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. DILL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. COUZENS. Assuming that all these holding companies and consolidations and affiliations should be segregated, and the Postal and the Western Union should become separate entities, would they, under the proposed law, be permitted to consolidate?

Mr. DILL. No; I think not. There is no special statute permitting it, and therefore the antitrust statute probably would apply.

Now, taking up the bill, title I, containing the general provisions of the bill, creates a commission for the regulation of all radio and telephone and telegraph communications. We have attempted in title I to reserve to the State commissions the control of intrastate telephone traffic. We have kept in mind the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission, through the Shreveport decision and the decisions in other similar cases, has gone so far in the regulation of railroads that the so-called "State regulation" amounts to very little.

We have attempted, in this proposed legislation, to safeguard State regulation by certain provisions to the effect that where existing intrastate telephone business is being regulated by a State commission, the provisions of the bill shall not apply. We have in mind, for instance, cases where a city has telephone service connecting into a number of States, such as we have right here in Washington, running out into Maryland and out into Virginia, and in New York the service runs into New Jersey, and I think perhaps into Connecticut, though I am not sure about that. There are many cases in the country where, without some saving clause of that kind, the State commissions might be deprived of their power to regulate; and the State commission representatives were jealous, in the preparation of this bill, that those rights should be protected; and we have attempted to do that.

Most of the definitions—and there are a considerable number of definitions—are taken from the present Radio Act, from the Interstate Commerce Act, and from the International Convention on Radio that is in force throughout the world.

This bill creates a commission of five members. They are appointed for terms of 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 years, and then are to be appointed for terms of 6 years, the salary being $10,000 per year. I think the usual provisions relating to commissions are pretty well followed in the bill, with one exception. The bill sets up in the commission two divisions—one the radio division, the other the telephone and telegraph division—and attempts to prescribe the jurisdiction of these divisions, and provides that the action of a division shall be the action of the commission; each division to have two members, with the chairman acting as the chairman of each division when it is necessary for him to serve in that capacity.

That is a variation from the method that has been previously used, and I desire to say frankly that some members of the committee were doubtful about the wisdom of the provision; but it was kept in the bill, I think, because of this fact: When the commission is created, if the action of a division is allowed to be appealed to the full commission, as is the case in the Interstate Commerce Act, so many applications for changes of power and frequency and allotments of time by radio stations are likely to come to the commission, and whatever may be the decision of a division those decisions will be appealed to the full commission, that the danger is that the full commission will become a body giving all its time or the major part of its time to radio only, and that the regulation, study, and investigation of telephones and telegraphs will not receive the full time and attention that is believed necessary if there is to be any effective regulation.

It may be that the jurisdictional provision which attempts to say what each division shall handle will prove unworkable, or prove somewhat inflexible in operation; but, if that be the case, the commission is specifically directed to report back to the Congress next February any recommendations it may desire to make for new legislation, and the Congress can easily remove the provision that sets up the divisions as I have stated.

I desire to say that the subcommittee and the full committee gave considerable consideration to this provision, recognizing that it is a departure from the ordinary method. It was adhered to in the report of the bill primarily in the hope that a certain number of members of the commission would give their entire time to a study of the telephone and telegraph question, which never has been studied, and because of which there never has been any effective regulation.

I call attention in that connection to the report of Dr. Splawn, who was employed by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives to study the tariff question. His report indicated that there is a tremendous amount of work to be done if the facts are to be secured that are necessary to effective telephone regulation.

Title II——

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, before the Senator reaches that title, I should like to ask him a question. I was not able to follow the bill all through the committee. May I ask why the committee left out all reference to civil service as it appears on page 9?

Mr. DILL. I think the bill provides for civil service with the exception of certain employees.

Mr. COUZENS. That is what I wanted to draw to the Senator's attention. There is a very long list of exceptions, much longer than usually appears where exceptions are made to civil-service regulations.

Mr. DILL. I think not, with the exception that we have provided for a director of each division, and for a clerk to each commissioner. I think one of the weaknesses of the commission system in the civil service is that a commissioner is not able to pick his own clerk; and it seemed to the committee that a commissioner ought to have the right to select one confidential clerk outside the civil service.

Mr. COUZENS. I am not out of harmony with the committee's view in that respect, but I wish to draw the Senator's attention to the particular language at the top of page 9, which says:

> Without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, (1) the commission may appoint and prescribe the duties and fix the salaries of a secretary, a chief engineer and one or more assistant chief engineers, a general counsel and one or more assistants, experts, and special counsel—

It seems to me the word "experts" includes the whole category.

Mr. DILL. No; those are the provisions, I think, that are now in the Radio Act and, I think, to a limited extent in the Interstate Commerce Act. The second provision, providing for a clerk, is new, and also the provision for a director of the division. The director of the division was provided for the reason that it was believed that a great many purely administrative acts requiring no particular discretion can be performed by a director if he is authorized by the commission to perform them, his acts, of course, always being subject to revision, modification, reversal, or appeal to the commission. That is especially true in the radio division, where there are so many thousand amateur applications presented and licenses to be issued; and I think there will be a great deal of work in the telegraph and telephone division that can be done in that way.

Title II is the common-carrier section, and provides for the regulation of telephones and telegraphs, both wire and wireless. Under this title most of the sections are taken from the Interstate Commerce Act; but section 201 is an adaptation of a provision of the Interstate Commerce Act now applying to railroads. It provides that the commission may set up through routes by physical connections if it finds it necessary to do so, just as may be done now with railroads. The committee believed that was a power the commission should have if it was to be effective in its regulation.

Section 202, paragraph (b), is new, and covers the regulation of the charges for chain broadcasting. That section was thought to be desirable because the charges for the use of wires for chain broadcasting have been without any control whatsoever.

Section 203 is a requirement for the publication and filing of schedules and is taken from the Interstate Commerce Act, which at the present time applies only to railroads. It was the thought that that provision should be applied to telephone and telegraph schedules.

Section 204 gives power to suspend new rates, just as is done by section 15 of the Interstate Commerce Act, relating to railroads.

Section 211 expands the interstate commerce provisions so that the communications commission may require copies of all contracts by communication companies instead of only contracts with other carriers, as the law now requires. This was recommended by the Radio Commission.

Section 212 extends the prohibition against interlocking directorates to the communication companies—that is, extends it to the point that the directorates must be approved by the Commission.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator has passed over section 207.

Mr. DILL. That section is copied from the Interstate Commerce Act. The sections I am not mentioning have been copied from the Interstate Commerce Act practically verbatim.

Mr. BLACK. Section 207 provides that a suit can be filed either before the commission or before any district court of the United States of competent jurisdiction. That is not intended to deprive the State court of jurisdiction?

Mr. DILL. I do not know that it deprives it of jurisdiction, but it provides specifically that the suit may be brought in that way. The section is copied from the Interstate Commerce Act now applying to telephones and telegraphs. It is the existing law.

Section 213 makes the valuation of communication company properties permissive instead of mandatory, as section 19 (a) of the Interstate Commerce Act does as to railroads.

Section 214 provides for certificates of necessity for communication companies, such as are required for railroads, although there are inserted provisions giving the commission power to be quite liberal in its interpretation of the section.

Section 215 is the investigation section; and I desire to say something about that.

When the bill was originally introduced, we provided that the commission should have control over what are known as "interservice contracts" between the parent and the subsidiary company. The language was quite broad. Mr. Gifford, of the telephone company, was insistent that it would wreck the telephone company's business and make it impossible for the company to do business, and painted a very black picture.

In light of the fact that it was an entirely new power, the committee struck out that provision and substituted, instead, a direction to the commission to make a study of these interservice contracts, and report to Congress regarding them, and to recommend to Congress whether there should be legislation controlling the contracts between the parent and its subsidiaries and affiliates.

I think it is generally well known by those who know anything about the set-up of the telephone monopoly, that under the present arrangement the parent telephone company, the American Telephone & Telegraph, not only owns the operating companies in the principal cities in the United States—I understand there are some 71 companies—but it owns the manufacturing company, the Western Electric, which supplies the operating companies with the equipment of the telephone business, and there is no competitive bidding on the part of those who would sell equipment to the operating companies.

Charges have been made—and they have been quite free and quite broad—that there is a tremendous spread of profit between the cost to the Western Electric of manufacturing the equipment and the prices paid by the operating companies which buy the equipment from Western Electric, the result being not only that there is an enormous profit on the operating equipment but the investment of the operating companies in equipment becomes part of the rate base in the various States, upon which the subscribers must pay a sufficient amount to give a return of a reasonable percentage.

How much of these charges are true I cannot say, but it seemed to the committee that it was highly desirable that the commission should investigate that whole situation and report back to Congress as to whether or not the commission should be given authority to control such contracts and to control competitive bidding.

It is a policy which has developed not only in the telephone business, but we are all familiar with the way it has worked with all corporations which own subsidiaries and affiliates. Particularly is that true in the power business, where they build bridges, dams, and plants through the means of subsidiaries, and pad the costs of the projects.

On page 32 the committee added an amendment providing that the commission should investigate the methods by which the wire-telephone companies are furnishing wire-telegraph service and wire-telephone companies are furnishing wire-telephone service. In the code hearings recently many charges have been made back and forth as to the practices of these companies. The committee, not knowing the facts, felt that this was something the commission should investigate, and that it should make a report to Congress with its recommendations.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. Looking at section 215, which the Senator was just discussing, does the Senator construe that section as giving authority to the commission to investigate the profits, for instance, of the company which supplies the equipment?

Mr. DILL. That is the intent. It may be that it is not broad enough. If the Senator thinks the language needs broadening, I should be very glad to have him suggest an amendment. The intent is to give the commission power to find all the facts and report back to the Congress as to whether the commission should be given power to control the contracts.

Mr. BLACK. I assumed that was the intent, and I doubt whether the language is broad enough.

Mr. DILL. I shall be very glad to have the Senator offer an amendment, if he thinks it is not sufficiently broad, and I will be glad to consider it.

The sections I am not reading are sections which are copied practically verbatim from the Interstate Commerce Act, and are existing law. Section 219 provides for the reports of subsidiaries and affiliates and requires the naming of stockholders who own more than 5 percent of the stock. Whether that will be particularly effective or not is doubtful. I understand that there is nobody who owns 5 percent of the stock in the telephone business. The telephone company has put on a campaign to have its subscribers buy a share of stock, and in that way make them interested, of course, in the perpetuation of the financial system of the telephone company. But certainly it is not a burdensome requirement, to say the least. We also require reports on the salaries and bonuses of the officers and directors, and that is new as compared with the existing law, as it is provided in the Interstate Commerce Act.

Title III refers to the radio division, and is largely a rewriting of the provisions of the radio law of 1927, which are, in effect, of amendments which have been adopted, and of provisions of H.R. 9716, which passed both Houses, but was not signed by the President, and did not become a law because of the expiration of the Congress on March 4, 1933.

There are one or two new sections in that title which I desire to mention. Section 307 provides for a study of the question of the allocation of facilities for educational and religious broadcasting. I think perhaps every Senator here has had one or more telegrams or letters urging support for an amendment which is pending, offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], seeking to allocate by statute 25 percent of the radio facilities to those engaged in broadcasting on a nonprofit basis.

I may say that the committee considered that amendment, voted on it, and rejected it, but felt that this question was of such importance, and that there was so much public sentiment in this country for a larger use of radio facilities for educational and religious and other nonprofit purposes, for broadcasting on a nonprofit basis, that it would be well to have the commission make a study of the subject and report to Congress as to whether or not Congress should actually legislate on it, or whether the Commission should handle it, and what its plans might be. I shall not discuss that further at this time but will probably have something to say about it when the amendment is presented to the Senate.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I have in my hand a copy of the so-called "Wagner-Hatfield amendment", and I gather from a hasty reading of it that it provides for the allocation of a certain percentage of licenses to be issued to broadcasting stations. Is that to be confined to new stations, or is it to apply to old stations to be set over to that type of work, or is it to apply to part of the time on present stations?

Mr. DILL. The Senator will have to judge that language, and I would rather not discuss the amendment now, because it will be offered at a later time.

Mr. BONE. I have not had time to read it carefully.

Mr. DILL. We will have time to discuss it later.

I call attention also to section 310, which considerably changes the present law relating to foreign ownership of communication companies and makes these requirements apply to the holding companies.

The holding-company system has made such legislation necessary. A private corporation comes to the Radio Commission and secures a license to do business, and then we find that that private corporation is merely a subsidiary of some big company that is interested in a great many other organizations, perhaps communication companies and organizations of another nature, and is in reality the power that determines what use shall be made of those radio facilities.

The committee gave very careful consideration to this provision. It is a controversy which is not new. It has been before the committee and has been brought up on the floor of the Senate, repeatedly. No doubt Senators who have given any study to the subject are familiar with the fact that the officials of the Navy Department insist that we should have 100-percent-owned foreign communications, and that there should be 100-percent American directorates. At first thought, that appeals to many who study the question, but in practical operation, it is found that it is too rigid a requirement, and that it would not be necessary to have such a provision in order to protect our communications system in case of trouble with a foreign country. So, after much consideration and study, the committee has written into the bill a provision that none of the officers of the company shall be foreigners, that not more than one fifth of the capital stock shall be owned and voted by foreigners, and that not more than one fourth of the directors shall be foreigners, and have extended the time for these requirements to go into operation until June 1, 1935.

We did that for the reason that one of the companies thinks it is necessary to go to the legislature of the State in which it was incorporated and secure some change of law in order that it may change its charter. I personally do not think that is necessary, but not desiring to be unjust in any manner to any of these companies, we agreed to this provision.

I think we have amply safeguarded the protection of the American communications service, because, after all, if an emergency shall arise and the country shall go to war, the President will have power under the law to seize all communication companies, and have absolute control of all communication companies with facilities in the United States. So that really I think the law fully protects American rights, and, at the same time, will permit our international communication companies to compete with companies in foreign countries with whom they must compete to establish facilities in those countries.

Title IV is the procedural and administrative section. Most of this title is taken from the existing law, but I wish to speak particularly of section 402, which is the section relating to appeals.

Before I do that, however, I think I ought to say something about sections 313 and 314, which relate to the prohibition against monopoly and to conviction by courts.

We change the law slightly there, so that if the court which has the power to take away the license of a licensee because it has violated the antitrust law, finds the licensee guilty but does not take away that license, then the commission will not be compelled to revoke the license, but, of course, if the court takes away the license, the commission will be prohibited from granting another license. The change was one which was insisted upon by certain organizations, and it seemed fair to the committee to do that.

Section 402, concerning which I started to speak, is what is known as the appeals section relating to the courts. There was considerable difference of opinion in the committee, and especially in the subcommittee, regarding this appeals section. We were confronted with a difficult problem. The Interstate Commerce Act provides for appeals from its orders and appeals from its actions in what are known as the "three-judge" district courts of the country. The Radio Act provides for all appeals under that act in the courts of the District of Columbia.

If we shall have one commission handling the entire wire and wireless system, it would seem rather incongruous to have two systems of appeal. In any case it would hardly be proper that the appeals from the decisions of the commission relating to the common carriers engaged in wire communications should go to one set of courts and those relating to common carriers engaged in wireless communications should go to another set of courts. So we wrote this provision providing that certain of the decisions of the commission should be appealed in the three-judge district courts and that certain exceptions should be made relating to decisions of the commission affecting radio. It provides that the three-judge court appeal provision may apply to orders of the commission "applicable to suits to enforce, enjoin, set aside, annul, or suspend any order of the commission under this act (except any order of the commission granting or refusing an application for a construction permit for a radio station, or for a radio station license, or for renewal of an existing radio station license, or for modification of an existing radio station license."

Those exceptions are to be prosecuted in the district courts as under the existing Radio Act, and we have followed the language of the appeal section of existing radio law as to those particular appeals.

I desire to call attention to what I think is an important fact to consider in this appeal provision. Those owners of radio broadcasting stations living long distances from the District of Columbia should not be required to come to Washington to prosecute an appeal from a decision for which they were not responsible. When I say "were not responsible" I mean a decision which was granted against them or affecting them when they did not bring the case into court. A station owner who lives in the Rocky Mountain area, or who lives in the far West, and who is compelled to come to the District of Columbia to prosecute his appeal, finds himself faced with an expense of from $400 to $500 for the mere trip of coming here, an equal amount for his attorney, if he brings one, and then the attorney fees in addition. I say of personal knowledge that some of the station owners have found it almost impossible to finance appeals in that way. So we provide that where the decisions of the commission are made in cases wherein the stations took no part in beginning the suits, appeal may be taken in the three-judge district courts in the jurisdictions where the stations are located. But in the case where the applicant for the license or the permit, or whatever it may be, comes to the commission and asks for a change in his license or asks for a new license, or asks for something to be done by the commission, then if the commission makes a decision from which he desires to appeal he must make his appeal in the courts of the District of Columbia.

In other words, if the station owner has money enough to come here in the beginning to prosecute his case before the commission, it is fair to assume that he has money enough to continue the appeal here. Not only that, but the refusal of the commission to grant an application is a decision from which no appeal can be taken in the Federal district courts. It must be taken in the courts of the District of Columbia. So we have worked out this amendment, which is not satisfactory to all members of the committee, but which I think is fair, and which I believe will be found to be practicable and to work in a satisfactory manner.

Title V is the penal section, and combines the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act and of the Radio Act as to penalties and forfeitures, although we have reduced the amounts of the penalties and the forfeitures considerably from that they are in the Interstate Commerce Act, for the reason that we felt that not so much money being involved and not so large interest being involved it was not fair to make the penalties so severe.

In title VI will be found the miscellaneous provisions which are to provide for the transfer of employees and the records and the property of the Radio Commission, and the unexpired appropriations, and the provisions that the new commission may change, of course, the compensation and classification of the employees.

I have made this general statement. I have omitted discussing many parts of the bill for the reason that they are copied directly from existing law or acts which have been previously passed by both Houses. If any Senator desires to ask any question I shall be glad to answer them. If not I shall ask to take up the committee amendments first.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be read and that the amendments of the committee may first be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The first amendment was, in section 3, paragraph (r), page 6, line 15, after the word "exchange", to insert a comma and the words "and which is covered by the exchange service charge", so as to make the paragraph read:

(r) "Telephone-exchange service" means service within a telephone exchange, or within a connected system of telephone exchanges within the same exchange area operated to furnish to subscribers intercommunicating service of the character ordinarily furnished by a single exchange, and which is covered by the exchange service charge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, paragraph (c), on page 14, line 4, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$8,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$7,500", so as to make the paragraph read:

(c) Each division may (1) appoint a director, without regard to the civil service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, at an annual salary which shall not exceed $7,500 per annum; and (2) hear and determine, order, certify, report, or otherwise act as to any matter under its jurisdiction, and in respect thereof the division shall have all the jurisdiction and powers conferred by law upon the commission, and be subject to the same duties and obligations. Any action so taken by a division and any order, decision, or report made or other action taken by either of said divisions in respect of any matters assigned to it shall have the same force and effect, and may be made, evidenced, and enforced in the same manner as if made or taken by the commission. The secretary and seal of the commission shall be the secretary and seal of each division thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, paragraph (d), on page 14, line 16, after the word "prescribe", to insert a comma and—

And may be affirmed, modified, or reversed: Provided, however, That the authority of a director to make orders shall not extend to investigations instituted upon the commission's own motion nor, without the consent of the parties thereto, to contested proceedings involving the taking of testimony at public hearings.

So as to make the paragraph read:

(d) The director for each division shall exercise such of the functions thereof as may be vested in him by the division, but any order of the director shall be subject to review by the division under such rules and regulations as the commission shall prescribe, and may be affirmed, modified, or reversed: Provided, however, That the authority of a director to make orders shall not extend to investigations instituted upon the commission's own motion nor, without the consent of the parties thereto, to contested proceedings involving the taking of testimony at public hearings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 202, paragraph (a), page 16, line 8, after the word "discriminate", to insert the word "unjustly"; and on line 10, after the word "with", to strike out the word "such" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "like", so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 202. (a) It shall be unlawful for any common carrier to discriminate unjustly in charges, practices, classifications, regulations, facilities, or services for or in connection with like communication service, directly or indirectly, by any means or device, or to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, class of persons, or locality, or to subject any particular person, class of persons, or locality to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage.

Mr. COUZENS. May I ask just why the word "unjustly" is inserted? Will the Senator from Washington please interpret that?

Mr. DILL. There was some thought on the part of some members of the committee that possibly the word "unjustly" was necessary so that there could not be any doubt as to discrimination. I do not think it is particularly important. Has the Senator any objection to it?

Mr. COUZENS. It seems to me that it would put a restriction on the commission which is hardly necessary in the act.

Mr. DILL. There might be minor variations which it was felt ought to be overlooked and that it would make the provision a little stronger.

Mr. COUZENS. I have always assumed that a discrimination was unjust per se.

Mr. DILL. I presume that is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 214, paragraph (a), on page 29, line 7, after the word "service", to insert "or the supplementing of existing facilities", so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 214. (a) No carrier shall undertake the extension of any line, or the construction of a new line, or shall acquire or operate any line, or extension thereof, or shall engage in transmission over or by means of such additional or extended line, unless and until there shall first have been obtained from the commission a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity require or will require the construction, or operation, or construction and operation, of such additional or extended line: Provided, That the authority conferred upon the commission by this section shall not extend to the construction, operation, or extension of (1) a line within a single State, unless said line constitutes part of an interstate line, or (2) local, branch, or terminal lines not exceeding 10 miles in length: Provided further, That the commission may, upon appropriate request being made, authorize temporary or emergency service, or the supplementing of existing facilities, without regard to the provisions of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 215, on page 32, line 9, to insert a new subsection, as follows:

(b) The Commission shall investigate the methods by which and the extent to which wire telephone companies are furnishing wire telegraph service and wire telegraph companies are furnishing wire telephone service, and shall report its findings to Congress, together with its recommendations as to whether additional legislation on this subject is desirable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 307, paragraph (b), on page 50, line 11, after the word "located", to strike out "Provided further, That no frequency used for broadcasting shall be reserved for the use of one station for a distance of more than 2,200 miles, airline, if any person, capable of rendering radio service in the public interest, make application to operate broadcasting apparatus on any frequency so reserved, at a point beyond the distance of 2,200 miles, airline, from the station or stations already licensed and operating on said frequency, and all applications and licenses considered and granted under this provision shall not be counted as a part of the quota of the zone in which said additional stations are located"; on line 23, after the word "may", to strike out "without regard to quota restrictions"; and on line 25, after the word "exceeding", to strike out "250" and to insert in lieu thereof "100", so as to make the paragraph read:

(b) It is hereby declared that the people of all the zones established by this title are entitled to equality of radio broadcasting service, both of transmission and of reception, and in order to provide said equality the Commission shall as nearly as possible make and maintain an equal allocation of broadcasting licenses, of bands of frequency, of periods of time for operation, and of station power, to each of said zones when and insofar as there are applications therefor; and shall make a fair and equitable allocation of licenses, frequencies, time for operation, and station power to each of the States and the District of Columbia, within each zone, according to population. The Commission shall carry into effect the equality of broadcasting service hereinbefore directed, whenever necessary or proper, by granting or refusing licenses or renewals of licenses, by changing periods of time for operation, and by increasing or decreasing station power, when applications are made for licenses or renewals of licenses: Provided, That if and when there is a lack of applications from any zone for the proportionate share of licenses, frequencies, time of operation, or station power to which such zone is entitled, the Commission may issue licenses for the balance of the proportion not applied for from any zone, to applicants from other zones for a temporary period of 90 days each, and shall specifically designate that said apportionment is only for said temporary period. Allocations shall be charged to the State or District wherein the studio of the station is located and not where the transmitter is located: Provided further, That the Commission may also grant applications for additional licenses for stations not exceeding 100 watts of power if the Commission finds that such stations will serve the public convenience, interest, or necessity, and that their operation will not interfere with the fair and efficient radio service of stations licensed under the provisions of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I think I appreciate the strength of the sentiment in favor of an amendment of this sort. Certainly that sentiment was indicated in the last Congress. Yet I think we are making a serious mistake when we undertake in this respect to depart from the practice which has heretofore been followed and from the spirit of the present law.

The so-called "Davis allocation amendment" provided for an equal distribution of these facilities among the zones which were set up in the 1927 act, and provided for their distribution among the States within the zones according to the population thereof. This proposal lifts out from under that equalization amendment stations of 100 watts.

I myself have felt very strongly that the wise thing for us to do was either to adhere to the Davis amendment, so-called, adopted in 1930, which provides for equality among the zones and for equality of service among the States, based on population, or that we should repeal the Davis amendment in its entirety and lodge in the licensing authority the jurisdiction and power to make allocations wherever it might seem possible to do it technically without undue interference with other services.

I simply want these views of mine to be a matter of record at this point. I think we are doing an unwise thing.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I want to say in justification of the amendment, especially for the benefit of some Senators who were not here at the time the Radio Act was passed, that the provision is designed to make it possible to have small stations, not exceeding a hundred watts in power, located in small communities far removed in many cases from existing stations. It is especially needed in those zones of large area, particularly in the western section of the country. We have found that a station of a hundred watts is heard only a short distance, and the Commission has established the policy of requiring most of the hundred-watt stations to be of the same frequency, because they cannot interfere with one another at very far distances.

Yet when applicants from different small communities have come to Washington and made application for a hundred-watt station to supply service to their particular communities, while the evidence might show that such a station could not possibly interfere with the service of any other station, yet because of the quota restriction, that State or that zone having exhausted its quota facilities so that a new station would exceed what is called the "quota" of the zone or State, the application must be denied.

So it seemed to the committee in the bill that was passed a year ago, and it seemed to the committee, I think, again that no serious harm could result in the equality of service by permitting the Commission, in its discretion, when it would not interfere with existing facilities, to violate that equality provision to the extent of a hundred watts, and allow many of the lonely communities of the country to have a radio station which could never have it otherwise. That is why the provision was put in the amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator why the language in lines 23 and 24 on page 50, "without regard to quota restrictions", is stricken out?

Mr. DILL. Primarily because the law has never mentioned quotas. That is a device of the Radio Commission. The law says "equality of service and facilities", and we did not think it wise to give legal sanction to the word "quota." Many of us believe that the method of the present Radio Commission in arriving at this equality is not a sound method, and we did not want to give legal sanction to that method.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is not the word "quota" used to denominate the restrictions imposed by the Davis amendment?

Mr. DILL. No; it is not. It says "equality of radio service and radio facilities." The Commission invented the quota system and arbitrarily set up a certain value. I shall not go into that, for it would take too long; but it set up certain values for certain stations with certain power, and proceeded to charge, according to their own arbitrary figures, districts or zones and States and communities with what they called a "quota." We do not want by this legislation to bind the new commission to that kind of an interpretation of "equality of service and facilities" provided by law.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Did the Senator explain why, in the judgment of the committee, it was wiser to make a limitation of a hundred watts instead of 250 watts?

Mr. DILL. I think it was because the bill that passed in 1933 had that provision, and then I think that a 250-watt station might be so large as seriously to interfere with service.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Would we not be safe in giving the commission complete discretion?

Mr. DILL. That was what the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] suggested. We debated in committee the wisdom of abolishing the Davis amendment and as to whether or not the whole matter should not be left to the commission. I think I speak for the Senator from Maine as well as for myself when I say that neither of us felt strongly enough about it to propose a change or to make much of a fight. So we just concluded that this legislation should be enacted, and then later if the new commission thinks it ought to be changed or Congress thinks it ought to be changed, we can consider that question.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is a fact, is it not, that under the Davis amendment there are certain Western States which are in areas not overquotaed, so to speak, and which cannot receive any new licenses although they themselves have very few licenses.

Mr. DILL. The Senator's statement is correct. I think it may be said in justification of those of us who wrote the original radio law that when we created the zones we did not create them with any thought of the division of facilities, but we created them for the purpose of representation on the then radio commission. Later we found there was such a tremendous concentration of radio stations in a few centers of population that the wisest way to meet that situation was to use the zones and provide for equality of service.

The Senator from Wyoming was not in the Senate at that time, but there was a very strong feeling about it, and the fight was rather heated. So the creation of the zones was made not on the basis of radio facilities but on the basis of having a representation largely by the population of the country.

I think there is much to be said for the abolition of zones, and yet our experience with the concentration of great stations in a few communities was so unsatisfactory and aroused such bitter feeling that I have hesitated to move at this time to strike it out. It was my thought, and the thought of the committee, I think, that we might experiment to the extent of 100 watts and see whether or not it would cause any serious interference, and that possibly that would result in a sentiment to abolish the entire Davis provision.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. As I understand the Senator, the language which is now proposed is such that it will clothe the Commission with the power to establish new stations of 100 watts regardless of zones?

Mr. DILL. Yes; if the Commission finds that they will not interfere with other services.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator how close in miles two stations of 100 watts may be located without interference?

Mr. DILL. I think generally they try to separate them by a hundred miles, and certainly not much more than that is required, although they might interfere with one another, but the service range of a 100-watt station is quite small; it is only a few miles.

Mr. NORRIS. How many miles?

Mr. DILL. Five, ten, or fifteen miles, at most, and it is not reliable at all beyond that distance. Probably 5 miles is all that it can actually be counted upon, although, in many cases, such a station can be heard for longer distances, and may oftentimes be heard for 15 or 20 miles.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the interfering effect of these 100-watt stations, however, may be very great. It is the carrier wave which interferes and this may extend over a very appreciable distance, whereas the receptive quality of the transmission may be very much limited.

Mr. DILL. The Commission, however, tried to remedy that by placing these 100-watt stations with a view to wave lengths, letting them interfere with one another if they interfere at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, in section 307, paragraph (c), page 51, line 8, after the word "of", to insert the word "nonprofit"; in line 10, after the word "of", to insert "nonprofit"; and at the beginning of line 11 to insert "not later than February 1, 1935", so as to make the paragraph read:

(c) The Commission shall study the proposal that Congress by statute allocate fixed percentages of radio broadcasting facilities to particular types or kinds of nonprofit radio programs or to persons identified with particular types or kinds of nonprofit activities, and shall report to Congress, not later than February 1, 1935, its recommendations, together with the reasons for the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 310, page 55, line 22, after the word "foreign", to strike out "country: Provided, however, That nothing herein", and insert the word "country"; and at the beginning of line 24, to insert "nothing in this subsection", so as to make the section read:

LIMITATION ON HOLDING AND TRANSFER OF LICENSES

SEC. 310. (a) The station license required hereby shall not be granted to or held by—

(1) Any alien or the representative of any alien;

(2) Any foreign government or the representative thereof;

(3) Any corporation organized under the laws of any foreign government;

(4) Any corporation of which any officer or director is an alien or of which more than one fifth of the capital stock is owned of record or voted by aliens or their representatives or by a foreign government or representative thereof, or by any corporation organized under the laws of a foreign country;

(5) Any corporation directly or indirectly controlled by any other corporation of which any officer or more than one fourth of the directors are aliens, or of which more than one fourth of the capital stock is owned of record or voted, after June 1, 1935, by aliens, their representatives, or by a foreign government or representative thereof, or by any corporation organized under the laws of a foreign country.

Nothing in this subsection shall prevent the licensing of radio apparatus on board any vessel, aircraft, or other mobile station of the United States when the installation and use of such apparatus is required by act of Congress or any treaty to which the United States is a party.

(b) The station license required hereby, the frequencies authorized to be used by the licensee, and the rights therein granted shall not be transferred, assigned, or in any manner either voluntarily or involuntarily disposed of, or indirectly by transfer of control of any corporation holding such license, to any person, unless the Commission shall, after securing full information, decide that said transfer is in the public interest, and shall give its consent in writing.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I inquire whether under the procedure adopted in connection with the consideration of this bill the committee amendments are first to be disposed of, and that then we will be at liberty to offer individual amendments to the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct in his understanding. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In section 311, page 56, line 15, after the word "station", it is proposed to strike out "to any person, or to any person directly or indirectly controlled by such person" and to insert "to any person (or any person directly or indirectly controlled by such person) whose license has been revoked by a court under section 313, and is hereby authorized to refuse such station license and/or permit to any other person (or to any person directly or indirectly controlled by such person)", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 311. The Commission is hereby directed to refuse a station license and/or the permit hereinafter required for the construction of a station to any person (or to any person directly or indirectly controlled by such person) whose license has been revoked by a court under section 313, and is hereby authorized to refuse such station license and/or permit to any other person (or to any person directly or indirectly controlled by such person) which has been finally adjudged guilty by a Federal court of unlawfulfully monopolizing or attempting unlawfully to monopolize, after this act takes effect, radio communication, directly or indirectly, through the control of the manufacture or sale of radio apparatus, through exclusive traffic arrangements, or by any other means, or to have been using unfair methods of competition. The granting of a license shall not estop the United States or any person aggrieved from proceeding against such person for violating the law against unfair methods of competition or for a violation of the law against unlawful restraints and monopolies and/or combinations, contracts, or agreements in restraint of trade, or from instituting proceedings for the dissolution of such corporation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I ask the clerk to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 51, to strike out lines 6 to 12, inclusive; on page 51, line 13, to strike out "(d)" and insert in lieu thereof "(c)"; on page 52, line 1, to strike out "(e)" and insert in lieu thereof "(d)"; and on page 52, after line 3, to insert the following:

(e) To eliminate monopoly and to insure equality of opportunity and consideration for educational, religious, agricultural, labor, cooperative, and similar non-profit-making associations, seeking the opportunity of adding to the cultural and scientific knowledge of those who listen in on radio broadcasts, all existing radio broadcasting licenses issued by the Federal Radio Commission, and any and all rights of any nature contained therein, are declare null and void 90 days following the effective date of this act, anything contained in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

(f) The Commission shall, prior to 90 days following the effective date of this act, reallocate all frequencies, power, and time assignments within its jurisdiction among the five zones herein referred to.

(g) The Commission shall reserve and allocate only to educational, religious, agricultural, labor, cooperative, and similar nonprofit-making associations one fourth of all the radio broadcasting facilities within its jurisdiction. The facilities reserved for, or allocated to, educational, religious, agricultural, labor, cooperative, and similar non-profit-making associations shall be equally as desirable as those assigned to profit-making persons, firms, or corporations. In the distribution of radio facilities to the associations referred to in this section, the Commission shall reserve for and allocate to such associations such radio broadcasting facilities as will reasonably make possible the operation of such stations on a self-sustaining basis, and to that end the licensee may sell such part of the allotted time as will make the station self-supporting.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the amendment is a very simple one. I believe that it is in accord with the sentiment of Congress and I am sure that it is in accord with the sentiment of the country. It simply provides that when the new communications commission reallocates time, power, and frequencies among the different stations 25 percent shall be allotted to cultural, educational, religious, agricultural, labor, cooperative, and similar non-profit-making organizations.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to enable me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. LONERGAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Cutting	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Dickinson	King	Schall
Bachman	Dill	La Follette	Shipstead
Bailey	Duffy	Lewis	Smith
Bankhead	Erickson	Logan	Steiwer
Barkley	Fess	Lonergan	Stephens
Black	Fletcher	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Frazier	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Borah	George	McKellar	Thompson
Brown	Gibson	McNary	Townsend
Bulkley	Glass	Metcalf	Tydings
Bulow	Goldsborough	Murphy	Vandenberg
Byrd	Hale	Norbeck	Van Nuys

Capper	Hastings	Nye	Walcott
Clark	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Connally	Hatfield	Overton	Wheeler
Copeland	Hayden	Patterson	White
Costigan	Hebert	Pope

Mr. LEWIS. I beg to reannounce the absence of my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH] occasioned by a call from the State of Illinois on official business.

I also reannounce the absence of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] on official business.

I regretfully announce the absence of the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] occasioned by illness.

I also announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE].

I ask to have these announcements stand for the day.

Mr. HEBERT. I wish to announce that the following Senators are necessarily detained from the Senate: The senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, as I was about to state when I yielded for a quorum call, we must consider that the privilege to use the air is allotted to radio stations without any compensation being paid the Federal Government. Commercial stations enjoying the free use of the air have captured 98 percent of the broadcasting today, while nonprofit-making stations, devoted to educational, religious, cultural, agricultural, and labor purposes have secured only 2 percent.

This amendment does not in any way interfere with the larger stations. They may continue to use all their time for purely profit-making purposes. But when they have these great privileges certainly we ought to insure that a part of radio time shall be used for the public purposes I have indicated. To me the proposition that at least 25 percent should be allocated to nonprofit ventures seems so fair that I cannot understand the opposition to it. I desire to emphasize that at present they get only 2 percent of the time while 98 percent is allotted by our Government, without charge or tax or regulation, to the large stations which have secured a practical monopoly of the air.

I do not need to go into the question of the power of radio stations to disseminate information and to influence opinion, because that is something which we all understand.

Unless there are questions to be asked, that is all I have to say about the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WAGNER. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I am very much in sympathy with the objective which the Senator's amendment contemplates; but the amendment provides:

All existing radio broadcasting licenses issued by the Federal Radio Commission, and any and all rights of any nature contained therein, are declared null and void 90 days following the effective date of this act, anything contained in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

Is there nothing in these radio licenses in the way of a right that must be respected when we come to terminate them?

Mr. WAGNER. Not so far as I know, Mr. President. Let me indicate to the Senator the conditions upon which frequencies are now allotted. They are allotted for a period of 6 months, at the end of which time the Government can say to them, "Your license is at an end, and we are going to give the use of the air on this frequency to some other station."

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I understand that, and I think that is a wise thing to do; but prior to that time have the stations holding licenses no rights which the Government is bound to respect in any way when it comes to terminate them?

Mr. WAGNER. None, except that I suppose termination must be in accordance with public convenience and necessity. I know of no other rights which the stations acquire. Let me read to the Senator the condition of the application:

Applicant waives any claim to the use of any particular frequency, or of the ether, as against the regulatory power of the United States because of the previous use of the same, whether by license or otherwise, and requests a station license in accordance with this application.

Mr. BORAH. It is true that the stations get no vested right; but during the time the license is in existence do they not enter into obligations with people for the use of the stations?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; but they cannot make their obligations for longer than a period of 6 months, because that is the limit of their grant from the Government.

Mr. BORAH. If this provision were to the effect that upon the termination of the several contracts, and so forth, the time should be allotted differently, it would be perfectly clear to me that it was a proper thing to do. It seems rather extraordinary that Congress shall declare null and void contracts which have been let under authority of Congress.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator does not mean the contracts between these commercial stations and individuals whom they serve. He has in mind, rather, the length of the license granted to the stations by the Government.

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. As a matter of fact, no license extends beyond a period of 6 months; so, if the time prescribed in this amendment were lengthened to 6 months, perhaps that would take care of the situation.

Mr. BORAH. I think it would.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. DILL. There is not any doubt at all in my mind that Congress does not have the power to cut off these licenses. The decision of the Supreme Court, written by Chief Justice

Hughes last year, while it is broad and sweeping in its declarations that there were no rights beyond the date of the expiration of the license, was equally decisive, I think, that the Commission could not take away the license unless it could be shown that the station had violated the terms of the license, or had violated the law, and a hearing had been held and the license revoked. I think there is no question at all about that.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator mean that the Government which gives a license to a station for a period of 6 months, cannot revoke it at the end of the 6 months?

Mr. DILL. Oh, no; but the Senator is saying "3 months."

Mr. WAGNER. Very well. I will consult the co-author of the amendment upon that proposition. If there is any fear that 90 days is too short a time, I am quite willing to make it extend to the expiration of the particular license in existence when the act takes affect. May I ask the co-author of the amendment his view in that respect?

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I think that adjustment should be made. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; I am quite willing to have that done, and I thank the Senator for the suggestion.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I do not like the kind of legislation that the amendment carries, and yet at the same time it seems to me that it is quite essential that something of this sort should be done.

Ever since the radio has been an agency of communication there has been complaint about the slight attention given to matters of an educational character, cultural, as well as religious. I very much dislike to write into the law any compulsion. It is rather antagonistic to my way of thinking of things; and yet I believe everyone must be impressed with the pollution of the air for commercial purposes until it is actually nauseating. The practice is to turn off the radio about as quickly as one gets to it, because so much of the matter broadcast is offensive. Whether or not the extent to which we are going here is justifiable is still a question in my mind.

The Senator from New York probably will recall that some time ago I offered an amendment to the Radio Act allocating not less than 15 percent of the time for educational purposes. I never could get any reaction in favor of it. As soon as it was offered, the stations began a propaganda against it; just why I do not know; and the same thing would be true here.

Whether or not this is the way to place a greater emphasis on the things that are really worth while than merely matters of trade and barter is still a matter of doubt in my mind. I like the suggestion that the Commission shall be authorized to make a study of the subject, but I rather feel inclined to vote for this amendment.

Mr. DILL and Mr. WAGNER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that this amendment does not propose at all what the Senator proposed in the amendment to which he refers. He proposed that the time allotted should be used by educational stations, presumably for educational purposes; but subsection (g) of this amendment provides that the so-called "religious, educational, or agricultural nonprofit stations" are to sell time in the commercial field sufficient to pay for the maintenance of the stations.

I am informed by those who ought to know about the radio business that probably two thirds of the existing radio stations are not able to do more than pay for their own maintenance now. Thus, it is proposed by this amendment to grant 25 percent of the radio facilities to those who call themselves educational, religious, nonprofit stations, but who in reality are planning to enter the commercial field and sell a tremendous amount of their time for commercial purposes. That is not what the people of this country are asking for.

Mr. FESS. That is not quite what I had in mind.

Mr. DILL. That is not what the Senator from Ohio proposed; but this amendment is in effect a proposal to transfer the control of 25 percent of the radio facilities to organizations or individuals who say that they desire to broadcast for nonprofit purposes, but who are allowed to sell time to commercial purchasers; and if time is sold to a commercial purchaser, he is going to advertise. He is not going to pay for time unless he does advertise.

In my judgment, therefore, this amendment falls of its own weight.

Mr. COUZENS and Mr. CLARK addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, may I point out that section (g) of this amendment does not require any one of these stations to broadcast any religious or educational programs at all. After having once gotten a license under the provisions of this amendment, the whole time allotted to the station can be used for commercial purposes. That is permissible under the provisions of the last few lines on page 2 of the amendment.

Mr. FESS. I could hardly support a proposition of that kind.

Mr. KAGNER. Mr. President, of course I deny that statement. There certainly is a difference. I think we must be candid about that—between being able to use for commercial purposes a sufficient time to have the station self-sustaining and making a profit out of it. There is a tremendous difference between the two things.

I am willing that the matter should be safeguarded in any other way, except that I think it is fair that the station should be permitted to do sufficient business to make it self-sustaining. We might put in the amendment, if desired, a stipulation that shall not include wages and salaries paid to anybody, because the people who are interested in this proposal represent the type of station which was in existence earlier in this whole adventure, people who used the air for educational and religious purposes, and who time after time since then—because I myself know something about one instance—made application to the Radio Commission for a little more time to use for such purposes. Instead of that, however, they were set aside, and the large commercial stations, as we know, practically secured a monopoly of the air, because apparently they were more persuasive than the small stations conducted by churches and religious institutions.

It is those institutions which I say we should help. If the Senator wants to safeguard the amendment in any other way, I am quite willing to accept an amendment; but I have had some experience in this matter, and I know exactly what I am talking about.

Let us not be too solicitous for the large stations, commercial stations, which, through the favor of the Government, without giving to it a dollar in return, have secured practically a monopoly of the air. This is just an entering wedge to have the Congress declare that at least part of the time shall be used for other purposes. If there is any safeguard the Senator wants to provide, I am sure that my colleague, who is offering this amendment with me, and I will be glad to accept it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I am familiar with the instance to which the Senator from New York has referred, and in which I think an injustice was done by the Federal Radio Commission to a very worthy radio station operated by a religious order. But the Senator from New York has drawn an amendment, having in mind that one particular case, which would open the door and allow many stations, under the guise of religious and educational enterprises, to come in to compete with commercial companies. I happen to know something about that matter myself, as the Senator from New York says he knows about the case of the Paulist Fathers.

In Missouri there were several stations ostensibly organized for religious purposes or for educational purposes, but which, as a matter of fact, were profit-making institutions. As the Senator from Washington said a moment ago, they were simply organized under the guise of religious or educational institutions for the purpose of competing with ordinary radio stations.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. The Radio Commission would have power to inquire whether a station represented a profit-making or a non-profit-making institution, and the former would be denied the privileges granted by the amendment. I am quite willing to accept any language which any Senator might offer to insure that only non-profit-making organizations would be encompassed. I hold no brief against the commercial stations, but I do not believe they are entitled to 98 percent of the time. Under the amendment, they will still have 75 percent of it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I take it that this matter never would have reached the floor of the Senate if there had been some elasticity and yielding on the part of the Radio Commission. I tried, and I have no doubt my colleague has tried, from what he said here today, to get the Commission to make certain concessions which, it seems to me, might have been done; but those concessions were not made. So this particular station has no other means of relief except to come here.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will my colleague permit me to say a word?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I hope my colleague will not create the impression that this amendment is offered to help one particular station. I believe thoroughly in the principle underlying the amendment. I am one of those public officials who is tired of a few radio stations having a complete monopoly of the air, and using it purely for commercial purposes.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

Mr. FESS. I have yielded to the senior Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I venture to say that this matter would not have reached the floor of the Senate except for the need of the particular station at the moment, but, nevertheless, the need of that station has emphasized the need of other stations.

I can see no reason why we should not pass a general law which would make it possible for these educational and religious radio stations to broadcast the material they have to broadcast. Why should they not be given the opportunity to sell a part of their time in order to pay the costs of the station? Of course, the commercial stations are making tremendous sums out of the sale of radio time, and, personally, I am glad of that; nevertheless, there is no reason why church bodies and educational institutions should not have the opportunity of taking some of the channels and making use of them for educational and religious purposes primarily, and, incidentally, selling some of the time in order that they may recoup the great expenses involved, because the cost of radio broadcasting is very high. Certainly, as I view it, the amendment offered by my colleague is a perfectly proper one, and should be adopted.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. I may say to the Senator from New York that the amendment is here, in my judgment, because of the support given it by the National Education Association of America.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I must confess that no particular institution, outside of the educational movement, actuated me in introducing the amendment 4 years ago, and in pressing it, though not unduly, because I had the hope that the reform would ultimately be made without any legislation. Nothing that has been said in reference to any particular interest has had any effect upon my mind. My only concern is that the air should not be polluted, as is permitted to be done, and when we know that it is the profit element that is back of that pollution and makes it possible, it occurs to me that we ought to correct the situation, if that is injurious to the public thinking of the country.

I should hesitate to have Congress do anything that would lead to prescribing what could go over the radio and what could not go over the radio. I would not vote for anything of that sort; I would not want to censor the air; but I do think that there ought to be some assurance that there should be some reform of the present situation, with which everybody is now acquainted. For that reason I have been more or less inclined to vote for some measure that will insure to the country some relief along the line that has been urged so long by the National Education Association. The amendment which I offered was to carry out the wishes of a great body of our people. As I said, I have not pressed it, because I had hoped that under pressure of public opinion the correction would be made without any legislation.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. DILL. I wish to call the attention of the Senator in that connection to a resolution adopted by the Committee on the Use of Radio as a Cultural Agency in a Democracy, which met here in Washington on May 7 and 8 under the auspices of the National Committee on Education by Radio at the Interior Building. Among the various paragraphs they adopted in their resolution I call attention to one. I may say that this amendment was called to the attention of that body. I read:

IMPARTIAL STUDIES

Thorough, adequate, and impartial studies should be made of the cultural implications of the broadcasting structure to the end that specific recommendations can be made for the control of that medium to conserve the greatest social-welfare values. These studies should also include an appraisal of the actual and potential cultural values of broadcasting; the effective means for the protection of the rights of children, of minority groups, of amateur radio activities, and of the sovereignty of individual States; the public services rendered by broadcasting systems of other nations; international relationships in broadcasting.

In other words, they do not recommend the adoption of this amendment. They recommend, rather, a study. While they set out some things which are not in the provision of the bill as to studies, it is clear that they are not ready to recommend that 25 percent of the facilities be set aside for educational and religious institutions.

Let me call to the attention of the Senator why what they say is so. It costs a tremendous amount of money to build large radio stations. The religious and educational and cultural organizations do not have the money necessary, and they are trying to work out some system whereby existing stations may be used, probably in addition to the 63 stations which already are in operation, of an educational and nonprofit nature, and still not be burdened with the great expense of building stations.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. FESS. For a moment.

Mr. WAGNER. May I suggest that the Radio Commission has been studying this question since its formation. And while all this study has been going on, application after application for educational purposes has been denied, while the commercial radio stations have kept growing, growing, growing, growing until they have obtained 98 percent of the total facilities. What is the good of this kind of study, and how much more of it do we need? It seems to me it is now time for a congressional declaration of policy.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator from New York makes rather a strong statement, and it is very impressive. He states that during all the period when there was opportunity for study, we end up with a slight 2 percent of the use of the time for culture. That is a very strong statement, and it is persuasive on the minds of us all.

Since we are creating a specific commission which has to deal with this problem, along with others, and this one, it seems to me, is commanding, I still am concerned about whether it would not be better for the Congress to definitely instruct the proposed commission to report, on this particular subject, rather than for us to write the provision into statute law at this time. In fact, Mr. President, it was my thought that in reporting the bill we ought to confine the bill to the recommendations of the President. It was thought in the committee that we would have to go further than that. My thought was that if we confined the bill to the recommendations of the President, then the commission could go into all these subjects and make their recommendations as a commission to Congress for any needed legislation, in the same way as we look to the Interstate Commerce Commission for recommendations for such amendments to the transportation act as they deem wise.

I should have much preferred to have limited the legislation in such manner. I could have voted for it with much more freedom than I will vote for this provision, because it goes considerably further than I wanted to go.

My only purpose in rising is to state that I am disgusted, as I know a great portion of our people are disgusted, with the pollution of the air for mere commercial purposes. How to correct the situation is a problem. I should prefer to leave it to the study of a select group, which ought to be able to tell us the possibilities of correcting the situation, rather than to write it into the law at the present time, and yet I have an open mind on this subject.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, as a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, I join with Senator WAGNER in the presentation of the amendment which directs the communication commission created by this bill to allocate and assign to educational, religious, labor, farm, fraternal, cooperative, and other institutions dedicated to human welfare and higher education, 25 percent of the radio facilities under control of the Government.

Mr. President, this amendment is offered with the hope that Members of the Senate interested in retaining private initiative in business, with a greater knowledge of the past than is indicated by those in control of commercial radio stations of today, will benefit by past experiences.

Education has been carried to a greater degree in our country than any country in the world. The aim and the object of almost every family is to secure a better education for the children than the parents themselves were permitted to secure. Untold sacrifices have been made by millions of parents of our country to provide a higher education for their offspring.

My State, as many others, provides a State university, at the expense of the taxpayer, for higher education of those who will give the time to secure it.

Despite, Mr. President, the $636,000,000 which the citizens of our country give toward education privately, despite the $2,822,000,000 spent by the National, State, and other political subdivisions of government, at the expense of the taxpayer, for education, we find that radio is today so commercialized that less than 2⅕ percent of radio time is controlled by educational institutions.

The annual report of the Federal Commissioner of Education indicates that there are some 30,000,000 of our people attending day schools and colleges. These schools employ more than 1,300,000 teachers.

Yearly we spend some $3,000,000,000 on education, 88 percent of which is raised by taxation and the balance is contributed for the support of private schools and colleges in the form of tuition and donations.

Education is, or was, a State function, but is supported chiefly by local taxation. Education was a State function until our schools developed extension courses and radio became an interstate rather than a State or a local matter.

Education is defined in Webster's International Dictionary as—

> The process of developing mentally or morally; to cultivate, develop, or expand the mind; the impartation of or acquisition of knowledge, skill, or discipline of character.

The Federal Commissioner of Education states:

> Human education is a process of individual growth and development beginning with birth and ending only with death, requiring at the outset much effort on the part of others in discovering, nourishing, and directing inherent potentialities, but, at every stage, demanding increasing, self-reliance and self-control.

The interest of the American people in education may be judged from the fact that the value of public-school properties in 1920 were less than $3,000,000,000, while in 1930 our schools carried a value of more than $6,000,000,000, or an increase in 10 years of more than 100 percent. These figures do not include colleges or schools for higher education.

The question has been raised as to who is interested in promoting the adoption of the amendment offered by Senator WAGNER and myself. The answer could well be that every parent, every one of our 1,300,000 teachers, every one of the 30,000,000 attending our schools and colleges seeking an education is interested. And, we might well add, every thoughtful American who realizes that an educated people is an asset of more value than either wealth or physical power.

Indeed, Mr. President, the boys and girls of today are the greatest assets that the American people possess for America.

Naturally, were it possible for all of these many millions to make their demands heard, there would be but little, if any, hesitancy in the speedy adoption of the amendment which has been presented.

The educational, religious, labor, and other groups, however, realizing how this wonderful instrument for education—radio—has been monopolized for private profit, have organized, and they have unanimously demanded that legislation whereby the Radio Commission will be directed to assign a fair portion of the radio facilities to educational and other non-profit-making bodies be enacted by the Congress.

The National Education Association, the National Association of State Universities, the National University Extension Association, the National Association of Parents and Teachers, the National Association of Land Grant Colleges and Universities, among others, have petitioned for this legislation through which the radio can be made available for the purpose of spreading education and culture among our millions of radio listeners.

The Reverend John B. Harney, superior general of the Paulist Fathers, appeared before the Interstate Commerce Committee and made a valiant plea for radio facilities to be assigned to educational institutions and other human-welfare, non-profit-making groups.

The National Committee on Education by Radio, sets forth the following:

> That colleges and universities, with radio broadcasting stations, have in their possession one of the most powerful and effective tools for popular education which exists at the present time.
>
> That the broadcasting activities of educational institutions should be looked upon as major educational enterprises within these institutions, comparable in service and importance with other major departments.
>
> That the officers of these institutions, their boards of control, and legislative bodies to which they look for appropriations should regard their services to individual students and the general public rendered by means of radio as an important and appropriate extension and supplement to similar services rendered within the classrooms of the institution.
> That such services have a valid claim to public support and justify expenditure for equipment and personnel.
>
> That the use of radio broadcasting as a constructive educational procedure is in its infancy, and, Mr. President, education by radio will remain in its infancy unless the Congress of the United States takes a hand and apportions a part of the vast radio opportunity, supposedly controlled by the Government, which can be sent broadcast throughout the country.
> That the radio channels which are now in the possession of institutions are immensely valuable; that they should be retained and their use further developed, looking toward the growth of adult education which is now taking place throughout the country.
> That this development of programs of adult education by radio stations associated with educational institutions will help to offset the present tendency toward centralization and network monopoly.

The National Committee on Education by Radio looks upon the service of radio stations associated with educational institutions as a service of the whole people. Such service is one of the highest uses to which this national resource can be put. Because such service concerns the entire body of citizens, it should be given first place when the question of assigning radio channels is before legislative bodies, the Federal Radio Commission, or the courts.

I have been reading from the report on Education by Radio, volume 2, nos. 1–27, inclusive, January 7–December 8, 1932, National Committee on Education by Radio.

Mr. President, it may be contended that commercial radio stations present educational programs or offer their facilities to educational institutions and other bodies for the presentation of such programs. The graciousness of these commercial stations may well be gaged by the time allotted such organizations as the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, the 4-H Clubs, and several other farm groups who collectively receive 1 hour each Saturday noon from the National Broadcasting Co. or the American School of the Air, promoted by the Columbia Broadcasting System, on weekdays about noon. A recent survey reveals that of the time assigned by commercial stations to educational or cultural programs, 80 percent is known as "sustaining time", when these stations would be presenting some programs at their own cost because of the inability to sell this time for advertising programs. Such is the attitude of those who are in control of the radio stations of this country toward those who are interested in educational movements by use of the air.

Educational institutions possessing radio stations are assigned mainly daytime operation, when it is common knowledge that the great mass of our people listen in after 6 o'clock at night.

The United States possesses 444 radio quota units, and the Federal Radio Commission has graciously assigned 9.61 units to educational institutions, or less than 2.2 percent of the radio facilities at their disposal.

As an example of how the Federal Radio Commission has treated our educational institutions that wish to operate radio stations, I might add that one of the pioneer educational institutions found itself on a channel with 51 stations broadcasting advertising and amusements.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], one of the radio experts of the Congress, is quoted in Education by Radio, issue of February 4, 1932, on his return from Europe, in part as follows:

American radio is weakest on the educational side. Education over the radio should be free from commercial interests. It should be independent and free, just as our systems of public education are free and independent.

Mr. President, when, may I ask, are we going to have freedom for the educational institutions of America in the use of the radio, unless the Congress of the United States shall undertake at this time to direct the commission which is soon to be in control of radio to do something that will give educational opportunities to the boys and girls who are now suffering from the lack of such opportunities?

Representative E. L. Davis, at the time Chairman of the House Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries, is quoted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 10, 1932, as stating:

All the broadcasting stations in America combined only have $28,000,000 invested in their stations and all of their equipment and apparatus, whereas the great listening public of America has $100,000,000 invested in receiving sets.

That is a remarkable statement.

A national conference held May 7 and 8, 1934, on the use of radio as a cultural agency in a democracy, was called by the National Committee on Education by Radio. The conference consisted of the following members, whose names I ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks. The members of the conference of the committee are representative men in the educational movement, and are connected with colleges, universities, and State institutions throughout the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, if this amendment should be rejected, it would simply mean that the educational institutions of our country, and those who seek programs of a cultural type, will be forced to support government ownership and control of all radio facilities, which will be their only means of providing the people of this country with the type of programs which the average man or woman will welcome into his or her home.

I think, Mr. President, that those who control the radio industry, if we may call it such, are short-sighted. I think they ought to be willing to concede to the educational institutions of America an opportunity to go upon the air and at seasonable hours, which will give those who wish to listen in an opportunity to hear what some of our great educators have to say.

Mr. President, we are the only important country in the world that places control of radio facilities in the hands of those who seek private profit. Canada and England, as well as most other countries, own and control their radio facilities, and, unless this amendment, or some legislation of similar type shall soon be enacted into law, the Congress of the United States will find it essential and necessary to possess and to operate all radio facilities for the benefit of the people as a whole. The retort of those who now operate commercial radio stations to this suggestion may be that we would be placing a tremendous power politically in the administration which happens to be in power. I admit that such may be true, but I do not know of any administration which might be in power which would have a greater control over the radio facilities of this country than is possessed at the present time by an administration which is not held responsible for its own acts.

At this point, Mr. President, I ask that there be inserted as a part of my remarks an article printed in the May 13, 1934, issue of the Chicago Tribune.

RADIO CHAINS SEEK "STAND-IN" AT WHITE HOUSE—THEY FACE PERIL OF BEING CRACKED-DOWN ON

By Arthur Sears Henning

WASHINGTON, D.C., May 13 (special).—The significant and often amusing scramble of the great radio-broadcasting chains for the "inside track" at the White House and the Radio Commission prophetically illuminates the predicament in which the telegraph and telephone systems, the news agencies, and the newspapers will find themselves if Congress places them under the control of the proposed Government commission.

With the White House dictating decisions of the Radio Commission and cracking down on radio interests in disfavor, it has become a matter of vital importance for them to stand in with the powers that be.

During the Hoover administration it was the National Broadcasting Co., with 15 broadcasting stations, itself a subsidiary of the Radio Corporation of America with several thousand licenses at stake, that enjoyed preferential favor at the White House.

ENCOUNTERS ROUGH GOING

For the past year, under the Roosevelt administration, the Columbia Broadcasting System, with eight broadcasting licenses at stake, has been closer to the throne than its rival has been. Columbia has had little difficulty in getting anything it wanted from the White House and the Commission, while N.B.C. has encountered a lot of rough going.

With all communications under control of a Government commission, the wire services, the news-gathering agencies, and the newspapers undoubtedly would be scrambling in like manner for White House favor to promote their interests and avert official cracking down. The newspapers particularly would be at the mercy of the power of the White House to direct a censorship of telegraphic news dispatches.

The Columbia Broadcasting System, having been less fortunate than N.B.C. under the Hoover regime, set out to change its luck when the Roosevelt administration came into power. It placed in charge of its Washington headquarters Henry A. Bellows, vice president of the system, who previously had been in charge of the system's northwestern territory with headquarters at Minneapolis. Mr. Bellows is a Democrat, a former member of the Radio Commission, and a friend of President Roosevelt, their friendship dating from their youth at Harvard, where Mr. Roosevelt was in the class of 1904 and Mr. Bellows in the class of 1906.

NEVER GOES BEYOND SECRETARY

Mr. Bellows, who is a man of great ability and of the highest character, says he never has presumed upon the friendship to get favors from the White House. He never has gone higher than a secretary to the President to get what he wanted. As chairman of the legislative committee of the National Association of Broadcasters Mr. Bellows also comes into close contact with the legislative branch of the Government.

The Roosevelt administration was no sooner established in power than Mr. Bellows on March 18, 1933, announced:

"Assurance of full and complete cooperation has been given directly to the President, to all the members of his Cabinet, and to the leaders of the Senate and House of Representatives. Furthermore, as a matter of public policy during the present emergency, we limit broadcasts of public events and discussions of public questions by ascertaining that such programs are not contrary to the policies of the United States Government."

COLUMBIA HAS INSIDE TRACK

The word soon went forth that Columbia had the inside track at the White House and it later appeared that equally close relations had been established between the Washington staff of the broadcasting system and officers of the radio committee.

At this juncture the National Broadcasting Co. began to betray signs of anxiety. It was bruited about that N.B.C. was in disfavor because its president, Merlin Hally Aylesworth, not only was a dyed-in-the-wool Republican but had asserted during the 1932 campaign that if Roosevelt were elected he would leave the country. Of course this placed Mr. Aylesworth poles asunder from Mr. Bellows, who was an F.R.B.C. [for Roosevelt before Chicago].

The Washington representative of N.B.C. in a personal interview sought to convince the President that Mr. Aylesworth never uttered the damning statement attributed to him. Mr. Roosevelt told the emissary he was sure Mr. Aylesworth never said it, but the President gave the assurance to the accompaniment of a hilarity that did not altogether allay anxiety. Presently, however, N.B.C. made a move calculated to curry favor at the White House. It replaced its Washington news commentator, William Hard, close friend of former President Hoover, with the brother-in-law of one of the President's secretaries.

HIGH SALARY, LONG-TERM CONTRACT

Columbia has a long record of unusual favors from the Radio Commission going back several years, but becoming more pronounced since the advent of the Roosevelt administration. Another of its vice presidents is Sam Pickard, a former member of the Commission, who resigned February 1, 1929, and went directly to Columbia at a high salary on a long-term contract.

While Mr. Pickard was a member of the Commission, WKRC, a Cincinnati (Ohio) broadcasting station, was able to procure from the Commission an exceedingly favorable wave length, which was transferred from an inferior assignment. It was charged that this was done in violation of all sound engineering considerations, for it immediately caused destructive interference with other stations on the same wave length at St. Louis and Buffalo.

On June 15, 1929, the Commission, without a hearing or a notice to anyone, increased WKRC's hours of operation to unlimited time, and on December 16 increased the power of the station from 500 to 1,000 watts on an "experimental" basis. The power has never been reduced, although at a subsequent hearing interference was conclusively shown by the stations affected. Mr. Bellows says that since the installation of a directional antenna by WKRC there has been no interference and the protests have been withdrawn. This is disputed by representatives of the complaining stations.

TRANSFER OF OWNERSHIP

In the summer of 1929 there was a formal transfer of the ownership of WKRC to Mr. Pickard and J. S. Boyd, a lawyer who frequently had handled radio cases before the Radio Commission and had been in particularly close contact with Mr. Pickard while the latter was a member of the Commission. It is not known when Messrs. Pickard and Boyd purchased the station or how much they paid for it.

It is known, however, that soon after the Commission granted WKRC the 100-percent increase in power they sold the station to WKRC, Inc., which is virtually a 100-percent subsidiary of the Columbia Broadcasting System. Columbia is said to have paid approximately $300,000 for the interest in the station of Messrs. Pickard and Boyd.

What I stand for is the placing of responsibility in the administration of radio facilities and fixing that responsibility so that those who represent our educational system may know where to go in order to get what they are entitled to in the way of recognition on the air.

Mr. President, I have no criticism to make of the personnel of the Radio Commission, except that their refusal literally to carry out the law of the land warrants the Congress of the United States writing into legislation the desire of Congress that educational institutions be given a specified portion of the radio facilities of our country.

As was pointed out so ably by my colleague from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Radio Act and the amendments thereto specifically provide that the holder of a broadcasting franchise shall obtain no property or vested right in the air. Yet the rules of the Radio Commission are such that those who possess clear-channel stations under the rules of the Radio Commission are vested with the right to prevent the Radio Commission itself from placing any other broadcasting station, no matter how many hundreds or thousands of miles apart any of these clear-channel stations may be, on the same wave length. This is a clear violation of the letter and the intent of the Radio Act and the amendments thereto.

When the radio trusts sought to deprive the Chicago Federation of Labor, which operates Station WCFL, about a year and a half ago, of the right to operate after 6 p.m. days, I had no hesitancy in introducing a bill in this body compelling the Radio Commission to respect the rights of the representatives of the American Federation of Labor and the Chicago labor organization. Before the committee was through hearing the evidence which was presented by the representatives of the American Federation of Labor and the Chicago labor organization a concession was made, and WCFL, the broadcasting station which had been erected by that organization at an expense to the labor group of some four hundred or five hundred thousand dollars, was allowed to broadcast and is now being operated and enjoyed by the American Federation of Labor and the Chicago labor movement.

This amendment, presented jointly by Senator WAGNER and myself, is not at all cumbersome, as it simply directs the new Communications Commission to allocate 25 percent of the radio facilities to stations devoted to education and human welfare. As my colleague, in offering this amendment, pointed out a while ago, if there is any thought upon the part of anyone in this body that these groups may undertake to overcommercialize their stations, we will agree to an amendment which will safeguard for all time what this amendment proposes, which is that this 25-percent allocation shall be made for the sole purpose of providing educational facilities and permitting the radio stations to be self-sustaining only.

This is not class legislation, as no one class of our people will secure any gain by this legislation. The gain will be that of all our people, as I believe all our people are interested in education and human welfare.

Mr. President, during the past 3 years education has suffered more acutely as a result of the depression than has any other department or activity of our Government. Many thousands of our schools have been closed and many hundreds of our colleges have been forced to continue on greatly curtailed appropriations. In many sections of my own State teachers went for months, almost for a period of a year, without any compensation for the services rendered by them in instructing the boys and girls of different communities.

Time after time have representatives from outstanding institutions come to Washington and insisted that those who had the authority to negotiate loans should grant them a loan, but so far as I know, up to the present time, no relief has been granted to any such institution.

Radio broadcasting reaches many millions of our people daily. The educators and others in our country who are seeking to build a higher standard for all Americans are denied opportunities which they should have. To my mind, these worthy organizations should be accorded the facility which they can so effectively use for the common good, and, I sincerely trust that the Senate will insist on the adoption of the pending amendment which is beneficial to so many and which is harmful to but few. And I might add that unless legislation of this type is soon enacted the few who might be injured by the amendment may find themselves bereft of the business they are now engaged in as the Congress will find it essential and necessary to take over all radio facilities and operate them for the common good.

Mr. President, in closing I ask to have inserted in the RECORD an article published in the Forum of February 1934 by an outstanding writer who was formerly connected with one of the great political organizations of the country and who has had personal experience in dealing with the subject of radio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACHMAN in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Forum, February 1934]

RADIO NEEDS A REVOLUTION

By Eddie Dowling

The state of radio today is one of legal chaos. It is a chaos that has been perpetuated indefinitely by the congressional act of 1927—an act founded on accident and ignorance and jealously guarded by the powerful monopoly that today wields an iron mace over the entire radio field.

It has never been fully realized that radio is a public utility—a public utility whose existence is not yet vital in the public welfare (though it is rapidly becoming so), but which is nevertheless capable, if properly organized and operated, of being a tremendous influence for the general good. At the same time, radio has one organic characteristic which sets it apart from the industries we ordinarily regard as public utilities and makes desirable a somewhat different organization and treatment of it; it partakes very distinctly of the nature of journalism. In view of this fact, both Government ownership and regulated monopoly lose the attractiveness they have as a plan of operation for the average public utility. Nobody wants the great newspapers of the country to be controlled by the Government, nor is their control by one great pool of ownership and interest a happy prospect from the standpoint of vigorous, disinterested journalism. Thus it becomes evident that we must seek a solution for the problems of radio in another quarter.

II

Let us go back for a moment. It is not our purpose here to discuss how the radio business came, or rather grew, into the hands of the electrical business. Probably it was because radio developed with such stunning speed that nobody realized what it would be good for when perfected. It is our concern, however, to ask why radio broadcasting today should be in the hands of electrical combines. The invention of the linotype did not turn the policy and practice of journalism over to mechanics and machinery salesmen. Nor did the invention of talking pictures turn the film industry over to sound engineers or apparatus salesmen. And yet radio, already as great a factor in our national life as one of these and rapidly becoming a serious rival of the other, is and always has been dominated absolutely by the close-knit industries of its technical manufacturing and production branches.

If this domination had advanced the best interests or raised the standards of either public or radio, we might say that the end justified the means and allow it to continue for the sake of the results it was producing. The contrary, however, has been only too true. The public has been ignored in the frantic rush to obtain contracts from the advertisers, who are not always as closely in touch with public sentiment as they think. And what has been done with the income from the fat advertising fees? Their recipients have built up an impregnable monopoly that has crushed enterprise, originality, and profit uniformly in the small, local station. It is a talent monopoly, possible because theatrical or any other talent gravitates naturally to a few great centers; and by giving the local station as little as 20 percent of its regular card rate for a place in the network program, its holders force the independent station to string along or go out of business. Usually it has chosen the former.

The result of all this is that the two dominating factors in radio receive from advertising and from artist's bureau commissions an income of $40,000,000 a year, and at the same time it is an economic impossibility to operate profitably more than a fraction of the 600 radio stations in the country.

And what of the programs sponsored by the advertisers who are pouring this wealth into the coffers of the monopoly? Let me quote a comment by "Aircaster", well-known radio critic for the daily newspapers: "All radio programs have two points in common: one is lack of originality, the other is banality of commercial announcements."

In my opinion the unfortunate truth in this statement is the result of radio's utter neglect of both theatrical experience and editorial judgment. Absence of showmanship and lack of theater-sense are conspicuous over the air. And whereas journalism realizes that value to advertisers of commercial material cannot continue to increase if news, entertainment, or other interest value decreases, radio in its mad quest for profits has not stopped to realize anything of the sort. Hence it has never exercised normal editorial supervision of programs in the interest of listeners. It has sold its front page, sold its editorial page, sold anything and everything without reservation to keep that rich income rolling in. I will not pause to quote a certain proverb concerning a goose and an egg. I will repeat, however, one more comment by "Aircaster": "Radio advertising is at a point where it is possible to claim anything, deny everything, and prove nothing."

III

On two further points has the radio industry in its present state failed to come up to a reasonable standard. The first of these is presentation of that type of program best known as cultural or educational. Many people will insist that the inclusion of material of this type is a duty, a positive obligation of radio to the public. Now this is at best a debatable point if radio is to be operated under private ownership and on a profit basis. But no matter what one's personal conclusions on the subject, there is still good ground for argument that in neglecting nearly all but the most trivial, most banal sources of entertainment the radio and its advertisers are blind to an opportunity for capturing the valuable interest of that portion of the public which is capable of appreciating better program standards. It is a small portion, to be sure, but let it be remembered that there are newspapers which make a conscious editorial effort to maintain standards above those of the average, and that newspapers are run on advertising revenue. And why cannot the radio raise its standards? Simply because of the present network system, on which any sponsored program, because there are but a very few channels in which to put it on the air, must suit its material to the average of millions of listeners.

Judicious division of networks and more local autonomy in program selection would enable the comparatively small audience of intelligence to be reached by programs of a higher standard. No advertising sponsor is going to pay the inflated rates of large-network time when he suspects that half the audience is tuning off because the program is highbrow. And no private broadcasting company is going to substitute cultural (and unsponsored) programs for lowbrow sponsored time because somebody has told him it is his duty.

Finally we come to a consideration which to me, because of my long association with the theatrical world and those whose life work lies in it, is the strongest of all. The fact is that the present radio monopoly based on the existing grouping of talent centers is working a tremendous handicap on the actors, musicians, and vaudevillians of the country. The radio and the talking pictures have thrown into unemployment many thousands of them—thousands who have never been trained for other means of livelihood.

It is true that none can expect to escape the inevitable law of changing conditions. But this is nevertheless a serious problem, and certain management methods in radio are detrimental to talent and public alike. Not only has the closed-corporation situation been heavily responsible for producing the present disastrous unemployment, but it is also continually aggravating it. It is becoming increasingly difficult for artists without national reputations to obtain radio trials at all; virtually impossible for those not close to one of the very few centers of broadcasting. Not only that, but such artists as do obtain radio employment are completely at the mercy of the financial and other policies dictated by the advertisers and broadcasters together. Taken all in all, the sum of complaints against the present organization and operation of radio is a heavy one.

IV

Let me say now that I am emphatically opposed to the so-called "European system" of broadcasting. As I have already stated, I am convinced that radio is becoming too nearly a branch of journalism to warrant any form of Government ownership or operation. My proposal is as follows:

Five million dollars is ample revenue for a year's operation of a network of moderate size. The two dominating networks of today have an annual income of about $40,000,000. Let us have, instead of three principal networks, six or more. Each will be smaller, but these will be able to cover all or very nearly all the territory previously covered by the larger networks. This is because the present pattern of allocation has taken no competent regard of waste in wave-length privilege. Let us organize regional chains of broadcasting stations, grouping high-powered outlets and low-powered separately. For the former let us have the national coverage in the six or more chains suggested above; for the latter let us have local coverage, giving privilege to more talent and program variation of nonnational interest—variation which would nevertheless carry advertising value as long as it were kept on a local basis.

It is, I think, indisputable that more cultural and educational programs than exist at present are desirable. The problem under private ownership is how to obtain sponsorship for them, since they carry less popular entertainment value than the stuffs the average advertiser puts on the air. I have already suggested that with the creation of twice as many national networks than there are today and with the additional program autonomy available to local stations and chains, certain advertisers will find a new field of coverage concentrated in various parts of the country and eager in response to a higher standard of broadcasting. Furthermore, under such a system, the advertiser will be able to reach this group without paying the prohibitive rates of a tremendous network, much of whose coverage is wasted for this purpose anyway.

There is one more point I wish to raise in connection with cultural and educational broadcasting. This is the matter of electrical transcriptions. These the present monopoly has consistently opposed—because of unwelcome competition and for no other reason. But modern recorded programs are technically perfect, and they are economical. They should most certainly be made available in library form for the use of local stations, where they would in most cases be the ideal form for the educational type of broadcast. But first we must get rid of network monopoly.

V

Do not let it be thought that this will be an easy task. The present radio interests are quite pleasantly satisfied with the status quo and quite content with the unlimited franchise granted them by the 1927 act of Congress. Radio is credited with one of the strongest of the swarming lobbies in Washington—one with substance behind it. Members of Congress are dominated by tactics that are constantly under the direction of private interests. Official bodies respond quickly to pressure from corporate organizations as large, as widely distributed, and with so many interlocking interests as some of those maintaining lobbies in the Capital.

The radio monopoly has wide ramifications in the electric-power field—a not insignificant circumstance. The utility method of handling a political grant is based on long practice and proven experience. Small opposition is mashed with an iron fist. More formidable opposition is met with flattery, publicity, and financial and other rewards.

I speak from my own experience. During the last national political campaign I was chairman of the stage, screen, and radio division of the Democratic National Committee. At Warm Springs after the election it was said that I would be consulted in radio matters after the President took office. Another "campaign" resulted. For weeks I was the recipient of obvious attention by executives of broadcasting groups, whose motives I am sure were not based on personal admiration for me.

But I was not able to forget that those behind the scenes in radio had been distinctly unfriendly to Mr. Roosevelt throughout his campaign. Twice he was shut off the air in the midst of an address. Democratic campaign songs and the efforts of stage and screen sources on behalf of the Democratic Party were treated with marked contempt. Political commentators allied with the networks were strong in support of another candidate; peculiarly enough the radio monopoly had been erected and barricaded through three Republican administrations.

Late in the campaign, however, in fact, but a few days before election, the networks decided that the country was to have a new President. A new policy came into existence, remained after Mr. Roosevelt's election, and continued until March. The radio moguls were readjusting their political fences and digging for new foundational contacts with the incoming administration.

The dispensation of radio privilege offers many opportunities for favors. I was offered a vice presidency with a prominent radio chain. Others thought to possess political influence had tempting opportunities put in their paths. Executive positions, profitable contracts on sponsored programs, and the publicity of Nation-wide hook-ups were among these. Congressmen receive broadcasting time for Nation-wide hook-ups. All this is conclusive enough evidence that there is here a private monopoly of immense power intent on playing both ends against the middle and subject to no authority or control except a purely technical supervision of wave-length assignments.

VI

The complicated deals and all the interrelated processes by which money is extracted from the apportionment of radio "in the public interest" are beyond my understanding. Why our Government should be burdened with actual expense as a result of the supervision of this industry is more than I can comprehend. It has cost nearly a million dollars a year of the taxpayers' money to keep in operation the present system of radio control—and look at the control!

Consider, too, a phase of radio as a source of income that is little understood and seldom mentioned. The average electric receiving set consumes current which costs the owner about 75 cents a month, or $12 a year, and adds to a national total of millions of dollars of revenue annually. Where does it go? None, certainly, is credited to the costs of radio operation or development.

Rather we have a situation often duplicated in other fields and very typical of radio itself. Beyond question this electric-power income, or much of it, arrives through interlocking directorates, holding companies, and related corporations literally in the same pockets to which find their way the millions in radio-advertising revenue. And the artist's bureau commissions. And the lion's share of every commercial advertiser's budget for advertising through so-called independent stations all over the country. Indeed, a most effectively organized system!

Our Nation faces more pressing problems than the reorganization of radio, but none more in need of attention when the proper time arrives. And it is reasonably sure that the great and good man in the White House will take some constructive steps when his calendar permits. The President's attitude in the matter of public utilities is well known, and radio is a public utility, with proper emphasis on each descriptive word. It is neither right nor proper that radio should be given into the hands of electrical combines which are permitted to extract every dollar of income, every measure of opportunity, to the exclusion of groups with as much or greater right to editorial, entertaining, and cultural development in the art and industry of broadcasting.

In the meantime the public, the theater, the newspapers, and any others who may have the ill fortune to acquire an interest or a vital concern in the operation of the radio field are permitted to enjoy whatever good luck rather than good management may provide in their interest or for their cooperation. Until we have a new deal—a complete reorganization—of the radio business, this is the situation that prevails.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, as the Senate well knows, for the past year I have been acting as chairman of a special committee on the investigation of crime. If one thing has been brought home to me more than any other, it is the problem of juvenile delinquency. There can be no question, I believe, that every effort in the direction of the prevention of juvenile delinquency is in the interest of good government, good citizenship, and the progress of the Nation.

I have been distressed at the failure of certain branches of the moving-picture industry, and I do not say this in general, because when we regard the moving-picture industry by and large, we must conclude, I am sure, that it has done well in its self-censorship. But in some quarters there is a lamentable failure to appreciate the high place the moving pictures might hold in American life.

So, too, I have been impressed with the importance of the various agencies like the Boy Scouts, the Girl Scouts, and other similar organizations which have to do with the improvement of the life of American youth. As I view the problem we must find ways, too, to make more effective and direct the religious training of our children. Here it is, in my opinion, that the radio can do a much larger part than it has done in the past. I would not wish to disturb the radio industry as it is now organized. But if there is such failure as has been indicated here, to make use of the educational and religious instruction which might be given through this agency, certainly it is time the Senate gave consideration to the subject.

I cannot see why the amendment offered by my colleague the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and the Senator from West Virgina [Mr. HATFIELD] may not be appropriate for adoption by the Senate. I think it would be wise for us to adopt it. If there had been greater readiness on the part of the Radio Commission to deal with the problem it would not have reached us.

The Radio Commission have done a fine job. They have done a splendid work. My sympathies are with them. But there are certain activities which somehow or other have not been taken care of by that body, and this is one of them. If there is no other or better way to deal with it than by the adoption of the amendment, I think the matter should be given this consideration. This appears necessary in order that there may be such use of the radio as to impress upon the American public those ideas in education and religion which are so important to the building of character and to the development of good behavior.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that from the organization of the Radio Commission down to January 1, 1932, only 81 applications were presented to the Commission for educational stations. Of this number 32 were granted in full, 27 in part, 10 were denied, and 10 dismissed at the request of the applicants. Thus there were only 71 who would have taken a license if they could have gotten it. Has the Senator stopped to consider the fact that it is financially impossible for these institutions actually to build and operate these stations without becoming commercial and advertising stations?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; I may say I realize that to be a fact. To operate a radio station costs a lot of money. But if we find a religious or educational body willing to take the chance of disposing of certain commercial time in order that the main objective may be reached, which is the dissemination of religion or education, I think certainly we should give consideration to their willingness to do so.

Mr. DILL. Does not the Senator think a much more practical result might be obtained by working out some system of requiring stations to permit a certain part of their time to be used for these purposes and requiring that in the licenses of existing stations?

Mr. COPELAND. No; I do not think so.

Mr. DILL. That is the only way the religious and educational broadcasts can ever be gotten out to the people generally, because they are the only stations which can get those broadcasts out in that way.

Mr. COPELAND. There is no question that the existing stations have done a great work along the line suggested by the Senator from Washington. For example, in disseminating the sermons which are broadcast every Sunday, there is no doubt that very great good has been done and much happiness brought to the American people. But there are institutions which have definite programs of character building and definite programs in educational development or progress where it is not possible for the casual use of a station now and again to accomplish what the originators of the various programs have in mind. Therefore I believe that where there are educational and religious bodies willing to assume the responsibility of carrying on the work we might well give consideration to permitting them to have the radio channels in order that they may do the work in question.

THE FALSE CRY ON FOREIGN DEBTS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I rise at this moment to address myself not to the measure before the Senate but to a subject that is somewhat akin to the spirit of the discussion; I mean truthful communication. I allude to the situation of the foreign debts and the new attitude disclosed by the debtors to the United States.

I am able to inform this honorable body, patient to hear some views from me, that this morning there is in two of the debtor countries of Europe the circulated statement that there is to come to us as the Senate a message from the President of the United States dealing with the foreign debts. It is asserted in foreign lands that in this message there will be expressions that the representatives of two of our great debtors would have us understand they have been arranged for. This is to take the form of a direction of new adjustment of the debts and a new concession of advantages to the debtors.

Mr. President, I am authorized to say, and by the record to declare, that there is no such arrangement existing between the President of the United States, or those speaking for him, and any foreign debtor, as to what may be the content of the message which will be sent to Congress or to the Senate on the subject of the debts. I am able to go further, upon my own authority, and to say that had there been an effort on the part of any debtor or its representative to dictate to the President of the United States expressions demanded to be contained in his message, such action would have been deeply resented as a violation of good manners, in statesmanship, and flouted as an assumption of insolence.

Mr. President, the public cables bring us the information that one of our great debtors, France, which had previously announced through its official spokesmen that it would pay not one cent, and would take the position of default, now appears through its statesmen to express a wish to send a delegation to the United States for further conference with the Government of our country looking to a new alignment of the obligations, either as to amount or as to the relative dates when the amounts are to be paid. This is a commendable gesture. We are also informed that on the part of one of the other debtors, England, there is a move to reverse the position it had previously announced, which was that it would pay nothing in what was called a token payment or that it would tender one sum of some nature, saying at the time of the tender that we could "take it or leave it", as it would be the only thing that would be proffered us as an acknowledgment of the obligation, or a recognition of the responsibility. This particular debtor, our eminent friend abroad, England, now announces, if we are to accept as authoritative statements from sources on which we ought to be able to rely, that it is willing to make its payment, or at least to assert that the previous declaration of intention not to make payment would not be adhered to; but a tender would be made in some form that would satisfy what is called the oppression of the circumstances.

In other words, boldly our honorable debtors, through their statesmen, assert that the President is being forced to demand recognition of the debt and its acknowledgment, or to assert the debtor to be in default—not because of the justice of the claim but, as proclaimed, because the President is alarmed at what might follow in the coming congressional elections should any attitude of his appear to be in favor of granting to the debtor concessions—and, to use the words of the statesmen of our honorable debtors, all done, when it is done, to serve the exigencies of the coming congressional elections. It is announced that the President is called on to make some show and demonstration of an intent to press the collection and to carry out the law of Congress proclaiming "default" wherever the circumstances are within the law justifying such declaration—all as politics.

Mr. President, I have been constantly attracted during these latter months by the course of our honorable friends abroad in pronouncing that they know each motive that inspires conduct on the part of this Government, and are advised of every influence which they assert impels us to action. I am moved to a spirit of amusement by the daring of the statesmen of these former honorable allies in ever conceiving and accusing that every course of our Government is moved only by what might be called "political expediency" whenever it demands its rights or presumes to demand its justice.

Mr. President, the call by our Nation for the payment of the debts is the expressed demand to have the laws of Congress executed as provided in their terms and directions. We ask that the will of the people, as expressed, be fulfilled.

We are now confronted with a statement from England, through its distinguished representatives, boldly declaring that at the time the moratorium was granted by President Hoover, and at the same time a moratorium was granted by England to Germany, there was an agreement with the then President of the United States that in return for the moratorium granted Germany the debt due to the United States was to be canceled. To use the words coming to us now from the cable, as reported from the expressions of the statesmen of England, it is asserted that in consideration of the moratorium granted no further demand was ever to be made by the United States for payment of the foreign debt by the foreign debtors.

Mr. President, I have on previous occasion stated from this floor that such rumors have been coming to us of this body for some considerable time. Eminent Senators on both sides of the Chamber have both alluded to that shadow and depreciated the sinister shade cast upon honor and fidelity to America. I cannot believe that President Hoover would have made such an agreement. I will not assume that the honorable predecessor of the present President of the United States could have so violated his obligation to his oath and to the Constitution as to have entered, upon his own will and volition, into such a contract without any information to his coadjutor, the Senate, or without consulting in any way the representatives of the American public.

But, Mr. President, it is a matter of very keen concern to us if England really believes that there was such an agreement. Then, sir, we should be put in the position of violating it by demanding payment, and violating the agreement without any knowledge on the part of the present administration or of the representatives on either side of this honorable body of what that agreement was, its terms, and its nature.

I boldly tendered here, but a short time ago, a resolution asking that we might obtain from the State Department information as to whether there is any record of such an arrangement, if such had been reduced to any note of writing. My resolution remains before the appropriate body, the Foreign Relations Committee. The committee has not had opportunity properly to consider the matter and possibly has not found it appropriate to make a report upon such resolution until the information from the State Department could reach the committee in due course and there rightfully be considered. But, Mr. President, if there is in the minds of our honorable debtors the belief that such an arrangement was made which exempted them from any further payment, either by France of her debt or by England of what is called her "token" partial payment, we now demand that these two countries shall please express, through their proper agency, exactly what they claim the agreement was which they profess to have been entered into by the President of the United States in our behalf and by their representatives who visited here in the United States in their behalf.

We ask that the details of it be made clear and, whatever they have in the way of a document that discloses such, that the content be exposed; and we will know, in its disclosure, exactly upon what they stand. Otherwise we are being placed in the position of violating an honorable agreement which they assume was made with the President of the United States in the discharge of his privilege of being something of the voice of our country in international matters; and this in consideration, as is intimated, that if they gave, to wit, England relief and moratorium to Germany, our President would trade them exemption from their obligation owed the United States.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACHMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield gladly.

Mr. CLARK. I know that when my distinguished colleague says that we would be put in the position of having violated an honorable agreement, he does not mean to convey the impression that the President of the United States has any right to make an agreement reducing the foreign debts due the United States, or that the responsible ministers of foreign countries are not chargeable with notice of our system of Government and do not know that the President of the United States had no right to make any such agreement—a thing which I very much doubt.

Mr. LEWIS. My able friend from Missouri correctly construes our situation. It is not that we would be put in the position as of ourselves violating an agreement, for we recognize that no such agreement could rightfully be made; but I did assert that, unhappily for us, in the countries of Europe, where the charge is being made, we are there put in the light of a country violating an honorable agreement.

I therefore ask for some evidence of the agreement. I ask the content of the paper. I ask for the repeating of the conversation or colloquy upon which those who make the intimation rest the charge.

Mr. President, I say, agreeing with the Senator from Missouri, that everyone in this body recognizes that there never was such an authority in any President; and I cannot conceive, with great respect to the honor of the distinguished predecessor of our present President, that such an agreement really was ever made. I cannot but bring myself to the conclusion that the administrations in power of certain of our honorable debtors are presenting this claimed fact to their own people as an apparent excuse for not having done that which would be called honorable in government, the discharge of the obligations, or, sir, of acknowledging the obligation, in any effort to discharge it or ameliorate it, by whatever term they could present and we could accept.

Mr. President, we are charged with seeking the collection of a debt which, it is said, is unfair for us to do. At this point I ask consideration of a bit of history now being applied to our country.

The Government of Monaco, little government as it is, but stimulated by the political agencies of France, and encouraged and endorsed by the political agency of England, is now asserting that it is bringing a suit in a court and asks the privilege of suing before that "court", as it is called, the League of Nations Court, as it now exists, by proceeding against the State of Mississippi, on the ground that the State of Mississippi of the United States is a defaulter in not paying the bonds which, it is contended, the Government of Monaco owns and which came to it by purchase from either of these other governments to which I have alluded. These bonds were issued in the era of the late Civil War between the States.

They cry out against us that we will not pay our debts for that the United States, as they have it, will not make the State of Mississippi pay its debt, unconscious of the theory of our Government, by which no such authority on the part of the Federal Government over a State is ever indulged. Nevertheless, Mr. President, at the same time, we are being held up as defaulters and unworthy of the confidence of mankind and the endorsement of the financial world upon the basis of honor. These distinguished debtors hold us up before the world as defaulters while at the same time withholding their payments of the debts due the United States. I am compelled to call attention to these records and let all nations behold the situation and judge by comparison.

Mr. President, here I now ask, Who is it that is seeking to have these debts canceled, diminished, reduced through forgetfulness, ignored by inaction, that the result may come forth a little later in the expression that the debts are an obstruction to the harmony of nations and therefore should be abolished?

Mr. President, we have certain eminent financiers in the United States who have certain claims upon either the business houses of our debtors or upon the governments as debtors. If they should succeed in having this principal debt of these war nations wiped out, promptly their debts, instead of being a second mortgage and a second area of bondholders, become, sir, the first, and promptly rise in value, and, in the rising of value, could be floated in the lands of the world, particularly in the form of bonds or certificates of indebtedness here in the United States. Then, in addition to such, a new area of bonds could be issued upon these countries and upon their business houses upon the theory that, the old debt being wiped out, there is room and opportunity for a new debt to be incurred.

Here, Mr. President, I would invite the thought of the Senate to this peculiar situation which, before a court or a jury, would be presented as the evidence of the inconsistency of conduct carrying with it great hypocrisy joined with the trick of dishonor. These eminent financiers, and those who are supporting them in the effort to wipe out this debt and leave us with nothing of stable measure that either recognized the debt or from which we could draw a revenue, are busy crying out to the soldiers of the United States how badly they have been treated. These financiers are having their emissaries go through the land telling every post of soldiers of the Legion and of the Spanish-American War how this administration, under the name of economy, has wrenched from them their rights, and that we should be punished by these eminent officers here and there of the different posts and commanders by bringing their men into organization against their own Commander in Chief, dishonoring him before the world by denouncing him as dishonorable and persecuting the patriots. To this they add their effort to have the rank and file of these posts follow their vengeance as a duty and in the coming election oust from power a majority of the House, which is now the supporter of the President.

Now, at a time when they are doing this, they are likewise paying out of their pockets a financial contribution to organizations which are denouncing the soldier as a looter, denouncing his claim for relief, and holding him and his advocates up to the country as those who filch from the Treasury, and who would pillage the Government of its rights in order to accomplish for themselves the deliberate robbery of the finances of their Nation; and this these master intriguers charge at a time when, I assert, the President of the United States and the Government of the United States, both political parties and all political alliance, are desirous of paying every penny, and have the intention of paying every dollar, to every soldier, anywhere, who was a soldier of the United States, of all that which it may appear he has lost, but which in truth as a debt is merely postponed.

But how can we pay the sum due the soldier? Sirs, we must pay it out of the money we will collect of the debts that are due us. These eminent masters of finance in what might be called the "strategy of trickery", who are holding us up as only worthy of condemnation, and in no wise as deserving of any praise for anything, are crying out against us on the ground that we are soon to levy a tax upon them, and that such a tax by us is to be laid for the purpose of meeting the expenditures we have assumed in order to give the hungry bread, to give cover to the shelterless, to give employment to those who are longing for opportunity of living, to give some restoration to the miserable and oppressed, and rescue the Government from dismemberment. These Janus-faced marplots who cry out against paying any part of their millions and billions to go, sir, as a contribution to this noble cause, are willing to cheat the Nation out of the fund which, when paid in, could be applied to offset the necessity of taxes; and while it would pay the Government debt which we have been compelled to incur to give relief where it was needed, and restoration, made necessary for the preservation of the Government, these manipulators would have us shifted to a position where they could defeat the debt due us by the foreign nations.

In the meantime inciting the animosity and the enmity of the soldier, that they might use it in the election. First they could denounce the soldier in the effort to obtain what he feels is right, and in the meantime cheat us of the opportunity which could be ours to pay the burdens of taxes and discharge every obligation to the soldier. These eminent masters of international jugglery have conceived the plan of whispering treachery and desertion to the soldier, and, sir, inciting by their organization the overthrow of the administration through these false purposes.

I come, in conclusion to the object for which I arose. It is, sir, that this honorable body shall express to these distinguished debtors that they must make no mistake in assuming that these moves on the part of this Government to collect the debts due are mere gestures for the purpose of politics. They must understand that we are but fulfilling the law of the land. To use the words of ex-President Coolidge, "They borrowed the money; they have enjoyed the loan; they should return it." And we wish to inform them that we propose stressing in a proper and legitimate way the collection of the debts, and the fulfillment of the contract, in order that justice may be done to our Nation, as well as honor maintained between ourselves and those with whom we have borne this kindly relation for years.

Mr. President, the President of the United States has never doubted that these nations would at a proper time do that which honor called for, and that their statesmen, whatever they assert for political purposes in their own partisan sections, as called for by any emergency or exigency in their own midst, would, at the proper time, yield to that which decency between governments of Christianity would exact and impel.

Our President hopes that such will be fulfilled. We deplore that these slanders of our purpose are being circulated abroad and reflected by the press, misled by the false propaganda.

Mr. President, gentlemen of the Senate, all may rely on the President of the United States, in peaceful, in calm, and harmonious method, to reach a conclusion between ourselves and our debtors that will not be unsatisfactory to that sense of friendship with which we are with all our debtors in fraternal accord.

I describe the attitude of our President in his graciousness of hope, in his spirit of encouragement, in his patient, persevering patriotism. I apply the picture from Browning of our President in all the vicissitudes as—

> One who never turned his back, but marched breast forward,
> Never doubted clouds would break,
> Never dreamed, though right were worsted, wrong would triumph,
> Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better, sleep to wake.

And in walking, walk with God in our dreams and live with our fellow mankind in trust and faith.

I thank the honorable chairman of the committee for yielding to me.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 696) to authorize Frank W. Mahin, retired American Foreign Service officer, to accept from Her Majesty the Queen of the Netherlands the brevet and insignia of the Royal Netherland Order of Orange Nassau.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3364) for the relief of G. T. Fleming, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H.Con.Res. 32) authorizing and directing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate conditions with respect to the sale and distribution of milk and other dairy products in the United States, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

An act to authorize the incorporated town of Fairbanks, Alaska, to undertake certain municipal public works, including construction, reconstruction, and extension of sidewalks; construction, reconstruction, and extension of sewers, and construction of a combined city hall and fire-department building, and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $50,000;

H.R. 9526. An act authorizing the city of Port Arthur, Tex., or any commission designated by it, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge over Lake Sabine at or near Port Arthur, Tex.; and

H.R. 9567. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Brownville, Nebr.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 3235. An act to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the participation of the United States in A Century of Progress (the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration) to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933, authorizing an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes", approved February 8, 1932, to provide for participation in A Century of Progress in 1934, to authorize an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes; and

H.J.Res. 317. Joint resolution requesting the President of the United States of America to proclaim May 20, 1934, General La Fayette Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the death of General La Fayette.

A CENTURY OF PROGRESS EXPOSITION AT CHICAGO, ILL.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, in the message just received from the House of Representatives is a bill that relates to the matter of the exposition at Chicago. Having been signed by the Speaker of the House, it is now necessary that it shall be signed by the Vice President. I beseech you, sir, that with such convenience as will not interfere with the business before the Senate, steps be taken to have signature by the Vice President facilitated in order that the bill may be hastened to the President whose signature is required before the fair can be opened.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). The Chair will advise the Senator from Illinois that the bill is in the hands of the Vice President for signature.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

Mr. LONERGAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on today, May 15, 1934, that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill S. 3235, to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the participation of the United States in A Century of Progress (the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration) to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933, authorizing an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes", approved February 8, 1932, to provide for participation in A Century of Progress in 1934, to authorize an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

SALE AND DISTRIBUTION OF MILK AND OTHER DAIRY PRODUCTS

The concurrent resolution (H.Con.Res. 32) authorizing and directing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate conditions with respect to the sale and distribution of milk and other dairy products in the United States, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REGULATION OF COMMUNICATIONS BY WIRE OR RADIO

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3285) to provide for the regulation of interstate and foreign communications by wire or radio, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. DILL obtained the floor.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask for a roll call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Cutting	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Dickinson	King	Schall
Bachman	Dill	La Follette	Shipstead
Bailey	Duffy	Lewis	Smith
Bankhead	Erickson	Logan	Steiwer
Barkley	Fess	Lonergan	Stephens
Black	Fletcher	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Frazier	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Borah	George	McKellar	Thompson
Brown	Gibson	McNary	Townsend
Bulkley	Glass	Metcalf	Tydings
Bulow	Goldsborough	Murphy	Vandenberg
Byrd	Hale	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Harrison	Norris	Wagner
Capper	Hastings	Nye	Walcott
Clark	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Connally	Hatfield	Overton	Wheeler
Copeland	Hayden	Patterson	White
Costigan	Hebert	Pope

Mr. HEBERT. I wish to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the Senators from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN and Mr. BARBOUR], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate at any great length, but in light of the statements which have been made by the proponents of the amendment I feel that I should make some explanation of the reason why this amendment was rejected.

The amendment was presented by Father Harney, of the Paulist Fathers, representing station WLWL in New York. Full hearings were had, and the committee considered it carefully and rejected the amendment by an overwhelming vote, but adopted instead a provision in the bill requiring the Commission to make a study of the question of educational broadcasting, and to submit recommendations to Congress.

It might be concluded from the arguments made here by those who propose this amendment that the committee and I are not anxious for educational and religious broadcasts. I think the record of my activities in radio will show that I have always been one of the most insistent among those who wanted to see a larger use of radio for educational, religious, and fraternal purposes and for nonprofit purposes generally. I am extremely anxious now that some plan may be worked out for a larger use of radio for educational and religious purposes; but the amendment presented by the Senators from New York and West Virginia does not suggest the proper method, in my judgment, to bring about such a result.

In the first place, the amendment proposes to wipe out all existing allocations. It did propose to allow 3 months, which now has been changed, I understand, to 6 months, because it would be impossible under the law to wipe out the licenses before they had expired except for violation of the law.

In the second place, it compels a reallocation by the new commission of all the stations in the United States within a period, as the amendment has been changed, of 6 months. I think that is impracticable. I do not believe the new commission will be able to reallocate all the stations in that short period of time.

The third and strongest objection which I have is that these stations are not to be what we understand as educational and religious stations merely, but they are to be stations that are to sell time on the air to advertisers who will make use of the stations for advertising purposes. Thus we are simply changing the ownership of these stations from the present commercial owners to owners who call themselves nonprofit organizations.

The records show that a large percentage of stations are not making any money as it is. It is safe to say that even if these nonprofit organizations could borrow money—and I do not know where they could borrow it, but if they could borrow money with which to build these stations and maintain them, it would require the sale of between 60 and 75 percent of their valuable time to maintain the stations and pay back the money which it would cost to build the new stations.

I remind the Senate that it costs a large sum of money to build a high-power radio station and to employ the engineers that may be necessary, and so to handle the station that its broadcasts may be heard throughout the country.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator says it requires a large sum of money to build and operate a radio station. For my own satisfaction, I should like to know approximately what one of these large radio stations costs?

Mr. DILL. Anywhere from one hundred to two hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. LOGAN. So an educational or religious or nonprofit association would have to provide some such sum as that in order to establish a station?

Mr. DILL. They would have to, if they established a high-powered station. I am told that it costs practically as much each year to operate and maintain a station as it does to build it in the first place.

This is not a new subject. I myself, with the Senator from Michigan, in 1931, induced the Senate to pass a resolution to investigate the question, particularly of educational stations. A series of questions was propounded to the Radio Commission. I have here the answers to some of those questions, and I particularly call attention to the reply to the question—

> What applications by public educational institutions for increased power and more effective frequencies have been granted since the Commission's organization? What refused?
> Answer. In the period—
>
> Since the organization of the Commission—
> from February 23, 1927, to January 1, 1932, the Commission considered 81 applications from educational institutions for additional and more effective radio facilities, 52 of which were from public educational institutions and 29 from private educational institutions.
> * * * Thirty-two of these applications were granted in full; 27 were granted in part; 10 were denied; * * * 10 were dismissed at the request of the applicant.

So, out of 71, all but 10 were granted either in full or in part.

There are today some 63 stations operated in the United States by educational, agricultural, religious, or nonprofit organizations, but none of them exceeds 5,000 watts. There is one 5,000-watt station, and I think there are one or two 1,500-watt stations and one or two 1,000-watt stations, but the large percentage of them are small stations. They are used only for a few hours a day and some of them for only a few hours a week.

It is the conviction on the part of those who have made a study of this subject that this question must be solved in some other way. I am not prepared to say what is the best method. I may say, however, that the owners of large radio stations now operating have suggested to me that it might be well to provide in the license grant that a certain percentage of the time of a radio station shall be allotted to religious, educational, or nonprofit users by their paying the actual cost of operation for the hours which they actually use such station.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield further to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask the Senator who is going to determine how much of the total time allotted shall be allocated to labor, how much to education, and how much to religion?

Mr. DILL. I was coming to that very point in just a moment and I will answer it now. If we should provide that 25 percent of time shall be allocated to nonprofit organizations, someone would have to determine—Congress or somebody else—how much of the 25 percent should go to education, how much of it to religion, and how much of it to agriculture, how much of it to labor, how much of it to fraternal organizations, and so forth. When we enter this field we must determine how much to give to the Catholics probably and how much to the Protestants and how much to the Jews.

Mr. LOGAN. And to the Hindus.

Mr. DILL. Yes; and probably the infidels would want some time.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; there is a national association of atheists. They perhaps would want their part of the time.

Mr. DILL. Yes; and when we go into the field of the educational institutions, it must be determined how much time shall be given to State institutions, how much to private institutions, how much to land-grant colleges, and so forth. So we find ourselves right back in the same maze of difficulties in which we now are. We must go to the Commission to subdivide the time; so that the difficulty today is not in the law; the difficulty probably is in the failure of the present Commission to take steps that it ought to take to see to it that a larger use is made of radio facilities for education and religious purposes. However, it should be said in defense of the Commission that religious and educational institutions do not have the money with which to build and maintain radio stations. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] said to me a few moments ago that the educational radio station in his State has been compelled to close, not because the commission took away its time or restricted it, but because it did not have the money with which to operate. I myself have long believed that we ought to charge fees from commercial stations for the use of these frequencies and that such fees might well be put into a fund and used to establish a Government educational station. I hope something of that kind may be done, but just in what direction we should go, or how we should solve the problem, I am unable to say. I feel certain, however, that it would be a mistake for Congress by statute to fix absolutely 25 percent, 20 percent, 15 percent, 10 percent, or any other fixed percentage; but rather this discussion and this provision should cause the new commission to realize the importance of some serious, careful study of this question with a view to submitting recommendations to the Congress as to what, if anything, should be done by Congress.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

Mr. DILL. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. OVERTON. What is considered to be educational? Has that term any well-defined meaning? Is music educational; is song educational; is the drama educational?

Mr. DILL. Undoubtedly there is an element of education in all of them. I want to say in that connection, in answer to the Senator from New York, who said that only 2 percent of our radio time is used for educational and religious purposes, that he was speaking of the 63 stations which I have mentioned and not of the 550 or 600 other stations that continually put on educational and religious programs. I dare say that many of the speeches of the Senator from New York, as well as those of other Senators, would be considered partly educational, at least. They are put out by the large radio chains which furnish the American people the great radio programs.

I recognize the objection on the part of educational organizations to accepting free time from a commercial station. That objection is that they feel themselves handicapped; they feel themselves limited in the freedom they would like to have to present educational subjects because they may be offensive to the station from which they receive time. I recognize that as an objection, and because of that I think some plan should be worked out which would enable them to make some payment and have the free right to the use of the air; but I cannot believe, with the present financial status of the educational and religious organizations of this country, that there is any hope of their using 25 percent of our radio facilities effectively, even if we gave them the right under this bill. They have not the money and there is nowhere they can secure money except they go into the commercial field and themselves become commercial stations.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

Mr. DILL. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. I should like to ask the Senator whether the Commission, in granting licenses to any of the larger purely commercial stations, ever made it a condition for granting the license that any part of the time be used for religious, cultural, or educational purposes?

Mr. DILL. I think not; and I suggest that that is one of the possibilities that might be worked out.

Mr. WAGNER. They have had a long time in which to think about it.

Mr. DILL. I am not defending the Radio Commission; Heaven knows, I do not hold any brief for the present Radio Commission; I am glad it is going to be abolished and that new policies will be established by the Radio Commission.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. DILL. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I understood the Senator to state some time ago that his construction of this amendment was to the effect that those taking the allocation for religious, agricultural, and education and labor, and so forth, could turn the station into a commercial one.

Mr. DILL. The amendment specifically so provides, as the Senator will see if he will read subsection (g).

Mr. BORAH. I have read it.

Mr. DILL. Beginning in line 16, it reads:

> The facilities reserved for, or allocated to, educational, religious, agricultural, labor, cooperative, and similar non-profit-making associations shall be equally as desirable as those assigned to profit-making persons, firms, or corporations. In the distribution of radio facilities to the associations referred to in this section, the Commission shall reserve for and allocate to such associations such radio broadcasting facilities as will reasonably make possible the operation of such stations on a self-sustaining basis.

The only way they could be "self-sustaining" would be by selling time; the only people to whom they could sell time would be advertisers, and the only use advertisers could make of the time would be to advertise their products on the air, just as they now do.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator then construes "self-sustaining" to mean that they must necessarily become "self-sustaining" from the commercial field?

Mr. DILL. I do not see any other method. Why would they sell time if they were self-sustaining?

Mr. BORAH. There would not be a sufficient demand from the religious, educational, and other uses to utilize all the time.

Mr. DILL. I will read the remainder of the subsection (g)—

> And to that end the licensee may sell such part of the allotted time as will make the station self-supporting.

Mr. BORAH. Is that the construction of the Senator from New York?

Mr. WAGNER. I do say that organizations which exist for the purpose of making a profit are distinctly excluded from the use of this time.

Mr. DILL. But they do not make a profit until they make enough to more than pay for the cost of the station and the maintenance of the station. There would be no profit until they have paid those expenses.

Mr. HATFIELD. The Senator is now proposing an amendment, is he not?

Mr. WAGNER. I am quite willing to add, so there may be no question about it, "educational, religious, agricultural, labor, and cooperative associations which are not organized for profit and which do not directly or indirectly provide a source of profit for their members or employees or anyone else." That is as all-embracing as I can make it.

Mr. DILL. But the Senator proposes to leave the right to sell time and make the station self-supporting.

Mr. WAGNER. That is quite a different thing from profit. Such patronage may come, and undoubtedly will come, from the very educational institutions which will ask for time on these stations.

Mr. DILL. If the Senator is going to limit it to selling time to educational and religious organizations who will buy it, that is a different proposition. I do not know of more than one or two religious organizations which buy time. They are all given the time free.

Mr. WAGNER. They have their own stations.

Mr. DILL. A few of them have, but they have not the money with which to buy time. I feel that it would be absolutely impracticable, if we do not allot the time to commercial stations, to hope for them to raise any money.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to his colleague?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. BONE. As I read the proposed amendment, it would require the Radio Commission arbitrarily to destroy, or what would amount to destroying, 25 percent of the radio facilities now existing in any community where anyone else sought to take advantage of the facilities. They simply would be permitted to use the wave length or the power in watts of existing stations. Is that correct?

Mr. DILL. At the end of the license period they would have a right to allocate to new stations, but they have that right under existing law.

Mr. BONE. I understand; but it is a right which, I assume, has not been exercised.

Mr. DILL. Yes; it has been exercised.

Mr. BONE. I am trying to get some light on the matter. Suppose in the State of Washington the Radio Commission should decree that out of 100,000 watts of power now employed by radio stations there should be a reduction to 75,000 watts. That would mean, if I understand the amendment aright, that stations now operating with 25,000 watts of power would be summarily cut off and, of course, that value would be destroyed.

Mr. DILL. The commission would decide whether it would reduce all stations or certain stations, or would delete and take out of operation certain stations. There is no limit as to the method. Under the law, of course, the public interests would have to be considered in that connection.

Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate any further. I hope the amendment will be defeated. I believe it would be an extremely bad policy for Congress to begin the allocation of wave lengths. I believe we will do more for educational and religious progress by having the new commission study the matter and let it come back to Congress with some practical plan that will make use of existing facilities, rather than attempt to grant an arbitrary 25 percent and then allow those stations to be turned into commercial stations.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I should like to perfect my amendment in this manner: On page 2, line 5, strike out the words "90 days" and substitute therefor "6 months", and in line 8, strike out "90 days" and insert in lieu thereof "6 months."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has the right to modify his amendment.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the pendency of the amendment and the discussion to which we have listened confirm me in the view I have always had as to the unwisdom of offering this legislation in its entirety at this time. I have felt strongly that the wise thing for us to have done would have been to follow the recommendation of the President, as I understood it to be, to enact legislation creating a new commission, to transfer to that commission the present authorities of law, and to enjoin upon the commission the obligation to study the problem of communications during the summer and fall, and to report to the Congress of the United States, when we convene in January next, its recommendations as to comprehensive communications legislation.

I believed when the legislation was first suggested, and I believe now that that is the sound course for Congress to pursue. A majority of the committee were decidedly of the contrary opinion, and I bowed to the judgment of the majority.

One of the particular things to which it seems to me the commission might have given its attention during the summer is the study of the precise problem presented by the pending amendment. The amendment in its substance basically is not new, for even back in 1927, when the present radio law was written, there was pending before the committees of Congress and before the Congress itself and before the conferees the question of giving legislative preference or legislative priority to some particular user of radio communication.

I recall very well when the bill passed the Senate in 1927 there was embodied in it a provision that land-grant colleges should have a preference or priority in the use of frequencies. That provision was dropped in conference. It was dropped because depending upon that provision was a string of applications for special recognition in the law. At that time, when it was being urged that special recognition should be given to land-grant colleges, there were religious organizations or institutions asking that they be given the same legislative preference which was proposed to be given to the land-grant colleges. There were all sorts of groups and organizations throughout the United States asking that if we gave statutory preference to land-grant colleges, we should accord similar recognition to them.

At that time it was the judgment of the Congress that we had to adopt one of two courses. We either had to strike from the legislation special consideration for land-grant colleges and grant to the regulatory body full power and authority with respect to the granting of licenses, or the Congress faced the obligation of making a complete allocation to services.

I object to the pending amendment for the considerations suggested by the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL]. I object also more strongly because it seems to me it flies in the face of a sound principle. We must, as I said, do one of two things. We must here in the Congress make a complete allocation of the radio spectrum to services, or we must leave it entirely alone. I have long been a believer, and I believe now, that commercial activities occupy too much of the time and use too many of the radio facilities of the country.

I recall very definitely I urged, in legislation which I introduced in the House a number of years ago, that we should give to the regulatory body the power, and we should lay upon them the express duty of establishing priorities in the character of service. That is precisely what the pending proposal is, but it only takes one step in that direction. It proposes that we shall take only 25 percent of the radio facilities, and that we shall give them to a somewhat indefinite group, religious, educational, non-profit-making organizations. They are indefinite almost in number. How many of them there are I do not know. As a practical result, we have all of these non-profit-making organizations contending among themselves not for a place in the entire radio spectrum but for a part of only 25 percent of the radio spectrum. If that shall be granted the controversy will be intensified, and the situation will not be cured at all.

Manifestly, we should either go ahead as a Congress and divide up the entire spectrum among persons and organizations for uses here in the United States or we should leave it alone in its entirety and place the responsibility of allocation where it already is—upon the Federal Radio Commission.

It seems to me that if this amendment should be adopted it would go through the entire radio structure of the United States like a tornado, leaving destruction and chaos in its wake.

I join with the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] in expressing the earnest hope that the amendment may not have the approval of this body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD].

Mr. WAGNER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WAGNER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	Johnson	Pope
Ashurst	Couzens	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.
Austin	Cutting	King	Schall
Bachman	Dill	La Follette	Shipstead
Bailey	Duffy	Lewis	Smith
Bankhead	Erickson	Logan	Steiwer
Barkley	Fess	Lonergan	Stephens
Black	Fletcher	McCarran	Thomas, Utah
Bone	Frazier	McGill	Thompson
Borah	George	McKellar	Townsend
Brown	Gibson	McNary	Tydings
Bulkley	Goldsborough	Metcalf	Vandenberg
Bulow	Hale	Murphy	Van Nuys
Byrd	Harrison	Norris	Wagner
Byrnes	Hastings	Nye	Walcott
Capper	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Clark	Hatfield	Overton	Wheeler
Connally	Hebert	Patterson	White

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absentees as announced by me upon the previous roll call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD]. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BULKLEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who is absent from the city on official business. He has advised me that if present he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I am at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. STEPHENS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. VANDENBERG (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], who is detained from the Senate by sickness. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BONE. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LOGAN. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FESS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is detained from the Senate; but I am advised that if he were present he would vote as I have already voted. Therefore I shall permit my vote to stand.

Mr. BARKLEY (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH], and desire to state that were he present and voting he would vote "yea" on this question.

I beg to announce the absence of Senators as previously announced by me on previous roll calls.

I announce the following special pairs on this question:

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR];

The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN]; and

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK].

I am not advised how these Senators would vote if present.

I also announce a special pair on this question between the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. If present the Senator from Massachusetts would vote "yea" on this question, and the Senator from South Carolina would vote "nay."

I also announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] are detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. HEBERT. I wish to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—23

Ashurst	Frazier	McCarran	Shipstead
Borah	Hatfield	Metcalf	Townsend
Copeland	Hebert	Norris	Wagner
Cutting	La Follette	Nye	Walsh
Duffy	Lewis	Patterson	Wheeler
Erickson	Lonergan	Schall

NAYS—42

Adams	Byrd	Hastings	Pope
Austin	Clark	Hatch	Robinson, Ark.

Connally	Hayden	Reed	Vandenberg
Coolidge	Kean	Reynolds	Walcott
Costigan	Long	Robinson, Ind.

So the amendment of Mr. WAGNER and Mr. HATFIELD was rejected.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 2, to strike out lines 20 to 25, inclusive, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

(b) Nothing in this act shall be construed to apply or to give the commission jurisdiction with respect to charges, classifications, practices, or regulations for or in connection with intrastate communication service of any carrier, or to any carrier engaged in interstate or foreign communication solely through physical connection with the facilities of another carrier not directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by such carrier, or under direct or indirect control with such other carrier.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the only purpose of this amendment is to clarify the language contained in the original bill with regard to small independent telephone companies. These independent telephone companies are located in small communities. They are entirely local affairs. I know there are nearly 700 in Missouri, and in a great many instances they are family enterprises; that is, a man will own the local independent telephone company, have the central office located in his own home, and the plant will be operated by the man and his family.

There are 700 independent telephone companies in Missouri. I think that without exception they are located in towns of less than 1,500 inhabitants. Nevertheless, under the terms of the bill, they probably would be subjected to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, because nearly invariably they have a physical connection with a toll line, for long-distance calls, which would make them engage in interstate commerce.

Every one of these independent telephone lines throughout the United States is already subjected to local regulation by the State public-service commission, and to subject them to further regulation, with a duplication of a system of accounting, would simply mean an intolerable burden on these little companies, who have had a hard time existing anyway.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I am familiar with the Senator's proposed amendment. I do not believe the amendment is necessary, but I do not think it would do any harm, because its purpose is to accomplish that which we have tried to do throughout the bill; that is, to protect the independent companies. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, on page 56, section 311, I notice this language is used:

SEC. 311. The commission is hereby directed to refuse a station license and/or the permit hereinafter required for the construction of a station to any person (or to any person directly or indirectly controlled by such person) whose license has been revoked by a court under section 313, and is hereby authorized to refuse such station license and/or permit to any other person (or to any person directly or indirectly controlled by such person) which has been finally adjudged guilty by a Federal court of unlawfully monopolizing, or attempting unlawfully to monopolize, after this act takes effect.

I move to strike out the words "after this act takes effect." Otherwise it would bring it down, in my judgment, to the present date, and if they have been monopolizing up to the present time, the commission would not be able to act.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, this wording, "after this act takes effect", was copied from existing law, and I think there may be some merit in the Senator's contention. At first I did not think there was, but on further consideration I believe there may be. I do not see that it would do any good to keep the language in, and I have no objection to it being stricken out, because there might be some question, it seems to me, of relieving somebody violating the law at this time.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I was in the far reaches of the Chamber and I could not hear the amendment as the Senator stated it.

Mr. WHEELER. I am moving to strike out, on line 24, page 56, section 311, the words "after this act takes effect."

Mr. WHITE. Will not the Senator explain just what the effect of the amendment would be?

Mr. WHEELER. Assuming that someone has been violating the provisions set forth up to the present time, the commission may want to go ahead and act, and it seems to me that they could not act if that language remained in the measure. The purpose of this section is simply to reenact the present law.

Mr. DILL. In other words, as I understand, the Senator's contention is that this might exempt those who had been convicted between 1927 and this time. I cannot see that it would do any harm, and I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I request the Senator to turn to page 9, line 1, where the bill reads, "Without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, (1) the commission may appoint", and so forth; and again on page 14, where it reads, "Each division may (1) appoint a director, without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923."

I should like to ask the Senator the reason for exempting the operations of the Classification Act in the payment of salaries of these officials, other than the commissioners.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, it is because practically all of the commissions now do that.

Mr. WALSH. It is true that all of the emergency commissions which were created do that, but the fact is that the Federal Trade Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission and other permanent departments comply with the provisions of the Classification Act. I, for one, protest against these new permanent commissions being allowed to fix salaries outside of the stipulations of the Classification Act, and exempt themselves from the general policy fixed.

Mr. DILL. We have fixed a maximum above which they may not go.

Mr. WALSH. That does not meet the situation. The same question is before the Committee on Education and Labor, of which I am chairman, in connection with the Wagner labor bill. A very similar provision was drafted, leaving employees out of the Classification Act and the civil service. It is one thing leaving them out of the civil service, where experts are needed, but it is an entirely different thing to put lawyers and other various employees outside of the Classification Act. It means that they may get any salary the commission may see fit to fix. Let us have a uniform policy. Let us have all these positions under the Classification Act.

Mr. DILL. The Radio Commission has been operating under this kind of a provision, and I think they have found it reasonably satisfactory.

Mr. WALSH. It is time to stop it if they have been operating under it. One of the criticisms we hear generally as to the N.R.A. and some of the temporary commissions is that the salaries are out of all proportion to salaries in other fixed bureaus.

Mr. DILL. That would not apply in this case.

Mr. WALSH. Lawyers and experts doing exactly the same work which is being performed by lawyers and other employees in the permanent commissions are underpaid in comparison with the salaries being paid by the new commissions.

Mr. DILL. I remind the Senator that there is a limit fixed for salaries to be paid by this commission; they cannot go above a certain amount.

Mr. WALSH. Why should they be taken from under the Classification Act, anyway?

Mr. DILL. Because I think there ought to be a specific amount in the case of the chief counsel of a great commission like this. I think he ought to have a substantial salary.

Mr. WALSH. That may be so of the chief counsel; but how about these other lawyers?

Mr. DILL. I think the same should apply to the chief engineer. It applies only to the chief counsel and the chief engineer. The special counsel are not included.

Mr. WALSH. It provides for one or more assistants, experts, and special counsel. It means that the assistant counsel may receive $7,500 per annum. I think that is an excessive salary for attorneys today, in view of conditions in this country.

I am not one who favors low salaries. I have the same question coming up in connection with a bill that will be before us in a few weeks, and if such a policy is to be adopted in regard to the commission to be created under this bill, I want it to apply to the one to be created in the bill to come up later. I am against designating salaries in these bills, because I think these employees and officials should be under the Classification Act. I cannot see any reason for exempting in this case.

Mr. DILL. I think one of the worst things about the civil service today in regard to these commissions is the fact that a commissioner cannot choose his own confidential clerk, that he must take someone who is on the civil-service list. If I were the member of a commission I would want my own confidential clerk, and I think the Senator from Massachusetts would want his, and I have purposely inserted in this bill a provision that each Commissioner might have one clerk. I think that is a provision that is highly desirable. I think every man has a right to have one clerk in an organization of this kind.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. Let me ask the Senator whether this would be satisfactory to him. I intend to offer an amendment on page 9, beginning with line 4, to cut out the words "and one or more assistant chief engineers and one or more assistants, experts, and special counsel." That would leave free the secretary, the general counsel and the chief engineer.

Mr. DILL. I would have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. WALSH. As I understand the Senator's amendment it would strike out of this bill the provision "Without regard to the Classification Act of 1923."

Mr. COUZENS. Only as applied to the chief engineer and secretary and the general counsel. All the rest would be under civil service.

Mr. WALSH. If that is the purpose which the Senator from Michigan has in mind, I would agree to it.

Mr. COUZENS. I move, Mr. President, that that amendment be agreed to.

Mr. DILL. I have no objection to it.

Mr. WALSH. Let us see if we understand it. I understand that with the exception of the few positions named in the amendment, every other employee of this commission shall be subjected to the Classification Act. Am I correct?

Mr. DILL. That still leaves this one clerk, about whom I have made explanation, and I appeal to the Senator not to strike him.

Mr. WALSH. Who?

Mr. DILL. I provided that each commissioner should have one clerk.

Mr. COUZENS. On what page?

Mr. DILL. Page 9, lines 6 to 8.

Mr. WALSH. At a salary of $7,500 per annum?

Mr. KING. No, Mr. President; a salary of $4,000 per annum.

Mr. DILL. That "each commissioner may appoint and prescribe the duties of an assistant at an annual salary not to exceed $4,000 per annum."

Mr. KING. I think that ought to go out.

Mr. DILL. I think the Senator from Utah, if he were a commissioner, would desire to have his own clerk.

Mr. WALSH. It is quite easy to get one's own clerk from the civil-service list. All that is necessary is to write to the Civil Service Commission asking for a clerk of the type that one designates, who would answer the qualifications, and one can be assigned.

Mr. President, I object to this promiscuous fixing of salaries outside the Classification Act. I gather that the Senator from Michigan is in accord with my views. In connection with these new commissions we are running wild in the matter of salaries, and it is not fair to the old, steady employees in commissions like the Federal Trade Commission, the Post Office Department, or the Interstate Commerce Commission, or other departments. If lawyers and experts are entitled to these substantial salaries in the new commission, those in the old departments and commissions are entitled to the same salaries, and we will have a move here to boost their salaries to a level with the new high salaries.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It has been my experience that the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts are fully borne out by conditions in the various departments. Even the assistants in the Post Office Department and the Assistant Secretaries in the Department of Commerce and the Department of Labor are governed by the Classification Act. I know of no reason why, for example, an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury or an Assistant Secretary of Labor should be under the Classification Act while an assistant in any new commission should be exempt from it. It would mean, just as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, that these commissions could fix the salaries as they pleased for their particular assistants, with no more responsibility, nor no greater amount of work to be performed than those in the old departments and commissions. I believe the objection is very well founded.

Mr. DILL. The salary can be limited.

Mr. WALSH. I am pleased the Senator from Wyoming agrees with me.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am in perfect accord in limiting the salary.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the Senator if the Assistant Secretary of Labor and the assistant secretaries of the major departments are under the Classification Act?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes, certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Then if the assistant secretary to a Cabinet officer is under the Classification Act, why put experts and attorneys and lawyers and other people outside the Classification Act?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it must be inaccurate to say that all the Assistant Secretaries of Labor and so forth are under the Classification Act.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is another matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. I recall at least one Assistant Secretary of Labor whom I happen to have known for many years, whose name was sent here and who was confirmed by the Senate. I do not know of any Assistant Secretary of Commerce or State or Labor who is in the classified service.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I think the Senator is laboring under a misapprehension. This had no reference whatever to the classified service. This refers only to the Classification Act, which as I understand, fixes the salaries. This is not a question of exempting persons from the civil service.

Mr. WALSH. It is not exempting them from high salaries. It is putting their salaries above the salaries of those doing comparable work in other departments.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am entirely in sympathy with that, but I understand we are talking here about a provision which allows each one of these new commissioners to appoint a private secretary at a salary not to exceed $4,000 a year. I think the real test in a matter of this sort is whether we would be willing to go to the civil-service list and pick our private secretary from that list. I am frank to say that I would not.

Mr. WALSH. I am not requiring that this be under the civil service, but I am asking that the classified salary be the salary which is received by those performing the same class of work in other departments, whether it be $3,500 or $4,000. I am not asking that the commissioner go to the civil service, but I am asking that the salary be under the classified act, in order that the secretaries to these commissioners will be paid the same salary as paid to the secretary to the Postmaster General and the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I might call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to the language of this section, page 9, line 1:

> Without regard to the civil-service laws, or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

Those are two different laws. The Senator from Massachusetts is objecting to eliminating the provisions of the Classification Act from this special commission, and I think he is correct.

Mr. WALSH. It is an attempt to deceive us for those who are drafting these new acts to come here and sneak in exemptions of this type. I would not have discovered it, and no member of my committee would have discovered it except for the Secretary of Labor's Department calling our attention to what that classification elimination would mean. We did not realize that by using that exception to the Classification Act they were leaving employees in this new commission out of the regular classified act, and I want to protest and ask the Senators, when these proposals are brought before us, to watch for such things as I have indicated.

Mr. BARKLEY. To what extent does the Classification Act conflict with the provision here limiting the salary of secretaries of two commissioners to $4,000?

Mr. WALSH. The Classification Act, I understand, fixes the salary of every Government employee, except those salaries which are fixed by law, and it is fixed on the basis of duties performed in the various departments, so that there shall be relationship in the salary of an employee of one department to the salary received by an employee in another department performing the same duty.

Mr. BARKLEY. So, if the same language is retained in the bill, then the commissioner could pick his own private secretary, and could fix the salary the same as the salary of an employee engaged in similar work in any other department.

Mr. WALSH. The point I am making is, why should the status of the secretary of a member of this new commission be different from that of the secretary to the Postmaster General, for example, so far as his relationship to the Classification Act is concerned?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am making no contention about that, but I am asking whether the retention of this language in the bill, while giving the commissioner a right to appoint his own secretary, would mean that the secretary would get the same salary as other employees engaged in the same line of duty would get?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. It is not often that I disagree so emphatically with the Senator from Massachusetts, but I draw his attention to the fact that, in view of the difference in the situation between the civil-service employee under the classification service and the secretary who is brought in from the outside, who is not on the Civil Service, there ought to be recognition by a difference in salary. The civil-service employee, subject to the Classification Act, has a lifetime job, or cannot be removed except upon charges. He is safe in the position which he has. When an official goes out to employ someone as his secretary, who is not under Civil Service, that employee gives up his work back home and comes to Washington. He has no fixed tenure of office. He can be told to take his hat and coat and leave at any time. When the official goes out, he goes out. And if we undertake to classify him as a civil-service employee and require him to accept the same salary, we are not treating him fairly.

Mr. WALSH. I agree with what the Senator says, but I understand that the Classification Act fixes the salary of other than civil-service employees.

Mr. LOGAN. That is very true.

Mr. WALSH. I think it fixes the salary of the secretary, for example, to the Secretary of Labor, the secretary to the Secretary of Commerce, and the secretary to the Postmaster General. Such secretary is subject to all the conditions we fix, and his salary is fixed by the Classification Act. Why should the secretaries to these new commissioners have a different status as far as their relationship to the Classification Act is concerned?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Perhaps I may add a word of explanation. The system which is now in vogue permits most of the heads of departments, and most of the assistants, and, I believe, most of the commissioners, to appoint their own personal secretaries free from the civil-service laws, and the salaries paid to those secretaries, occupying what are known as exempt positions, are somewhat greater than the salaries paid similar persons in the civil service, under the circumstances which the Senator has referred to.

Mr. WALSH. Are they fixed under the Classification Act?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. They are.

Mr. WALSH. Why should these secretaries be treated any differently than the other secretaries of whom the Senator spoke?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is one thing to exempt certain positions from the Civil Service Act. That may and should properly be done in many cases. But to exempt them also from the Classification Act would result in great discrimination between the departments.

Mr. WALSH. Even the important officials and experts in the Interstate Commerce Commission, one of the most important independent organizations in the Federal Government, are subject to the Classification Act, every one of them. And yet here we are proposing to exempt certain employees in this new department.

I call attention to what is proposed on page 14.

> Each division may (1) appoint a director, without regard to the Civil Service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, at an annual salary that shall not exceed $7,500 per annum.

Why should not that director be subject to the classification act the same as a director in the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. DILL. For the reason that this is the creation of a new kind of position. We do not know exactly what he is going to do, and we have made the limit of salary $7,500.

I think the Senator from Massachusetts is unduly exercised about these limitations of salary for the reason——

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I should like first to answer the question of the Senator from Massachusetts. For the reason that we are providing for the creation of a new kind of position and we do not know exactly what the officer is going to have to do, but we have provided a limit of $7,500. I think the Senator is unduly exercised about these limitations of salaries. They are not fixed; they are limitations.

Mr. WALSH. I am exercised simply because a bill handed to my committee contains exactly the same provisions in the same language, and that all these bills are now being drafted with the idea of lifting these employees out of the civil service in some cases and in all cases out of the Classification Act. There may be some justification for it in the N.R.A. and the Public Works Administration, but in the case of a permanent board such as the one now proposed or the labor board such as is proposed in the bill pending before my committee, I propose that the salaries shall be uniform, that they shall be subject to the terms of the general Classification Act, and that the same salaries shall be paid for the same kind of work performed as are paid in other departments, no more and no less. If that is not a fair proposition, then, I do not know what is fair.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. It seems to me also that the language that is used on page 9 places no limitation on the amount the commission might pay its secretary, for it is there provided:

> (f) Without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, (1) the commission may appoint and prescribe the duties and fix the salaries of a secretary, a chief engineer and one or more assistant chief engineers, a general counsel and one or more assistants, experts, and special counsel.

Mr. WALSH. What do the words "and one or more assistants" mean? They may mean a hundred, to be appointed without regard to the Classification Act.

Mr. WHEELER. In addition to that, there is no limitation on the salary of the secretary. The commission may fix the salary of the secretary at $10,000 or $5,000, or any other sum that it sees fit, without any limitation of any kind or character.

Mr. WALSH. I suggest to the Senator from Washington, who, I know, is desirous of conforming to the usual practice, and who, undoubtedly, has not had this matter called to his attention, because it was called to the attention of my committee only by mere chance, that this is an attempt to lift a large number of employees out of the salary groups of the Classification Act. The salaries under the Classification Act run up to eight or nine thousand dollars in some cases. I will ask the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] if that is not a correct statement?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, some salaries may reach that figure in the course of time, but what salaries are paid when the employees enter the service? If the Senator were to be appointed a member of this commission, which, of course, he will not be, because he is not eligible under the Constitution, and he wanted to take his secretary with him and his secretary had to come under the Classification Act, what would he get on going into the service in the beginning?

He would probably get $1,600 a year, with a reduction on account of the Economy Act.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is mistaken. He would get the same salary that is paid to the secretary of the Secretary of Labor; he would get the same salary as paid to the secretary to the Attorney General.

Mr. LOGAN. Unless he had been in the service for a number of years he could not get the same salary. I had this experience with the Classification Act in Kentucky, as my colleague will bear me witness: Deputy collectors had been receiving $2,200, $2,400, $2,600 up to $3,000, because they had been in the service a good while under a previous administration. New ones were appointed recently; every one of them, under the ruling of the Department, had to go in at $1,800, less 15-percent reduction under the Economy Act; and that is what the Senator's secretary would receive if the Senator were appointed a member of the commission and he selected his present secretary to be his secretary in the new office. Unless he were placed in grade 8 or grade 9, or something of that kind, he would go in at grade 4, and would not be able to get the salary which should be paid. I do not know much about the civil-service laws now, and do not expect to know much about them, but that is my idea of what would happen.

Mr. WALSH. I am sure the Senator from Kentucky does not want this bill to provide for salaries for employees of this commission that are different from the salaries paid by other commissions. The only difference between the Senator and me is that he is willing to have all the subordinate employees, all the clerks and stenographers and filing clerks, and all the lesser employees come under the Classification Act, but he is not willing to let the attorneys, the experts, the directors, and those who are under the Classification Act in other bureaus of the Government come in under the Classification Act under the new commissions. That is the only difference between us.

Mr. LOGAN. I should have no objection to their going under the Classification Act if there were not a rule in the classification law which requires that a new employee shall be appointed in a certain grade and which provides a salary that will not enable the commission to get the best men to do the work. I think it would be a mistake to make the salaries so low that the commission would have to take incompetent persons.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I may say to the Senator from Kentucky that that is not the way the law operates. To cite my own case, on the 6th of March 1933 I became First Assistant Postmaster General and I appointed my own secretary. She assumed her office at the same salary as that which was paid to the secretary of my predecessor, except that she suffered the reduction that was required of all employees under the Economy Act, which, of course, has nothing whatever to do with the question now being considered.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator that perhaps many of us have not been so fortunate as he has been. I have not been able to secure anything of that kind. I do know that in Kentucky when new employees are appointed they have to go in at a certain grade, and they do not get very much salary. That may be just a discrimination against my State.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that this provision is not drawn by accident; it is not here without consideration. The only point raised in this connection here today which I overlooked is that the bill fails to limit the salary of the secretary. I think that ought to be limited, and I am also entirely willing to strike out the provision relating to the assistants; but I submit that when a commission of this kind is being created the majority party, having 3 of the 5 members, should have the right, without regard to the civil-service law, to change its chief counsel.

Mr. WALSH. I am not objecting to that.

Mr. DILL. Or to change its chief engineer.

Mr. WALSH. I am not objecting to that, either.

Mr. DILL. And to appoint their individual assistants and have them paid a proper salary. If $4,000 is too much, make it $3,600. I do not see anything to be gained by taking advantage of civil-service methods by which one clerk is dismissed and another clerk is appointed who, it is thought, may be a little better. I think that is just a matter of juggling. We ought to be frank about this matter and say that the members of the commission should appoint their own clerks; I think they are entitled to do so; I think we will thereby get better results from the commission.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator suggest that the only office created in this bill that leaves the salary unsettled is that of the secretary of the commission?

Mr. DILL. I say the one which I had overlooked was the salary of the secretary.

Mr. WALSH. I call attention to what the Senator from Montana stated, quoting from page 9 of the bill, which provides that—

> The commission may appoint and prescribe the duties and fix the salaries of a secretary, a chief engineer, and one or more assistant chief engineers, a general counsel, and one or more assistants, experts, and special counsel.

Mr. DILL. And the general counsel and the chief engineer are limited with regard to salaries to $9,000; their assistants and experts to $7,500.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but why limit them to that? I want to have them all come under the Classification Act as to employees doing comparable work in other departments.

Mr. DILL. For the simple reason that I do not believe it possible always to get the kind of men required under the salaries provided by the Classification Act.

Mr. WALSH. Then let us agree that in the case of all future bills we will put the same language in and leave to the commissioners all questions of salary, and take that power away from Congress which has fixed the policy in adopting the Classification Act.

Mr. DILL. The Senator from Michigan has suggested an amendment which I think meets reasonably the objections of the Senator from Massachusetts, and which I think will not seriously interfere with the purpose of the commission.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment of the Senator from Michigan stated.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I have not written it out, but I should like, with the consent of the chairman of the committee, to amend what I think ought to be amended in paragraph (f). What I suggested, I think, does not go far enough, and I have since talked to the assistant to the chairman of the committee, pointing out to him the part that I thought ought to be amended; and, without having written it out, if he will follow me, I will read what I offer as an amendment. It will read thus:

> (f) With regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, (1) the commission may appoint and prescribe the duties and fix the salaries of a secretary, a chief engineer, and a general counsel, and (2) each commissioner may appoint and prescribe the duties of an assistant and pay him in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

Then on line 9:

> The general counsel, the secretary, and the chief engineer shall receive an annual salary of not exceeding $7,500.

Then I eliminate the following language:

> And no assistant or expert shall receive an annual salary in excess of $7,500.

That is eliminated because those officers will come under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

Mr. DILL. Does the Senator think that $7,500 is a sufficient salary for the chief counsel of a great commission such as this?

Mr. COUZENS. I put that provision in largely at the suggestion of the Senator from Utah, but I did not intend to amend that; and if there is any objection to that particular suggestion, I will leave it at $9,000. Then, we may discuss that later. But I should like to have the other provisions of my amendment agreed to.

Mr. DILL. It seems to me that $7,500 is a pretty low salary for a general counsel.

Mr. WALSH. Is not that the salary of the Assistant Attorneys General? Is not that the salary the chief counsels get for every bureau and department of the Government?

Mr. DILL. A good many of them get $10,000.

Mr. COUZENS. I think that is true. I will withdraw that provision; and then, if the Senate wants to amend my amendment, and adopt it, we can discuss the other matter separately.

Mr. WALSH. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan is infinitely better than the bill as drafted. Yet he adheres to the belief that certain officers should be taken out of the Classification Act. If the Classification Act did not allow substantial salaries, I would agree with what he says, but under that act salaries may be paid up to eight or nine thousand dollars. It does not provide merely for salaries of $2,000, $3,000, $4,000, or $5,000, but provides for the very salaries that are proposed to be paid by this bill. Why make a distinction? Why let the bars down in this case? If we do it in this case, why not do it in other cases and let the various departments and bureaus fix the salaries of those they employ?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I might add that the President within a few months past delegated to the Director of the Budget the duty of examining all the new bureaus and attempting to classify all the salaries there in accordance with the Classification Act for the purpose of maintaining a uniform system throughout the Government service.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; and we are proposing, by passing this bill, to undo what the President is trying to do, namely, to create a uniform system. Why not, I will ask the Senator from Michigan, merely strike out the exempting words "the Classification Act of 1923, as amended"?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I think there are some other amendments to be offered, and I therefore suggest that we pass over this amendment and consider the other amendments, and we may recur to this question later, and, in the meantime, the amendment may be perfected.

Mr. COUZENS. I withdraw my amendment for the time being.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire to offer two amendments to which I think there will be no objection and which will lead to no controversy. The first amendment is, on page 43, in line 11, before the word "of", to insert the words "within the jurisdiction"; so as to read:

Or (e) upon any vessel or aircraft within the jurisdiction of the United States.

That simply harmonizes the language with similar language appearing elsewhere.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. I offer another amendment, on page 58, at the end of line 8, to insert the following—and probably I had better read the amendment, because it is in my own handwriting:

(b) Any station license hereafter granted under the provisions of this act, or the construction permit required hereby and hereafter issued, may be modified by the commission either for a limited time or for the duration of the term thereof, if in the judgment of the commission such action will promote the public interest, convenience, and necessity, or the provisions of this act or of any treaty ratified by the United States will be more fully complied with: Provided, however, That no such order of modification shall become final until the holder of such outstanding license or permit shall have been notified in writing of the proposed action and the grounds or reasons therefor, and shall have been given reasonable opportunity to show cause why such an order of modification should not issue.

I may say to the Senator from Washington that the only purpose of the amendment is to put affirmatively into the bill the express authority for modification. We have referred in various places to modification of licenses, but I fail to find any definite and express and affirmative authority to make a modification. I suggest that if this amendment be adopted and is found not to be in proper form, it may be worked out in conference.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I may say that the Senator from Maine previously called my attention to the amendment. It simply is a method of harmonizing differences that may arise and, as I understand, it provides for hearing before action. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] asked me to offer in his behalf an amendment, to which I have no objection. I now offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed on page 31, line 14, before the period to insert the following:

And in order to fully examine into such transactions the commission shall have access to and the right of inspection of all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing, of persons furnishing such equipment, supplies, research, services, finances, credit, or personnel.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington in behalf of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DILL. I have another amendment of my own which I should like to offer and which I think is desirable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 52, after line 3, to insert the following new paragraph:

(f) In granting applications for licenses or renewal of licenses for frequencies to be used for broadcasting, the commission shall so distribute such licenses that no one licensee nor organization of licensees, whether effected by purchase, lease, chain broadcasting, or other method, shall be able to monopolize or exercise dominant control over the broadcasting facilities of any community, city, or State, or over the country as a whole; and the commission shall, so far as possible, by its distribution of licenses, provide for broad diversification and free competition in broadcast programs to be presented to radio listeners.

Mr. DILL. The purpose of the amendment is to make it impossible for any one man or organization to have control of the broadcasting facilities of a community, State, or the country if there are other applications from responsible applicants. At the present time there is growing up in many cities the practice of the owner of an important station leasing the facilities of another important station and then organizing a corporation to control a third station, and as a result the one station gets complete control of the broadcasting of the community. The purpose of the amendment is to give the commission a reason, if there be a suitable applicant, for granting a license to another applicant and to break up that kind of practice if the commission shall find it necessary. It is a permissive amendment.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. DILL. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. This would not interfere with WLW?

Mr. DILL. Only if WLW reached out and undertook to get control of all the other stations in Cincinnati.

Mr. FESS. After that station has been given the frequency it would not be interfered with if operating within the law?

Mr. DILL. No; but if it went out and secured all the other stations in Cincinnati, then someone else might get a license.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, that is all the amendments I have to offer.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 50, line 23, after the first comma, to strike out the remainder of the paragraph and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the commission may, without regard to the requirements of this subsection, grant applications for additional licenses for stations if the commission finds that such stations are required in order to furnish adequate radio broadcasting service and that their operation will not interfere with the fair and efficient radio service of licensed stations.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this follows practically the language of the bill, striking out "250 watts" and leaving it in the discretion of the commission to grant a license if the needs of the public so require.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, this is an amendment which has been much discussed. I do not have any strong opposition to it, though I hardly feel that I want to endorse it. I will leave it to the Senate to vote upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Cutting	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Ashurst	Dickinson	King	Schall
Austin	Dill	La Follette	Shipstead
Bachman	Duffy	Lewis	Smith
Bailey	Erickson	Logan	Steiwer
Bankhead	Fess	Lonergan	Stephens
Barkley	Fletcher	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Black	Frazier	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Bone	George	McKellar	Thompson
Borah	Gibson	McNary	Townsend
Brown	Glass	Metcalf	Tydings
Bulkley	Goldsborough	Murphy	Vandenberg
Bulow	Hale	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Byrd	Harrison	Norris	Wagner
Byrnes	Hastings	Nye	Walcott
Capper	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Clark	Hatfield	Overton	Wheeler
Connally	Hayden	Patterson	White
Copeland	Hebert	Pope
Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, carrying out the views expressed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], myself, and other Senators upon the floor, we have agreed to the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out from line 1 page 9 to the words "per annum" on line 12, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

(f) Without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, the commission may appoint and prescribe the duties and fix the salaries of a secretary, a chief engineer, and a general counsel; and each commissioner may, without regard to the civil-service laws, appoint and prescribe the duties of an assistant whose compensation shall be fixed in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. The general counsel and the chief engineer shall each receive an annual salary of not to exceed $9,000. The secretary shall receive an annual salary not to exceed $7,500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in explanation of the amendment, I desire to state that I have obtained the published pamphlet of the civil service retirement and salary classification laws. I find on page 19 of that pamphlet, among the various employees who are classified for the purpose of fixing salaries, a group known as "professional and scientific service." The classification board has classified this group into seven grades; and it is provided that the annual rate of compensation for positions in grade 7 "shall be $7,500, unless a higher rate is specially authorized by law."

I find that all through this compilation of laws an attempt is made by the classification board to establish various classifications of salaries, in some instances salaries which reach as high as $9,000, providing for every official in the Government other than those designated by law.

I understand that this amendment is acceptable to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire as to the meaning of the word "assistant." That may mean much, and it may mean little. It may mean that an assistant is to have a grade slightly below the principal, at a very large salary.

If the assistant is to fall within the category of secretary, that is one thing.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. In drafting this amendment in cooperation with the Senator from Massachusetts, it was understood that the assistant in this case means a commissioner's secretary, and the assistant falls within the salary fixed by the Classification Act.

Mr. KING. If it is understood that the word "assistant" does not mean an assistant commissioner, or an "under secretary", such as it is now so common to call officials, or some other high position in the Government, that is one thing. However, I shall accept the explanation made by the able Senator from Michigan and give to the word "assistant" the meaning ascribed to it; but I am afraid that when the commission attempt to interpret the word "assistant" they will attribute to it quite a different meaning and insist that it calls for one who has large experience and has ability to deal with practical questions in connection with radio, and so forth, and claim for the "assistant" compensation greatly in excess of that indicated or which would be required for a secretary.

If the Senator understands that it is really a secretary who is meant, that is a different matter.

Mr. DILL. It is really a secretary.

Mr. KING. I ask the clerk to read again the compensation provided for the attorney and the engineer. Meanwhile I may say, Mr. President, that I think we have been unwise in fixing the salaries and compensation for many of these new organizations. I think we have gone wild, to use the language of the street, and I know that we are bringing upon ourselves considerable criticism by reason of the fact that some of these new agencies, new bureaus, and new organizations are permitted to pay compensation in excess of that given to many employees in regular organizations and departments of the Government. That common policy results in discontent. When persons working in the Treasury Department or in some other department who have been there for many years, receiving four, five, or six thousand dollars per annum, find that individuals, perhaps with less ability and less qualifications, in some of these new organizations are getting two or three or four thousand dollars more per annum than they get, obviously there will be resentment and a feeling of discrimination.

Mr. President, I think we have gone too far in providing the large salaries in new organizations which have been set up. Notwithstanding the speech made by the Senator from Kentucky, these new organizations ought to come within the Classification Act. We ought to treat all alike. There is no trouble in getting individuals to come here and accept jobs. They come here in myriads seeking them. I have from 25 to 50 callers every day from various parts of the United States who are here seeking positions—lawyers, engineers, accountants, men who have received large salaries and have been employed in responsible positions, and who would be glad now to get $150 or $200 a month; yet when we come to fix the compensation of officials in some of these new organizations we do not take into account the condition of the country, the burdens imposed upon the Government, and the demands made upon the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. DILL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. KING. I yield to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, as I understand the amendment that has been offered, when we get through setting up this commission we shall have 5 commissioners, 5 assistant commissioners, and 5 private secretaries.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. DILL. Oh, no!

Mr. WALSH. We shall have a private secretary to each commissioner.

Mr. DILL. But not five assistants.

Mr. WALSH. Each commissioner is to have an assistant.

Mr. DILL. That is his clerk or secretary.

Mr. COUZENS. That is what it is intended for.

Mr. WALSH. There is quite a difference between an assistant to the commissioner and a secretary to the commissioner.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this employee has been dignified with the title of assistant commissioner, but he is expected to serve as secretary.

Mr. DILL. There will be no assistant commissioners.

Mr. KING. May I ask the chairman of the committee what is meant by the provision on page 14—

> Each division may * * * appoint a director, without regard to the Civil Service laws or the Classification Act * * *, at an annual salary—

It was $8,000, and it has been reduced to $7,500. What is a director?

Mr. DILL. A director is a man to be appointed to try to carry out the administrative work of these divisions, to save the commissioners from doing the detail work they now have to do. It is believed that they can avoid employing a great deal of additional help which otherwise would have to be chosen if these directors can be provided. I do not know how the plan will work; it is an experiment; but there are 17,000 amateur licenses in this country, and they are renewed every 6 months. There ought to be somebody handling that work besides the chairman of the Commission.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we find the engineer and the other assistants——

Mr. DILL. The Senator was talking about the salary of the engineer and the attorney.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. DILL. The present chief counsel of the Radio Commission gets $10,000.

Mr. KING. That is too much.

Mr. DILL. The chief engineer gets $10,000.

Mr. KING. That is too much.

Mr. DILL. We are cutting it to $9,000, and I think that when we are putting both the great telephone monopoly and the radio, with all the ramifications, under one commission, $9,000 is not an exorbitant salary. Certainly as to the engineer, with the responsibility on him that is coming with the development of radio, $9,000 is not an exorbitant salary.

Mr. KING. I will ask that the clerk read the salary to be paid the engineer and the salary to be paid the counsel.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK (reading):

> The chief enginer shall receive an annual salary not to exceed $9,000, and the secretary shall receive an annual salary not to exceed $7,500.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move to strike out "$7,500" and to insert in lieu thereof "$6,000." I think that is sufficient for the secretary of the commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I am in favor of the movement that is being made to require, so far as possible, that the civil-service law shall be followed, although I do agree, and have agreed all along, that in the case of experts we really ought to keep the way open, so that special talent may be selected without the requirement of an examination, which would not be the best method for getting the highest talent.

On the question of salaries, I do not see how we can very well classify this commission with other commissions. It will have a duty to perform probably as complicated as that of most of the other commissions. As to the counsel, we ought to realize that where the counsel of this commission will be called in to prosecute a case he will be up against the best talent money can buy, and while I believe legal talent could be found which would lend itself to the service of the Government at a smaller salary, I doubt very much whether it would be wise to cut the salary below what the bill has suggested, for the legal counsel at least. I do not care so much about the engineer or the examiners, but as to the legal counsel, I think that is quite essential.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, there is a provision on page 14 with reference to directors. I am frank to say that I feel it is absolutely wrong to appoint two directors. I think it would result in dividing up the responsibility of the commission. The commissioners are to be appointed, and they are to be paid good salaries, and there are to be lawyers and engineers and assistants and secretaries, and then they are to appoint directors. When those directors are appointed the responsibility which ought to be placed upon the commissioners will be divided.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that in the Interstate Commerce Commission there are nine directors, their salaries ranging from $7,500 to $10,000 a year. The Interstate Commerce Commission has found that they are so important and so valuable that they have nine of them. I do not think it is unreasonable, in a commission of the kind to be appointed under this measure, that there should be two directors, and that their salaries should be $10,500.

Mr. WHEELER. My own view about the matter is, as I said a moment ago, that we are loading these commissions up with many high-salaried employees who are not necessary. We talk about getting experts in these commissions, and every Senator knows that, as a matter of fact, they are not experts at all; that we are filling some of the commissions with politicians.

Mr. WALSH. May I inquire of the Senator, or, through him, of the Senator from Washington, whether the bill contains a provision taking over the present Radio Commission?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. So that, in addition to the present personnel of the Radio Commission, we are creating all these new jobs. Has the Senator any conception of what the pay roll will be?

Mr. DILL. There is no requirement to keep the employees of the Radio Commission. The new commission are simply empowered to take it over.

Mr. WALSH. Those who are now employed in the Radio Commission are under the civil service?

Mr. DILL. Not all of them. Quite a number of them are. The assistants who are to be stricken out are not under the civil service today.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator know what the salaries of the present employees are?

Mr. DILL. In the Radio Commission the chief engineer gets $10,000, the chief counsel gets $10,000, and the salaries range below that. I do not know the salaries of the assistants.

Mr. WALSH. What are the salaries of the directors?

Mr. DILL. There are no directors in the Radio Commission.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is proposing to provide for directors?

Mr. DILL. Two are provided for. The Interstate Commerce Commission has 9, and has found it necessary to have that number of directors; so I do not think it is unreasonable to ask for 2 in this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, what information does the Senator expect the Government to get that will be of any benefit based upon the information which we have respecting the activities of the I.C.C., where the duty is devolved upon the commission to ascertain the value of the property?

Mr. DILL. The commission is given permissive power, not mandatory power, to determine valuations, if it finds it advantageous to do so in the determination of the returns and rates.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that many years ago the so-called "La Follette Act" was passed under which we have expended more than $50,000,000.

Mr. DILL. It is to avoid that sort of thing that we have made this permissive.

Mr. KING. The Interstate Commerce Commission was to determine the valuation of the railroads. The valuation of the railroads 10, or 20, or 25 years ago furnishes no information or data now satisfactory as a basis for the fixing of rates. I was just wondering what value there would be if we are to duplicate the work of the Interstate Commerce Commission with respect to a different subject.

Mr. DILL. The Senator realizes that there must be some power somewhere to find out what the valuation is, if they are to fix rates; but it is not mandatory.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that in the paragraph providing for the two directors is this language:

> Any action so taken by a division and any order, decision, or report made or other action taken by either of said divisions in respect of any matters assigned to it shall have the same force and effect, and may be made, evidenced, and enforced in the same manner as if made or taken by the commission.

In other words, they will appoint two directors, who will have the same force and effect as commissioners.

Mr. DILL. No; anything a director does may be set aside on objection.

Mr. WHEELER. But, unless it is set aside——

Mr. DILL. If it is satisfactory to everybody, there is no reason why it should be set aside.

Mr. WHEELER. The bill provides that—

> The director for each division shall exercise such of the functions thereof as may be vested in him by the division, but any order of the director shall be subject to review by the division under such rules and regulations as the commission shall prescribe.

Mr. DILL. It may be affirmed, or set aside. The duties of the directors are merely routine.

Mr. COUZENS. There are dozens of them in the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. WHEELER. Even if there are, it seems to me it is foolish to provide for a number of directors, and a number of other officers, on this commission. I shall not move to strike the provision out, however, although I think it is unnecessary.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I do not mean anything personal toward the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] in what I am about to say, but, in view of what I myself have observed before the Committee on Education and Labor, of which I have the honor to be chairman, as to the agitation for new commissions, and in view of the discussion here today, I wish to say that in the future I intend to inquire, when a bill is reported creating a new commission, whether or not the salary list and the number of employees and the amounts to be paid have been referred to the Budget for report. Let the administration take the responsibility of piling up these big salary lists.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator is not prophesying that there are to be new commissions created. I hope the day has come when we will not create any more.

Mr. WALSH. There are four or five in sight, developed here during the last few days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Cutting	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Dickinson	King	Schall
Bachman	Dill	La Follette	Shipstead
Bailey	Duffy	Lewis	Smith
Bankhead	Erickson	Logan	Steiwer

S. 2568. An act granting a leave of absence to settlers of homestead lands during the years 1932, 1933, and 1934; and

S. 3144. An act to legalize a bridge across the St. Louis River at or near Cloquet, Minn.

G. T. FLEMING

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3364) for the relief of G. T. Fleming, which was, on page 1, line 12, after "1923", to insert:

> Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. BYRNES. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

THE BUDGET AND APPROPRIATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

In my Budget message to the Congress of January 3, 1934, I said to you:

> It is evident to me, as I am sure it is evident to you, that powerful forces for recovery exist. It is by laying a foundation of confidence in the present and faith in the future that the upturn which we have so far seen will become cumulative. The cornerstone of this foundation is the good credit of the Government.

It is, therefore, not strange nor is it academic that this credit has a profound effect upon the confidence so necessary to permit the new recovery to develop into maturity.

If we maintain the course I have outlined, we can confidently look forward to cumulative beneficial forces represented by increased volume of business, more general profit, greater employment, a diminution of relief expenditures, larger governmental receipts and repayments, and greater human happiness.

The Budget which I submitted to the Congress proposed expenditures for the balance of this fiscal year and for the coming fiscal year which, in the light of expected revenues, called for a definite deficiency on June 30, 1935, but, at the same time, held out the hope that annual deficits would terminate during the following fiscal year.

It is true that actual expenditures since January have proceeded at a slower rate than estimated; nevertheless, it must be borne in mind that, even though the actual deficit for the year ending June 30, 1934, will be below my estimate, appropriations are still in force and the amounts actually to be expended during the following fiscal year will therefore be increased over and above my estimate for that fiscal year. In this connection it is relevant to point out that during the fiscal year 1935 it is estimated that there will be actually expended on public works $1,500,000,000 out of appropriations heretofore made.

In my Budget message of January 3, 1934, it was pointed out that there could be no abrupt termination of emergency expenditures for recovery purposes, that the necessity for relief would continue, and that appropriations amounting to $3,166,000,000, in addition to the appropriations contained in the Budget itself, would be requested for the 2 fiscal years ending June 30, 1935.

The present Congress has already made appropriations out of which, for the 2 fiscal years in question, it is estimated there will be expended the following sums:

Relief	$950,000,000
Crop loans	40,000,000
Farm mortgages	40,000,000
Reconstruction Finance Corporation	500,000,000
Veterans' benefits	22,000,000
Army Air Corps	5,000,000
Flood control, Mississippi River, etc	29,000,000
Independent offices act	228,000,000
Miscellaneous supplemental estimates	30,000,000
Total	1,844,000,000

This leaves a balance of $1,322,000,000 to be appropriated.

Out of this balance it is necessary first to take the specific items to be appropriated for:

Federal land banks:
Subscription to paid-in surplus	$75,000,000
Reduction in interest payments	7,950,000
Emergency Bank Act and gold transfer	3,000,000
Internal Revenue Service	10,000,000
Salaries, Office of the Secretary of the Treasury	100,000
Secret Service	45,000
Total	96,095,000

This leaves $1,225,905,000 available for the following purposes: Civilian Conservation Corps camps, Public Works, and relief work, in addition to amounts already appropriated, and including aid to the dairy- and beef-cattle industries.

It is estimated that the minimum requirements for the Civilian Conservation Corps will be $285,000,000, and that the amount available, therefore, for Public Works and relief will be $940,905,000. A very simple check-up of these figures shows that they total $3,166,000,000, to which reference was made in my Budget message of January 3, 1934.

It was my thought in January and is my thought now that this sum should be appropriated to me under fairly broad powers, because of the fact that no one could then or can now determine the exact needs under hard and fixed appropriation headings. In furtherance of this thought it seems appropriate to provide that any savings which can be effected out of certain appropriations made for emergency purposes shall be available for emergency-relief purposes.

In my judgment an appropriation in excess of the above amount would make more difficult, if not impossible, an actual balance of the Budget in the fiscal year 1936, unless greatly increased taxes are provided. The present estimates should be sufficient, as a whole, to take care of the emergencies of relief and of orderly reemployment at least until the early part of the calendar year 1935. If at that time conditions have not improved as much as we today hope, the next Congress will be in session and will have full opportunity to act.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 15, 1934.

PREVENTION OF CRIME

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma obtained the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the able Senator from Oklahoma will be so kind as to indulge me for just a moment, I respectfully ask that the conference reports on the so-called "antigangster" bills be laid before the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona?

There being no objection, the Vice President laid before the Senate the following conference reports:

WM. E. BORAH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

HATTON W. SUMNERS,
A. J. MONTAGUE,
TOM D. MCKEOWN,
RANDOLPH PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it will be observed that the reports relate to seven different bills. In frankness, I ought to say that the able Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] has indicated opposition to the conference report on one of the bills. Therefore, I think I should send for him and defer for a few minutes the consideration of the particular report until I can confer with him. I should like to have action, however, on the other six reports, leaving unacted for the time being the conference report on Senate bill 2253.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the reports, with the exception of the one on the bill mentioned by the Senator from Arizona, will be agreed to.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, just a moment. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Arizona if he has conferred with the various Members of the Senate to ascertain if the reports are acceptable to them?

Mr. ASHURST. I have conferred with as many Members of the Senate as it has been practicable for me to reach.

The conferees were the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and myself. The Senate receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the House in many, if not most, cases, save and except with respect to the bill on the subject of fleeing witnesses. An amendment was made to that bill by the House of Representatives, and it will be remembered that the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] served notice that they would oppose any report which struck from the bill the provisions adopted by the Senate as to penalizing persons who flee the jurisdiction of the courts and cross State lines in order to avoid giving testimony in criminal cases. That is the bill to which the able Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is opposed.

Mr. McNARY. What I am particularly interested in knowing is whether the members of the Judiciary Committee are familiar with the conference reports and agree to their provisions?

Mr. ASHURST. I believe I can say that a majority of the members of the Committee on the Judiciary are familiar with the reports. Of course, I cannot say that all of them are.

Mr. McNARY. I understand that. I have, then, no objection to the consideration of the reports first enumerated.

Mr. ASHURST. Of the six?

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to agreeing to the reports en bloc, with the exception of the report on Senate bill 2253? The Chair hears none, and the reports are agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if later it shall be convenient for the Senator from Montana to be present, he being out of the Chamber at the moment, I should like to secure consent to consider the conference report on the fleeing-witness bill. I will not detain the Senate now, however; but if I may secure permission in a few moments to recur to that report, I shall endeavor to do so.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9061, being the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 9061) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee and those authorized to be offered by the committee be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The clerk will state the first amendment.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 4, after the word "addition", to strike out "$4,364,295" and insert "$5,700,000", so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, any revenue (not including the proportionate share of the United States in any revenue arising as the result of the expenditure of appropriations made for the fiscal year 1924 and prior fiscal years) now required by law to be credited to the District of Columbia and the United States in the same proportion that each contributed to the activity or source from whence such revenue was derived shall be credited wholly to the District of Columbia, and, in addition $5,700,000 is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be advanced July 1, 1934, and all of the remainder out of the combined revenues of the District of Columbia, namely:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "General expenses—Executive Office", on page 3, line 17, after the word "services", to strike out "$31,851" and insert "$33,651", and at the end of line 18, to strike out "$32,121" and insert "$33,921", so as to read:

For personal services, including temporary labor, and service of cleaners as necessary at not to exceed 48 cents per hour, $86,130.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Alcoholic Beverage Control Board", on page 4, line 23, after the word "service", to insert "not exceeding $500 for the purchase of samples", and in line 24, after the word "expenses" to strike out "$28,352" and insert "$55,900", so as to read:

For personal services, advertising, printing and binding, streetcar and bus transportation, telephone service, not exceeding $500 for the purchase of samples, and other necessary contingent and miscellaneous expenses, $55,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of superintendent of weights, measures, and markets", on page 5, line 13, to increase the appropriation for personal services under that office from $39,654 to $41,760.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 21, to insert:

For the construction of shelters, paving, and for such other improvements as the Commissioners may deem necessary at the Farmers' Produce Market, $22,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Utilities Commission", on page 6, line 15, after the word "services", to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$86,823", so as to read:

For two commissioners, people's counsel, and for other personal services, $86,823, of which amount not to exceed $5,000 may be used for the employment of expert services by contract or otherwise and without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 21, after the word "newspapers", to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$1,500", so as to read:

For incidental and all other general necessary expenses authorized by law, including the purchase of newspapers, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Free Public Library", on page 10, line 3, after the word "vehicle", to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$32,500", so as to read:

For maintenance, alterations, repairs, fuel, lighting, fitting up buildings, care of grounds, maintenance of motor delivery vehicles, and other contingent expenses, including not to exceed $700 for purchase and exchange of one motor delivery vehicle, $32,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 8, after the figures "$150,000", to insert a comma and "of which $4,500 shall be immediately available for the preparation of plans and specifications", so as to read:

For a building for a Georgetown branch library, including necessary furniture and equipment, and improvement of grounds, $150,000, of which $4,500 shall be immediately available for the preparation of plans and specifications.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Register of wills", on page 10, line 11, to increase the appropriation for personal services under that office from $63,531 to $64,827.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 18, after the word "periodicals", to strike out "$9,000" and insert "$10,000", so as to read:

For miscellaneous and contingent expenses, telephone, bills, printing, typewriters, photostat paper and supplies, including laboratory coats and photographic developing room equipment, towels, towel service, window washing, street-car tokens, furniture and equipment and repairs thereto, and purchase of books of reference, law books, and periodicals, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Recorder of deeds", on page 10, line 20, after the word "services", to strike out "$75,754" and insert "$100,000", so as to read:

For personal services, $100,000, of which $6,000 shall be available only for recopying old land records of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 6, after the word "expenses", to strike out "$7,500" and insert "$10,000", so as to read:

For miscellaneous and contingent expenses, including telephone service, printing, binding, rebinding, repairing, and preservation of records; typewriters, towels, towel service, furniture and equipment and repairs thereto; books of reference, law books and periodicals, street-car tokens, postage, not exceeding $100 for rest room for sick and injured employees and the equipment of and medical supplies for said rest room, and all other necessary incidental expenses, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Contingent and Miscellaneous Expenses", on page 11, line 14, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$1,250"; and in line 22, after the word "offices" and the semicolon, to strike out "$35,000" and insert "$36,000", so as to read:

For checks, books, law books, books of reference, periodicals, newspapers, stationery; surveying instruments and implements; drawing materials; binding, rebinding, repairing, and preservation of records; ice; repairs to pound and vehicles; traveling expenses not to exceed $1,250, including payment of dues and traveling expenses in attending conventions when authorized by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; expenses authorized by law in connection with the removal of dangerous or unsafe and insanitary buildings, including payment of a fee of $6 per diem to each member of board of survey, other than the inspector of buildings, while actually employed on surveys of dangerous or unsafe buildings; and other general necessary expenses of District offices; $36,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 3, after the word "binding", to strike out "$35,000" and insert "including personal services, $40,000", so as to read:

For printing and binding, including personal services, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Central garage", on page 12, line 8, after the word "services", to strike out "$52,000" and insert "$56,806", and at the end of line 12, to strike out "$60,000" and insert "$64,806", so as to read:

For maintenance, care, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying automobiles owned by the District of Columbia, including personal services, $56,806; for exchange of such passenger-carrying automobiles now owned by the District of Columbia as, in the judgment of the Commissioners of said District, have or shall become unserviceable, $8,000; in all, $64,806.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 14, after the word "equipment", to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$25,000", so as to read:

For postage for strictly official mail matter, including the rental of postage meter equipment, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under heading "Street and road improvement and repair", on page 16, line 7, before the word "personal" to strike out "all", so as to read:

For personal services, $161,550, payable from the special fund created by section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for a tax on motor-vehicle fuels sold within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved April 23, 1924 (43 Stat. 106), and accretions by repayment of assessments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 20, after the word "vehicles", to strike out "$65,000" and insert "and including not to exceed $9,000 for surveys, engineering investigations, and preparation of plans for a viaduct or bridge in the line of Franklin Street NE., over the tracks of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, $74,000", so as to read:

For construction, maintenance, operation, and repair of bridges, including maintenance of non-passenger-carrying motor vehicles, and including not to exceed $9,000 for surveys, engineering investigations, and preparation of plans for a viaduct or bridge in the line of Franklin Street NE., over the tracks of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, $74,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 5, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$2,090,000" and insert "$2,099,000", so as to read:

In all, not to exceed $2,099,000, to be immediately available; to be disbursed and accounted for as "Gasoline tax, road, and street improvements and repairs", and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 15, after the name "District of Columbia", to strike out the colon and "Provided further, That the amount expended hereunder shall not exceed $50,000", so as to read:

To carry out the provisions of existing law which authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to open, extend, straighten, or widen any street, avenue, road, or highway, except Fourteenth Street extension beyond the southern boundary of Walter Reed Hospital Reservation, in accordance with the plan of the permanent system of highways for the District of Columbia, there is appropriated such sum as is necessary for said purpose, including the procurement of chains of title, during the fiscal year 1935, to be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available to carry out the provisions of existing law for the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of alleys and minor streets and for the establishment of building lines in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 12, to strike out:

No part of the appropriations contained in this act shall be used for the operation of a testing laboratory of the highways department for making tests of materials in connection with any activity of the District government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 24, after the word "sewers", to strike out "$20,094" and insert "$65,094, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose, contained in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1933", so as to read:

For assessment and permit work, sewers, including not to exceed $1,000 for purchase or condemnation of rights-of-way for construction, maintenance, and repair of public sewers, $65,094, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose, contained in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1933.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma what progress is being made toward connecting Rock Creek Park with East Potomac Park?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if I remember correctly, that matter was not mentioned during the hearings on the pending bill. No request was submitted, and there was nothing introduced in the hearings in relation to that particular project.

Mr. FESS. It has just been suggested to me that that work will be suspended until the bridge over P Street shall have been finished.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There was no estimate submitted and no request was made for a hearing on the subject.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Ohio that the Park and Planning Commission, of which I am ex officio a member, have been giving a great deal of attention to the park system and to the plan to connect the parks with a number of old forts in the vicinity of Washington. I can assure the Senator that if we can secure a little more money from the Public Works Administration the work contemplated under surveys heretofore made will be speedily carried forward.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, not to detain the Senate at all—and I will not do so—I have been greatly interested in the possibility of connecting Rock Creek Park, which of itself is as fine as it can be, and East Potomac Park. There seem to be some insurmountable obstacles that have been existing for 4 or 5 years. One is the difficulty of getting under Massachusetts Avenue; another is the construction of the P Street Bridge. It would seem that those obstacles would not be difficult to overcome, but I was told that the great difficulty is that Congress has not made the necessary response in the way of appropriations, and I wonder whether there is any obstacle in the way of lack of money at the present time?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator is doubtless familiar with the fact that this body has passed a bill authorizing the District Commissioners to apply to the Public Works Administration for a loan of $20,000,000, and the measure specifically states that two millions of that amount shall be for the parks. So if that bill shall pass the House, as those of us who are interested in it hope it may, there will be ample money to carry forward the very desirable project suggested by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. That is the answer to my question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Collection and disposal of refuse", on page 24, line 4, to increase the appropriation for personal services from "$124,335" to "$126,900."

For personal services, $19,080; temporary labor, $5,220; for expenses of camps, including hire of horses for officers required to be mounted, and for the payment of commutation of subsistence for enlisted men who may be detailed to guard or move the United States property at home stations on days immediately preceding and immediately following the annual encampments; damages to private property incident to encampment; reimbursement to the United States for loss of property for which the District of Columbia may be held responsible; cleaning and repairing uniforms, arms, and equipment; instruction, purchase, and maintenance of athletic, gymnastic, and recreational equipment at armory or field encampments, not to exceed $500; practice marches, drills, and parades; rent of armories, drill halls, and storehouses; fuel, light, heat, care, and repair of armories, offices, and storehouses; machinery and dock, including dredging alongside of dock; construction of buildings for storage and other purposes at target range; telephone service; printing, stationery, and postage; horses and mules for mounted organizations; maintenance and operation of passenger and non-passenger-carrying motor vehicles; street-car fares (not to exceed $200) necessarily used in the transaction of official business; not exceeding $400 for traveling expenses, including attendance at meetings or conventions of associations pertaining to the National Guard; and for general incidental expenses of the service, $9,000; in all, $33,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "National Capital Parks", on page 69, line 3, to increase the appropriation for personal services under the Public Parks of the District of Columbia from $300,000 to $314,880.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "National Capital Park and Planning Commission", on page 71, at the end of line 10, to strike out "$31,000" and insert "$33,096", so as to read:

For each and every purpose, except the acquisition of land, requisite for and incident to the work of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission as authorized by the act entitled "An act providing for a comprehensive development of the park and playground system of the National Capital" approved June 6, 1924 (U.S.C., title 40, sec. 71), as amended, including personal services in the District of Columbia, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, not to exceed $1,500 for printing and binding, not to exceed $500 for traveling expenses and car fare of employees of the Commission, and not to exceed $300 for professional, scientific, technical, and reference books, and periodicals, $33,096.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Water service—Washington Aqueduct", on page 73, line 11, after the word "motor", to strike out "trucks" and insert "vehicles", and in line 21, after the word "maintenance", to strike out "$300,000" and insert "$323,950", so as to read:

For maintenance of the water department distribution system, including pumping stations and machinery, water mains, valves, fire and public hydrants, and all buildings and accessories, and motor vehicles, and the replacement by purchase and/or exchange of the following motor-propelled vehicles: One 1½-ton special truck not to exceed $1,800, and one 4-ton truck not to exceed $2,000; purchase of fuel, oils, waste, and other materials, and the employment of all labor necessary for the proper execution of this work; and for contingent expenses, including books, blanks, stationery, printing and binding not to exceed $2,500, postage, purchase of technical reference books and periodicals not to exceed $275, and other necessary items, $7,500; in all for maintenance, $323,950, of which not exceeding $5,000 shall be available for operation of pumps at Bryant Street pumping station upon interruption of service from Dalecarlia pumping station.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, line 3, after the word system", to strike out "$142,000" and insert "$213,750", so as to read:

For extension of the water department distribution system, laying of such service mains as may be necessary under the assessment system, $213,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, line 8, after the name "District of Columbia", to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$85,500", so as to read:

For installing and repairing water meters on services to private residences and business places as may not be required to install meters under existing regulations, as may be directed by the Commissioners; said meters at all times to remain the property of the District of Columbia, $85,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, line 14, after the word "pavements", to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$117,900", so as to read:

For replacement of old mains and divide valves in various locations, on account of inadequate size and bad condition of pipe on account of age, and laying mains in advance of pavements, $117,900, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 4, after the word "thereof", to insert "including rental of storage space", so as to read:

The Commissioners, or their duly designated representatives, are further authorized to employ temporarily such laborers, skilled laborers, drivers, hostlers, and mechanics as may be required exclusively in connection with sewer, water, street, and road work, and street cleaning, or the construction and repair of buildings, and bridges, furniture and equipments, and any general or special engineering or construction or repair work, and to incur all necessary engineering and other expenses, exclusive of personal services, incidental to carrying on such work and necessary for the proper execution thereof, including rental of storage space, said laborers, skilled laborers, drivers, hostlers, and mechanics to be employed to perform such work as may not be required by law to be done under contract, and to pay for such services and expenses from the appropriations under which such services are rendered and expenses incurred.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, after line 13, to strike out:

SEC. 7. No part of the funds appropriated in this act for any activity shall be available for transfer to any other activity or between subheads of the same activity.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, as authorized by the committee, I submit the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 32, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

For aid in the education of children (between the ages of 16 and 21 years, inclusive, who have had their domicile in the District of Columbia for at least 5 years) of those who lost their lives during the World War as a result of service in the military or naval forces of the United States, including tuition, fees, maintenance, and the purchase of books and supplies, $3,600: Provided, That not more than $200 shall be available for any one child during the fiscal year 1935: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be expended for such children while attending educational institutions of a secondary or college grade under rules and regulations prescribed by the Board of Education.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am authorized to submit another amendment on behalf of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 57, line 12, after the figures "$52,000", to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That in case a satisfactory price cannot be agreed upon for the purchase of said land, the Attorney General of the United States, upon the request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, is directed to acquire said land by condemnation, title to be taken directly to and in the name of the United States, and the expenses of condemnation shall be paid out of the appropriation herein made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am authorized to submit a third amendment on behalf of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 75, at the end of line 20, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the assessment rate herein prescribed shall be applicable to assessments for sewer and water mains constructed and laid subsequent to January 1, 1923, in the subdivision of Barry Farm, as said subdivision appears on the records of the Surveyor of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The committee authorized a fourth amendment, which will be submitted by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE].

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 20, after line 4, to insert:

Michigan Avenue viaduct: For the construction of a viaduct or bridge and approaches thereto in line of Michigan Avenue NE., as now located on the permanent system of highways of the District of Columbia, between Brookland Avenue and Perry Street NE., over the tracks of the right-of-way of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., in accordance with plans and profiles of said work to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, including the purchase and/or condemnation, under subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, and amendments thereto, of necessary land in accordance with the highway plan, construction of, and changes in sewer and water mains, personal services and engineering and incidental expenses, $450,000: Provided, That one half of the total cost, excepting land, of constructing said viaduct or bridge and approaches shall be borne and paid by the said railroad company, its successors and assigns, to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia, and the same shall be a valid and subsisting lien against the franchises and property of the said railroad company and shall constitute a legal indebtedness of said company in favor of the District of Columbia, and the said lien may be enforced in the name of the District of Columbia by a bill in equity brought by the said Commissioners in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, or by any other lawful proceeding against the said railroad company: Provided further, That from and after the completion of the said viaduct and approaches, the highway grade crossing over the tracks and right-of-way of the said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. in line of present Michigan Avenue shall be forever closed against further traffic of any kind.

And in line 5, to strike out "$2,099,000" and insert "$2,549,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, at the request of the Board of Education and on my own responsibility, I submit the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 28, line 15, after the word "superintendents", to insert "including also compensation to be fixed by the Board of Education and the traveling expenses of educational consultants employed in character education."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. GLASS, Mr. COPELAND, Mr. KING, Mr. NYE, and Mr. KEYES conferees on the part of the Senate.

RETURN OF MACE OF PARLIAMENT OF UPPER CANADA

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution; and if there be no objection, I should like to have it considered at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report the joint resolution for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 121) authorizing the President to return the mace of the Parliament of Upper Canada to the Canadian Government, the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas the mace of the Parliament of Upper Canada, or Ontario, has been the symbol of legislative authority at York (now Toronto) since 1792; and

Whereas the mace then in use was taken at the battle of York, April 27, 1813, by the United States forces and since has been preserved in the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis; and

Whereas on July 4, 1934, there is to be unveiled in Toronto a memorial tablet erected by the United States Daughters of 1812, to the memory of General Pike and others of the United States forces who were killed in action:

Resolved, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to return said mace to the Canadian Government in token of the mutual friendship and good will existing between the people of the United States and those of Canada.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arkansas if this is the matter referred to in the President's message a few days ago?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is. The President sent to the Senate some days ago a message setting forth the facts, namely, that at the Battle of York in 1813 the mace, which was the symbol of legislative authority in upper Canada, Toronto being the capital, was taken possession of by United States troops. Since that time it has been in the Naval Academy at Annapolis as a trophy.

On July 4 of this year the Daughters of 1812 will erect in Toronto a tablet to the memory of General Pike and others who fell in that war. The city of Toronto has provided the site for the memorial. It is in recognition of the friendly relations that have long existed between Canada and the United States, and which it is hoped will continue to exist, that the President proposes to return the mace to the Canadian Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceed to consider the joint resolution, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

PREVENTION OF CRIME

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I now feel constrained to ask for action on the conference report on Senate bill 2253, making it unlawful for any person to flee from one State to another for the purpose of avoiding prosecution in certain cases. I have sent messengers for the able Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and I should like to secure action, with the understanding, of course, that, if the Senator from Montana feels that precipitate action has been taken, I shall consent to a motion to reconsider.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret to interpose any objection to what the chairman of the committee of which I am a member requests in regard to this matter; but I know the attitude of the Senator from Montana. I have been trying to find him. He left his office some little time ago. I suggest that the Senator let the conference report go over until tomorrow morning.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well. I withdraw the request.

Mr. VANDENBERG subsequently said: Mr. President, if I may recur to the conference report which the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] submitted, and to the consideration of which objection was made because of the absence of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], I should like to say that I have conferred with the Senator from Montana; and he authorizes me to state that, while he is in opposition to the legislation, he is not in opposition to the present consideration and acceptance of the conference report.

Therefore, joining with the Senator from Arizona, I ask that the conference report be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2253) making it unlawful for any person to flee from one State to another for the purpose of avoiding prosecution in certain cases having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 2, 4, and amendment to the title.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment, strike out on page 1, line 3, of the Senate bill the word "flee" and insert in lieu thereof "move or travel in interstate or foreign commerce"; and the House agree to the same.

HENRY F. ASHURST,
WILLIAM H. KING,
WM. E. BORAH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

HATTON W. SUMNERS,
TOM D. MCKEOWN,
A. J. MONTAGUE,
RANDOLPH PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona a question about Senate bill 2252, to amend the act forbidding the transportation of kidnaped persons in interstate commerce. I observe that the period of time which may be considered evidence of an interstate kidnaping was changed by action of the conference committee to 7 days. In our bill it was 3 days. Was that matter given study?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, Mr. President. It was given very careful consideration; and after hearing all the arguments it was agreed that 7 days would be a more appropriate period.

The original bill carried with it a provision that if the kidnaped person should not be returned within 3 days the presumption should be that he was moved in interstate commerce. That period was extended to 7 days. It is, however, a rebuttable presumption. Is that the provision to which the Senator refers?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes. I am sorry I did not make some reference to the matter before the conference was held. I have no disposition at all to hold up the bill; but I desire to point out the fact that the Senate committee, in fixing the time at 3 days, did so deliberately. We first talked about 2 days, because if a case is to be considered an interstate case, a Federal case, it is important that the Federal officials shall have the clues while they are fresh. On that account it was desired that the time should be made as short as possible; but I can readily see that for other reasons it might be wise to extend it somewhat.

Mr. ASHURST. Let me say to the able Senator that, as he knows, some of the States, especially in the Southwest, are very large; and Members of the House—if I may be permitted to refer to what was said there—felt that the 3-day period was too short, in view of the severity of the punishment, and that 7 days would not be an unreasonable time in which the presumption should arise.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, in the case of my particular State, if the kidnapers were from New York City, in 7 days they could have the victim down in South America.

Mr. ASHURST. I recognize that as creating a very difficult situation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, before passing to another matter I wish to say that I think the amendment agreed to in conference on the kidnaping bill with reference to the presumption referred to is unfortunate. I do not know why anyone should be tender concerning the feelings of a kidnaper. If any presumption at all is to be indulged for men of the type who constitute the outlaws, who are dashing from limit to limit of this country, violating every right of our citizens, terrifying helpless mothers and children, 3 days is ample time. It is incomprehensible to me why anyone should insist upon extending the time to 7 days.

I wish to register my protest against the arrangement that was entered into in conference. I do not know what the conditions were which prompted the agreement, but I have not the slightest sympathy with it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas, in language which well becomes him, has expressed, I believe, the opinion of the Senate, and I trust I am not violating parliamentary law when I say that the Senate conferees used all the power they had to prevent increasing the time of the presumption. We did the best we could. We were acting with a view of obtaining some legislation. It is not proper for me to say what took place, but it was a question of getting legislation at all.

Personally I agree with the view of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. President, in connection with one of the antigangster bills, so called, to wit, the bill extending the provisions of the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act to other stolen property, I am about to introduce a concurrent resolution to permit a change. The numerals "1929" are used in the Senate bill. They should be "1919." I am not going to do the conventional thing of blaming the mistake on the stenographer. I lay the blame on myself. The National Motor Vehicle Act was passed in 1919.

I ask for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the concurrent resolution will be received and read.

The concurrent resolution (S.Con.Res. 16) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Senate is authorized and directed, in the enrollment of the bill (S. 2845) entitled "An act to extend the provisions of the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act to other stolen property", to strike out "1929" where it appears in section 7 thereof and insert in lieu thereof "1919."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if I may say a word to the Senator in charge of the crime bills, I have the greatest sympathy for him and the committee. I know that it is not possible for us to get everything we want. I did not get everything I wanted about many of these bills. In that connection I desire to call attention to Senate bill 2845, amending the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act, just referred to in the concurrent resolution. To my mind, it is unfortunate that the security and money value in that case was changed to $5,000 instead of $1,000.

My reason for saying that is because experience shows that the amounts carried away in the manner referred to in the bill are usually small amounts. They rarely reach $5,000; but, of course, what the racketeers will do now will be to break up their stolen goods into smaller quantities.

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, no; that is guarded against, Mr. President. Care is taken so that if there be repeated violations of the law tending to show a system or continuity, and the amounts aggregate $5,000, the punishment prescribed in the act can be inflicted. That matter is taken care of. Although the individual acts may be far apart, where a system is shown, the value of the property involved in a particular violation need not be $5,000 so long as in the aggregate the value reaches $5,000.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4253) for the relief of Laura Goldwater, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. BLACK, Mr. RAMSPECK, and Mr. GUYER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed severally to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

H.R. 916. An act for the relief of C. A. Dickson;

H.R. 4533. An act for the relief of the widow of D. W. Tanner for expense of purchasing an artificial limb; and H.R. 4973. An act for the relief of G. C. Vandover.

The message further announced that the House had agreed severally to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

H.R. 211. An act for the relief of John A. Rapelye;

H.R. 276. An act to authorize the placing of a bronze tablet bearing a replica of the Congressional Medal of Honor upon the grave of the late Brig. Gen. Robert H. Dunlap, United States Marine Corps, in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va.;

H.R. 328. An act for the relief of E. W. Gillespie;

H.R. 473. An act for the relief of Irene Brand Alper;

H.R. 1197. An act for the relief of Glenna F. Kelley;

H.R. 1211. An act for the relief of R. Gilbertsen;

H.R. 1212. An act for the relief of Marie Toenberg;

H.R. 4516. An act for the relief of B. Edward Westwood;

H.R. 5284. An act for the relief of the Playa de Flor Land & Improvement Co.; and H.R. 5405. An act for the relief of Nicola Valerio.

MEMORIAL SERVICES FOR HON. JOHN B. KENDRICK, LATE A SENATOR OF THE UNITED STATES FROM THE STATE OF WYOMING

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, on April 27 there were held in the House of Representatives the annual memorial exercises, at which the Members of Congress pay honor to the memory of those Members who have passed away during the preceding year.

One of the Members to whom that tribute of respect was paid was the late distinguished Senator whom I had the honor to succeed in this body; and it has seemed to me to be my duty to say in this Chamber, where he served so long, at least a few words in his honor.

Mr. President, for almost 17 years JOHN B. KENDRICK, of Wyoming, was a Senator of the United States. He was not only a man of unusual ability and sterling integrity, but a man of vision, of courage, and of common sense. I count it one of the most fortunate circumstances of my own experience that I had the privilege, at the outset of his senatorial career, to serve him for 3 years as his secretary, and to learn from intimate daily contact with him that the greatest rewards of life are still reserved for those who serve with industry, unselfish devotion, and dauntless courage.

He was elected and reelected by the people of his State, because they knew him for what he was, a man of character, whose course was charted by conscience. Personal or partisan interests meant nothing to him where public interest was concerned. The one test for all his acts was the public good.

Modest of mien, gentle of speech, sympathetic of nature, with an indomitable will that nothing could overcome, he inspired respect, confidence, and love among all who knew him. He had an uncommon understanding of human motives, and to this penetrating insight he added patience, tolerance, and an all-embracing sense of kindly humor.

Indeed, in JOHN B. KENDRICK were mingled in an unusual degree all those high qualities which have been found in the greatest Americans. He could stand in the market place or in the court and lend dignity to either. All men found in him something in common with themselves. Small wonder that in his own State none could be found who could compete with him for public favor.

He was more than a Senator from Wyoming. He was a Senator from the West. No public man in the last 50 years more perfectly typified the spirit of the West than he. Born in Cherokee County, Tex., September 6, 1857, he saw the settlement of the whole intermountain region. He was a part of the movement that transformed the great area between Texas and the Canadian border from an uninhabited wilderness into a populous group of States. In 1879, when driving a herd of cattle over the historic Texas Trail, he first went to what is now Wyoming, he traversed hundreds of miles of prairie in which was to be found neither a human habitation nor even a fence.

It was only natural that he understood the West and that the West understood him. Throughout his service in Washington the people of that entire region looked to him for counsel and advice. No man ever served in Congress who more accurately represented it, its ideals, its aspirations, its independence, its courage, and its loyalty.

The story of Senator KENDRICK's life should be written in detail, not only because it would give an intimate picture of the conquest of the last frontier but because in its personal phases it would be an American biography of note. KENDRICK made himself. He knew what he wanted to be. He knew what he wanted to do. Nothing would he permit to divert him from the path he had chosen. Like Lincoln, studying by candlelight in the cabin, KENDRICK, in camp, on the range, beside the bunk wagon, applied himself to the improvement of his mind. He saved the small wages of a cow hand that he might start his own herd. Industry and thrift, coupled with sound judgment and foresight, built a great cattle herd and a great career.

In his public life he left an indelible stamp upon the politics of his State. Both his high estimate of the duties of a public servant and his consummate skill as a political leader drew men to him.

Senator KENDRICK was drafted for public service. When, in 1910, he was elected to the Wyoming Legislature as a member of the senate, it was not of his own choice. It was because his people wanted him. For more than a decade at that time no major office in the State had been held by a Democrat. The party went through the motions of nominating candidates, but the election of the Republican aspirant was a foregone conclusion. In that year Senator KENDRICK brought about the nomination of a great Republican leader, the Honorable Joseph M. Carey, as the Democratic candidate for Governor. Running as a Republican, though on the Democratic ticket, Carey, himself a former United States Senator, and the father of the present senior Senator from Wyoming, was elected. Four years later, Governor Carey having decided to retire, Senator KENDRICK was elected to succeed him. In the meantime, however, in the campaign of 1912, JOHN B. KENDRICK was the Democratic choice for United States Senator against the Honorable Francis E. Warren. That was in the days when Senators were elected by the legislatures. Though, after a protracted deadlock lasting for weeks, Senator Warren was finally chosen, a larger popular vote had been cast for the legislators pledged to Mr. KENDRICK than for those who were pledged to Senator Warren.

In 1916 the Democrats of the State again drafted Mr. KENDRICK, by writing in his name on the primary ballot. He was then serving the second year of a 4-year term as Governor, and declined to become a candidate for the Senate. But though he had not announced, there was not to be found in the whole State a man who would file, so that he was the unanimous choice of his party. Elected in November 1916, he began his fruitful career in the Senate on March 4, 1917. From the very beginning of his public life he possessed the faith and confidence of the people. Year by year it grew; and had he not been untimely cut down by his own unremitting application to the service of his people, he would have been the almost unanimous choice of his State this year, for party lines in Wyoming had effectually disappeared so far as he was concerned.

The Senator—for to me he will always be "the Senator"—understood that political parties are instrumentalities to be used for the public good rather than for personal or partisan advantage. Because they knew this to be the fact, men of all parties flocked to his standard. The leader of many a bitter battle, he kept them all upon the high plane of public service. No calumny could cloud his character. No attack could dim the luster of his name. Perhaps the greatest tribute to his worth as a man is the fact that every opponent whom he vanquished became his devoted friend.

Senator KENDRICK was a gifted man, gifted not only with ability and personal charm, but also with that quality which is said to be the essence of genius—the infinite capacity for taking pains. He was never content with less than the best of which he was capable. Whether it was the building of a bunk house on the ranch, or the writing of a letter, he applied himself with concentrated energy. There was nothing superficial about him. Everything was thorough. Two words come to mind as I think now of those 3 years when I worked daily under his direction—"diligence" and "consecration." He was diligent to the utmost in every task he ever undertook, and he served his State and his country with a consecrated devotion that will never be excelled.

There is, however, a third word which to me will always be inseparable from him—"courage." He was a man of courage, not of physical courage alone, but of that much rarer and more noble quality, moral courage. Where the path of duty and conviction led, there he followed, and nothing could deter him.

He was an honor to Wyoming. He was an honor to the West. He was an honor to the Senate of the United States. While America produces men like him, its destinty is secure.

Mr. President, I have here tributes paid to Senator KENDRICK by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], and by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY]. I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the tributes were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRIBUTE BY SENATOR KEY PITTMAN, OF NEVADA

Senator JOHN B. KENDRICK was one of my beloved friends. He was a remarkable man. I have known few men who could act with the independence and courage of JOHN B. KENDRICK and yet maintain at all times the confidence even of his opponents.

No man, in my opinion, better typified the highest ideals of the great West—a cowboy herding longhorns over the trail made famous by Emerson Hough from Texas to Wyoming in those primitive and dangerous days of the Old West, without taking the life of an enemy or losing a life of those who depended upon or worked under him. Even in those days, as a young man, he was kindly and tolerant, although he possessed the courage and firmness of a leader. His character, even then, gave promise of his great future.

In a State overwhelmingly controlled by the party opposing the one to which he belonged, the citizens, notwithstanding party affiliations, for the love that they bore him and the respect they had for his sincerity, ability, and courage, elected him governor, the highest office in their State. Wyoming was proud, and justly proud, of JOHN B. KENDRICK. Then, having served his people to the full extent that their office of Governor permitted, the people of Wyoming unhesitatingly and with enthusiasm elected him as their representative in the United States Senate, that he might have a wider field of opportunity for service, not only to his State but to the Nation.

I had the honor and the great happiness to serve with him 16 years in the Senate. I am sure that he did not have an enemy in the United States Senate. He held the respect and friendship of every Member. He was loyal to his party, and yet he had that remarkable faculty of acting for his State against his administration where he felt that the welfare of his State required it, but always in such a kindly manner that no bitterness or criticism ensued.

How wonderful it is for a man to have lived his active and stirring life, on the plains, in the capital of his State, and in the great legislative Chamber, in health and vigor of mind and body, in complete happiness in all of his domestic, private, and public relations.

His name will never be forgotten in Wyoming, and it will live long in the history of his country.

TRIBUTE BY SENATOR ARTHUR CAPPER, OF KANSAS

During the 14 years that I had the pleasure of serving in the Senate, as a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with the late JOHN B. KENDRICK, I came to have a deep affection for the man himself, as well as a high regard for his ability and his conscientious and effective work as a Senator and as a member of that committee.

Senator KENDRICK was a member of that committee, which to my mind is one of the most important committees of the Senate, when I first came to the Senate in 1919. In the years that followed we were thrown much together, in spite of the fact that he and I were of different political faiths. But when it came to matters affecting agriculture, the welfare of the great West, and the general welfare of the Nation, I soon found that he measured legislation proposed on its merits, and not from any narrow partisan viewpoint.

Senator KENDRICK was a man of much practical information and knowledge. He knew what was good for his people and his State, and worked for those things. Withal he was a sensible, kindly, and fair-minded man; one who earned liking and respect, and who held that liking and respect to the end.

His departure deprived me of a personal friendship that had meant much to me. That sense of personal loss was augmented by the knowledge that Wyoming and the Nation lost the experienced leadership of a faithful public servant.

But we friends of Senator KENDRICK can and do take pride in the fact that he lived a useful and worthwhile life, and that its usefulness will long outlive the brief span of years that he and we are allowed to do the allotted tasks.

I could not allow this opportunity to pass to pay this tribute to a good man, a true friend, and a loyal public servant, who has gone to his reward. His memory will remain with us who knew him, an inspiration and a benediction.

TRIBUTE BY SENATOR CHARLES L. M'NARY, OF OREGON

UNITED STATES SENATE, CONFERENCE OF THE MINORITY,
April 26, 1934.

Hon. JOHN H. MOREHEAD,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. MOREHEAD: Many friends will bring to the memorial service for Senator KENDRICK an affectionate remembrance of a colleague universally loved.

As former Chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of which he was a member, I recall many instances of his helpfulness and his gallant courtesy, which expressed itself unfailingly toward those who differed from as well as those who shared his views.

He had a rare and generous sympathy toward all whom he believed to be oppressed. His legislative record was honorable and effective. Up to the day of his passing he was active in his most cherished duty, service to his State and to his people.

I felt a personal loss in his passing.

Sincerely,

CHAS. L. MCNARY.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is inexplicable why some, in the face of hardship and difficulty, achieve notable success, while others, enjoying equal or better opportunities, fail in almost every cherished enterprise. Whatever may be the effects on human character of early surroundings and associations, one accustomed to observing closely his fellow beings cannot escape the conviction that some are born with reserves of moral power which may be drawn upon in times of trial, while others inherit deficiencies which handicap them in the race of life.

Senator KENDRICK, throughout a long and active career, inspired his associates with respect and confidence. His capacity for clear thinking and firm decision enabled him to overcome the disadvantages inseparably connected with the period of his early life in the West—a period which antedated highways and railroads, and which marked the beginnings of development in measureless areas where only the hardy spirit of the pioneer could successfully combat the forces of nature.

It was my privilege in the summer of 1931, while a guest in his beautiful home in Sheridan, Wyo., to hear from him the story of his early life and labors. They were enveloped in an atmosphere of romance. Passing over long trails, across plains inhabited only by wild Indian tribes, he sought an attractive place in which to make his home. When he beheld the tableland on which Sheridan is located and looked upon the distant Big Horn Mountains, he said: "There is no lovelier place on earth than this."

From that time to the end of his days he gave his thought and energy to enterprises which in the course of time yielded both comforts and profits. He learned by experience every phase of the cattle business; drove great herds for winter pasturage into the remote Southwest, and returned with the herds to Wyoming ranges in the spring. Gradually he acquired and increased his livestock, until he became known as a "cattle king." There is a song, with an almost-unlimited number of stanzas, which his cowboys used to sing. It is illustrative of the esteem in which he was held, and discloses that he was recognized by them as their leader and fellow workman.

JOHN B. KENDRICK, the O W man,
Sits in the saddle like any other man.

The "O W" brand and the "O W" ranch have existed and have been well known among cattlemen for perhaps a half century. Meantime highways and railroads came and living conditions in Wyoming were greatly changed.

It was inevitable that one so prominently connected with the advancement of the State should be drawn into politics. In 1910 Mr. KENDRICK became a member of the State senate, serving with such honor and distinction that in 1914, notwithstanding the State was overwhelmingly Republican, he, a Democrat, was elected Governor. In February 1917 he resigned from the position as chief executive of Wyoming to accept a seat in the United States Senate, of which body he remained a Member until his death, the 3d day of November 1933.

The same disposition and elements of character which brought him success in business, established for him an enviable reputation as a Member of the Congress. Those who knew him will bear witness to his remarkable capacity for attention to details, his painstaking performance of duty, and his broad-minded grasp of public problems and issues. His disposition was kindly, his character irreproachable. No other Senator displayed foresight equal to that which Senator KENDRICK demonstrated in the performance of his duties. Moreover, his ability to deliberate and to reach decisions on subjects of public consequence made him one of the most valuable advisers respecting both executive and legislative affairs.

Senator KENDRICK was faithful in every relation of life. He was generous and devoted to his family and his friends. Tolerant of the views of others, responsive to sound argument, he also exemplified an independence of judgment and a freedom of action which made him admirable as a man and notable as a legislator.

He died in the harness, working until the last hour, under the burden of a great responsibility.

JOHN B. KENDRICK was a useful citizen, an incorruptible lawmaker. More than that, he was to me as loyal a friend as any man ever had.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I desire to say a word in addition to the tender sentiments expressed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] concerning our departed friend, Senator KENDRICK—sentiments which are shared by every Member of the Senate.

I served with Senator KENDRICK for nearly 16 years. He was a Senator when I came here 17 years ago this month. I served with him on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and on some minor committees. I always found him courageous, independent, dependable, and, above all, always reliable. His word was as good as the very life he cherished.

Mr. President, we on this side of the Chamber join with the Democrats in mourning the loss of so fine a character as former Senator KENDRICK.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am permitted by the able Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], at his request, to contribute a sentiment in behalf of the one whose life and character have just been beauteously described. He is one with whom I served in public life, and I delight to pay him the honor of a tribute, slight it may be in the duration of words, but deep in my sincere feelings.

Mr. President, we are inclined to look upon obituaries as a mere matter of form, and oftentimes we regard them a great burden if not a loss of time for these exercises to take place in the body of the House. We are moved to the thought that we consume time which should be applied to more immediate and practical uses.

Let it be remembered that these contributions, reciting a man's record and holding it up before the world about us, are not to pay tribute to the dead but are to let the living know the compensations there are to a noble life, if lived truly and carried to the end in a spirit of honor and justice.

The tributes inspire the young to undertakings of high purpose. They encourage our fellow mankind to feel that in their sacrifices in life of something material, of value, that which can be recounted in dollars and cents, the losses are offset by the consciousness of the affection mankind will give them, of honor that will be bestowed upon them, and the tribute, sir, of respect and praise that will be vouched them by their fellow mankind.

We here in these observations fulfill the office in endowing those about us with the knowledge that there are great rewards to a faithful life if it is lived in the service of our fellow men.

Mr. President, I am very much moved at this time to invite the honorable Senate to recall with some degree of seriousness how many of us have passed the Great Divide, since, may I say, sir, when I first came to this body under the administration we speak of as that of President Wilson. How many there were of flaming brilliancy, of unblemished character, of renown in capacity, sir, of sublime talents in execution of office. Yet they have moved from the arena of action. We turn to contemplate them. How few are remembered!

Sir, we live in an era when there are no honors in honor, when there is seemingly in many only the aspiration for mere material possession, that which for want of any other name is described with the vulgar suggestion of riches. We do not inquire as to the manner in which they have been filched from the defenseless in the sordid schemes through which they have been secured and held by those remorseless in conscience, unhesitating in offense to their fellow mankind as they enjoy the possession of this so-called "wealth", but are themselves poor in merit or virtue.

But when we can turn for a moment to contemplate a man such as just described by the able Senator from Wyoming, whose soft and richly framed tribute, conjoining with those other tributes, one from the eminent Senator from Arizona—I refer to Mr. ASHURST, whose contribution to this eminent deceased is in language of such beauty as will not be excelled and rarely equaled by any contribution the honorable Senator may afford upon any subject. We who speak are those who served with this distinguished deceased. We ask ourselves, After all, which of us, when we reach the western end, when the sun glides low to gild the surface of the little mound which sometime must embrace us—who of us would not prefer the love of our fellow men cherished in the heart, perpetuated in enduring speech, rather than the riches held around them by such as all virtue scorns, all honesty scoffs? Who would not choose that which we have here as an illustration, if we could choose the endowment which is the tribute to tenderness of heart, graciousness of manner, and glory of sacrifice, the lofty grandeur of a life that was lived in the fullness of the service to his fellow men?

Mr. President, I think it is in In Memoriam we have the tribute of Tennyson on that public man who, from his public place, returns on visit to the little village where his life began and looks about himself in strangeness, and, as we have it from the great poet, asking:

> Dost thou look back on what hath been,
> As some divinely gifted man,
> Whose life in low estate began
> And on a simple village green;
>
> Who breaks his birth's invidious bar,
> And grasps the skirts of happy chance,
> And breasts the blows of circumstance,
> And grapples with his evil star?—

Muses, do my old friends remember me?

When I heard the Senator from Arkansas, the distinguished leader of the majority, define for the moment the poetic place which in sublimity our tender deceased chose as his home, the spot of earth where the sun rose on the mountain peak that leans as a fitting monument to illustrate the strength of character defined in the life of this distinguished Senator; how his home, in silent supremacy of mount and vale, described the quiet, calm, unruffled nature of our patriot, scorning the practices of the hypocrite, the pretense of superior virtue, ever fast and firm in his convictions, and serving his office in splendor of achievement after rising from the estate of humility to eminence of first a great merchant, then an eminent leader, Governor of his State, Senator of the United States, a friend, counselor, and confidant of five Presidents of the United States—Presidents Wilson, Harding, Coolidge, Hoover, and Roosevelt—I reflected that one could not ask to rise to grander heights, nor could one ask for more by which to attain fame or be remembered.

Mr. President, I should like to allude to a personal experience. I served, not in any distinguished capacity, in the Spanish-American War. It fell to me to know of this gentleman, Mr. KENDRICK, in that which I now recite to this body.

He was the author and creator of that legion of force known as the Rough Riders. I at that time, sir—may I be pardoned for this more personal extension—represented in Congress at large the State of Washington; and passing from that State coming East with a part of the troops that I was then commanding, I passed through Wyoming. It was there in Wyoming this honorable deceased conceived the idea of bringing the men whom we speak of as cowboys to the great consciousness of their capacity in service of their country in the hour of its peril. It was he who organized that class of valiant fellows to whom life was only that item of humanity which was to be given for a great cause. It was after this organization that there came the request from him to his old friend who had camped for some years before just on the other side from where he lived, to gather his health—Mr. Roosevelt. Theodore Roosevelt had summoned his fatigued force for rest and recuperation; and, resting a while in that country, gave evidence of capacity which his old friend—then Mr. KENDRICK—summoned as aid, and together, with joint efforts, brought, sir, this great organization of valor and courage to its life.

I had the fortune to serve at San Juan, where the best service of this honorable organization, I dare say, was recorded. This modest man KENDRICK—let this be remembered, fellow Senators—sat here day after day and listened to tributes to the distinguished dead, the former colonel, the former Governor and former President of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt. Allusion after allusion would be made to his splendid career, both military as well as civil. Where is the man who can say that he ever heard this man KENDRICK call attention to the fact that he was the creator of this great band of brave and valued fellow patriots? Not one. It was a true mark of his character—service and silence.

I am honored, sir, to pay the tribute along with these others to that capable man whose life was an inspiration to the young, whose achievements are an encouragement to mankind, and who in his existence becomes a first model to an American.

COUNSEL IN PROCEEDINGS AGAINST ELECTRO-METALLURGICAL CO., ET AL.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senate to Calendar 926, being Senate bill 3436. This is a bill which was prepared by the Attorney General, Mr. Cummings, introduced by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It was considered by that committee and favorably reported. I say that in order that Senators may understand why I am asking for its present consideration. The Attorney General has informed the Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary that he is very anxious to have prompt action. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. MCNARY. Let the title of the bill be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of the bill will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3436) limiting the operations of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in certain proceedings against the Electro-Metallurgical Co., New-Kanawha Power Co., and the Carbon & Carbide Co.

Mr. MCNARY. Is the bill to which the Senator refers on the calendar?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes; it is on the calendar.

Mr. MCNARY. What is the necessity for taking it up out of order when we have not the calendar before us? I do not approve, as the Senator may know, of legislating in this way unless there is some emergency situation which suggests the merit of such procedure.

Mr. STEPHENS. I understood from the Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary that he had conferred with the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; but I am asking the Senator from Mississippi, who reported the bill, why the urgent necessity for its immediate consideration?

Mr. STEPHENS. I shall be glad to explain the bill.

Mr. McNARY. I do not want the bill explained. What emergency exists that we should take it from the calendar and consider it at this time?

Mr. STEPHENS. The reason for the request is that the Attorney General desires to employ Mr. Huston Thompson to act as counsel in the prosecution of certain cases. Mr. Thompson now represents some parties who have claims against the Government.

Mr. McNARY. Very well; I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 2, line 10, to strike out "Electro-Metallurgical" and insert the words "Electro Metallurgical", and in line 11 to strike out "Carbon & Carbide Co." and insert "Union Carbide & Carbon Co.", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That nothing in sections 109 and 113 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States", approved March 4, 1909, as amended (U.S.C., title 18, secs. 198 and 203), or in section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U.S.C., title 5, sec. 99), or in any other act of Congress forbidding officers or employees or former officers or employees of the United States from acting as counsel, attorney, or agent for another before any court, department, or branch of the Government or from receiving or agreeing to receive compensation therefor, shall be deemed to apply to attorneys or counselors to be specially employed, retained, or appointed by the Attorney General or under authority of the Department of Justice to assist in the prosecution of any case or cases, civil or criminal, to be brought by the United States against the Electro Metallurgical Co., New-Kanawha Power Co., or the Union Carbide & Carbon Corporation, or all or any of said companies and/or their officers or agents, and/or any litigation involving hydroelectric power, navigation, or water rights or claims upon the New and Kanawha Rivers, or either of them, under the Federal Water Power Act or the River and Harbor Appropriation Act of March 3, 1899, chapter 425, or any other act or acts.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill limiting the operations of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in certain proceedings against the Electro Metallurgical Co., New-Kanawha Power Co., and the Union Carbide & Carbon Corporation."

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

WITHDRAWAL OF A NOMINATION

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, May 11, 1934.

To the Senate of the United States:

I withdraw the nomination sent to the Senate on March 9, 1934, of Alfred B. Spinks to be postmaster at Los Altos, in the State of California.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the calendar.

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar is in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask that the first nomination on the calendar be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask that nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I ask that an exception be made in the case of the nomination of Sidney Reynolds to be postmaster at Howard City, Mich. The matter is in conference between the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] and the Postmaster General.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I modify my request accordingly; that nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc with the exception of the one specified by the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, and with the exception mentioned, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, May 16, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

POSTMASTER

Alfred B. Spinks to be postmaster at Los Altos, in the State of California.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MAY 15, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

The Lord God is a Sun—the Source of all good; and the Lord God is a Shield—the Defense from all peril. Therefore, we wait before Thee. O Spirit of God, summon us to acts of generosity couched in understanding and make us true and strong to conquer. In every situation lead us to do the things we know we ought to do. Heavenly Father, may thought and purpose be translated into terms of life that spells uprightness, determination, and conviction. Merciful Lord, in these hectic days fortify us with serenity, assurance, and penetrating insight that shall bear lasting fruitage and appeal to the patriotic sentiment of our country. Each day let goodness, kindliness, and charity arise from characters that are altogether worthy, and unto Thee be praise forever. Through Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following date the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On May 14, 1934:

H.R. 3900. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay subcontractors for material and labor furnished in the construction of the post office at Las Vegas, Nev.; and

H.R. 5299. An act for the relief of Orville A. Murphy.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H.R. 9323) entitled "An act to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes", disagreed to by the House, agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, and Mr. COUZENS to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3487. An act relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, we are up with the business of the House, and I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday, and when it adjourns on Thursday it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may be permitted to sit during sessions of the House for the balance of the week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of the time to be used by the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPPEL] I may be allowed to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes following the special orders already granted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

AN EMPIRE WITHIN AN EMPIRE

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Speaker, the counties of Kern, San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, Tulare, and Ventura constitute the Tenth Congressional District of California, an area of vast natural resources, great agricultural industries, and the home of approximately 320,000 souls. This territory, literally an empire within an empire, lies in the lower central part of the State, borders on the placid Pacific Ocean for almost 200 miles, and also includes a large sector in the lower part of the San Joaquin Valley, with a range of mountains separating the valley and the coastal counties. I would be remiss in a proper sense of appreciation and pride which I feel in this great district if I did not relate, at every opportunity, the wealth of its countryside and the character of the fine people who reside there. I like to report that the Tenth Congressional District of California is larger than four of our Eastern States combined and has more people residing within its borders than the combined population of several States of the far West.

This district is a new one under the reapportionment program, and I am proud to be the first Member of Congress from this new congressional area. Some have wondered why three coastal counties were joined with two valley counties in the creation of this district.

DISTRICT REAPPORTIONMENT HISTORY

The subject of congressional reapportionment arose before the State Legislature of California during the fiftieth session in 1931. One of the important questions was a fair division between the north and south congressional districts of the State. The counties composing the southern part of the State were entitled to 11.02 Members in the United States Congress, it was determined, and it therefore appeared to be a fair division between the northern and the southern part of the State to give 11 members to the southern part and 9 members to the counties north of San Luis Obispo, Tulare, and San Bernardino Counties. The lines were drawn as they were with two thoughts in mind—first, the fair division between the north and the south; and, second, creation of a district in southern California which would be north of Los Angeles County and which would preserve an equal balance between the coast and the valley counties. It is noted that the population of San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, and Ventura Counties on the coast by the 1930 census was almost the same as the population of Tulare and Kern Counties.

Those who represented Tulare and Kings Counties were anxious that Kings County be kept with Tulare, and proposed an amendment to the State legislature which would add Tulare to the proposed Tenth Congressional District, but this amendment was defeated principally because the coast counties objected on the ground that it would give the valley counties a preponderance of the population. There was some thought of joining Kern with San Bernardino, but this was distasteful to Kern County, as citizens in the latter county felt they would be a tail to San Bernardino's kite. Tulare County desired to remain with Fresno County, its neighbor on the north, but such a plan would have necessitated an elongated district along the coast with the valley county of Kern tied to it. The bill, introduced in the assembly, and which passed the assembly but died in the State senate, made one less district in Los Angeles County and provided that the Tenth Congressional District contain the counties of Santa Clara, San Benito, Santa Cruz, Monterey, and San Luis Obispo, and would have made the Eleventh Congressional District consist of Santa Barbara, Ventura, Kern, Tulare, Mono, and Inyo Counties, but this arrangement, besides being objectionable on the ground that it did not provide southern California with the number of Members of Congress to which it was entitled, was also under objection by the citizens of Ventura and Santa Barbara Counties, who felt that such an arrangement would have given the inland counties a preponderance of the district's population.

And thus came about the compromise which joined 2 valley counties with 3 counties on the coast, and I am happy to report that this new arrangement has proved very satisfactory, and that the citizens of these areas, separated by a mountain wall, are finding their interests coincide largely, and a remarkable neighborliness is springing up there which did not exist heretofore when they were not joined legislatively in Congress. Without the marvelous highway system of California, which permits the annihilation of time in traveling, I do not believe these distant counties could have been knitted into a solid unit which would have give us the satisfaction we enjoy together today.

This great district in California, located between the northern and the southern parts of the State, not only joins these ends of our elongated State, but, because of its representation in Congress, provides a balance wheel or balance of power in the event the State's entire representation should become alined against one another in a legislative maneuver with a conclusion designed to benefit or harm one particular end. It is a happy arrangement and attests the thought which the State legislators gave to a difficult problem.

There are many remarkable places, and interesting activities in Kern, San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, Tulare, and Ventura Counties, and today I take occasion to point out a few of the vast natural resources we possess there, particularly those associated with our governmental system, and tell you something about the more romantic feature of our locality, for the Tenth Congressional District is a land fashioned by the hands of the pioneers, and is shrouded in historical romance.

FOREST RESERVES

More than 375,000 visitors, principally tourists, spent vacations in the Santa Barbara National Forest and the Sequoia National Forest of the Tenth Congressional District during the past year, bringing to the communities which border them millions of dollars in added business. The two great forest reserves, Sequoia, located principally in Tulare and Kern Counties, and the Santa Barbara Reserve, situated in San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara and Ventura Counties, comprise an aggregate area of 3,104,753 acres of Government land, with an aggregate of 351,875 acres of patented land, for a total of 3,456,628 acres. Sequoia boasts a total of 1,437,814, and the Santa Barbara Reserve 2,018,814 acres.

History of the Santa Barbara National Forest shows that the Pine Mountain and the Zaca Lake Forest Reserves, created by proclamation of March 2, 1898, and the Santa Ynez National Forest, proclaimed October 2, 1899, by President McKinley, were united December 22, 1903, by President Theodore Roosevelt, into the institution now known as the Santa Barbara National Forest.

TENTH DISTRICT FOREST RESERVES

The Executive order of President Taft, July 1, 1908, added to the Santa Barbara National Forest all of the San Luis Obispo National Forests, in all 355,990 acres, and on August 18, 1919, President Wilson added the Monterey National Forest, which is now a separate unit administered as a ranger district of the parent institution. September 30, 1925, the reserve lost 265,538 acres, when President Coolidge, by proclamation, added that acreage to the Angeles National Forest.

Communities affected by the principal body of the Santa Barbara National Forest extend from the city of San Luis Obispo, through Santa Barbara County, and into Ventura County as far as Piru. The population directly and indirectly affected is approximately 50,000 persons, residing in six towns and many smaller communities, along the western and southern boundary.

The principal forest activities are protection of the watersheds, recreation, and grazing. The forest was used by 125,000 persons in the last year for recreational purposes. Camps dot its entire area. Santa Barbara National Forest has 526,700 acres suitable for the grazing of livestock, and the Secretary of Agriculture has authorized the grazing of 8,700 cattle and 4,950 sheep. Two stock associations cooperate with the United States Forestry Service in regulation and management of grazing resources.

Sequoia National Forest originally was part of the Sierra Forest Reserve, first proclaimed by President Harrison on February 14, 1893. It was made a separate forest by proclamation of President Theodore Roosevelt on July 2, 1908.

The southern half, mainly in Kern County, was proclaimed the Kern National Forest by President Taft, July 1, 1910, but was restored as part of the Sequoia National Forest by President Wilson on July 1, 1915. President Coolidge struck 109,542 acres from the Sequoia National Forest, on July 3, 1926, and added them to the Sequoia National Park.

The district affected by this great reserve lies from Fresno on the north, through Tulare and Kern Counties, and into the Tehachapi Mountains on the south. Nine large towns and many smaller communities are located along the western boundary. More than 150,000 residents are affected by the resources of this forest system.

Seven licenses for water-power permits and four licenses for transmission lines have been issued by the Federal Power Commission for projects within the forest reserve. There are eight irrigation districts embracing 246,256 acres of irrigated land, 9,270 holdings and 52,000 persons dependent on water resources protected by the Sequoia National Forest.

Grazing of livestock is authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture for 17,200 cattle and 4,200 sheep on 807,900 acres of land. There are six livestock associations cooperating with the United States Forestry Service in the Sequoia National Forest in the management of the national forest range resources.

Recreation is gaining in importance. More than 250,000 persons were visitors there during the past year. More than 163,000 acres are reserved for recreational purposes.

OLD MISSIONS

Priceless beyond measure, enveloped in a halo of historical romance, and mecca for many thousands of visitors annually, the six old missions of the coastal territory of the Tenth Congressional District of California shed a soft influence which eradicates the element of time, and brings the past, the present, and the future together. Incalculably valuable as historic monuments, and as increasing attractions for tourists, they share honors with no other landmark of all California.

Santa Barbara County, heart of the great Tenth Congressional District and a land of milk and honey, possesses 3 of the 6 old missions. Mission Santa Barbara was established December 4, 1786, by Father Lasuen, at the same time the Presidio of Santa Barbara was founded. It was damaged by an earthen tremor in 1925. It had been preserved in all its grandeur through the century and a half since its establishment. The church that now stands was begun in 1815 and dedicated September 10, 1820, to replace one damaged in an earthquake of 1812.

The second mission of importance in Santa Barbara County is Mission Santa Ynez, originally known as Mission Santa Ynez (St. Agnes, the Virgin and Martyr), and was one of three missions erected in the nineteenth century. It was founded by Fathers Tapis and Cipres, September 17, 1804, in the valley not far from La Purisima. The earthquake of 1812 did serious damage to the buildings of this mission, and a new church was begun in 1815 and dedicated on July 4, 1817. Mission Santa Ynez stands on the outskirts of the bustling community of Solvang (Valley of the Sun), settled by folks of Danish ancestry.

Not the least important but perhaps the least known of Santa Barbara County missions is Mission La Purisima Concepcion, founded December 8, 1787, by Father Lasuen. Its first site was about 2 miles farther south. The church building which survived the mission period was dedicated in November of 1818. Mission La Purisima Concepcion was the first mission abandoned after 1812.

Mission San Buenaventura, located near Ventura in Ventura County, was founded March 31, 1782, and was the first of the Franciscan missions to be established among the natives of the Santa Barbara Channel. It was the last of the missions founded by Father Junipero Serra, original mission builder among the padres. A church constructed in 1811 was badly damaged by the earthquake of 1812 but was rebuilt about 1815 and is still in use.

Mission San Luis Obispo, located in the city of San Luis Obispo, in the county of the same name, originally was named "Mission San Luis Obispo de Tolosa" (St. Louis, the bishop of Tolouse), and was established by Father Junipero Serra, September 1, 1772, long before the Declaration of Independence, and was the fifth of the mission chain. Changes in recent years have almost obliterated the Spanish atmosphere which pervaded early photographs of the historic dwelling of God.

A second mission of San Luis Obispo County is Mission San Miguel, originally known as "Mission San Miguel Arcangel", for St. Michael, the Archangel, was founded July 25, 1797, by Fathers Lasuen and Sitiar. The present church, completed about 1819, retains much of its early appearance.

The priestly robes and altar equipment carefully guarded within the walls of many of these old missions could never be replaced. Thousands view them yearly and ponder on the industriousness and piety of the old padres and their Indian neophytes. Where ten thousand stand within their sacred walls today a hundred gazed in awe 20 years ago, and 20 years hence they will be mecca for millions. Their attraction increases with the years.

It is my fond hope that one day the United States Government will recognize the actual and sentimental value of these glorious relics of the past and join hands with the State of California and its citizens in rehabilitating them and preserving them for the benefit of posterity. To that end I have pledged my best efforts, and when the opportune time arrives to place this subject before the Congress or the proper Government agency I hope that my colleagues will assist me in the task of preserving these priceless structures for our children and our children's children.

It is of incalculably greater benefit to the race that the mission fathers lived and had their fling of divine audacity for the good of the helpless aborigines than that of any score one might name of the successful captains of industry who lived to make their unwieldy, temporary, and topheavy piles of gold. These padres did. They had a glorious purpose which they pursued faithfully—

According to one commentator.

INDIANS OF TENTH DISTRICT

Before the paleface came there was no poison in the Indian's corn—thus run the words of an aboriginal sage whose prophecy holds true today. Perhaps, if these earlier Americans ever collect on the claim which they entered years ago against the United States Government, the 1,145 enrolled Indians of the Tenth Congressional District will be enriched by an aggregate sum of approximately $343,500,000.

As a member of the Indian Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives, and spokesman for the numberless tribes of my five counties, I am anxious that these Indians obtain, through the white man's methods of legal procedure, a sum of money to compensate them for the actions of the paleface in ousting them from their homes and their lands many decades ago.

According to one authority, the discovery of gold brought about the moral and economic downfall of the Indian in California. Executive departments of the Federal Government, in an effort to deal justly with the Indians of this State, negotiated with these aborigines in 1851–52 and made treaties through which the Indians surrendered their right of occupancy covering the greater part of the State, for a consideration including the payment of goods and supplies and the setting aside, in perpetuity for their use and occupancy, certain specified reservations aggregating 7,500,000 acres of land. But the treaties were never ratified. Instead, they were ordered by the Senate into secret file and have remained there for more than half a century. Why were they not ratified? is asked, and the answer then was said to be, "because thar might be gold in them thar hills and valleys."

However that may be, the Indians, under the guidance of honorable men employed by the Government, various civic organizations, and particularly organizations of women, brought forth the case of the Californian Indian, a claim against the Federal Government brought by 23,000 enrolled Indians, and which, when and if settled, will bring something like $7,000,000 to their rescue—not in cash, but in trust, subject to appropriations by Congress for educational, health, industrial, and other purposes for the benefit of the Indians, including the purchase of lands and building of homes.

Kern County harbors approximately 370 Indians, representing two primary tribes, the Paiute and Tejone. Members of the Paiutes reside in the eastern Kern County district around Weldon, Kernville, Isabella, Onyx, Monolith, and the Tejones reside around Bakersfield, south of Bakersfield, or primarily on the El Tejone Ranch properties. In addition, there are about 20 other Indians, belonging to the Shoshone, Pueblo, Monache, and Seranno Tribes. In the unratified treaties of 1851–52, the Indians were to have been given several thousands of acres of land for a reservation, which would have covered the area where Bakersfield now stands, extended north beyond Lost Hills, and south to the Ridge Mountain range, and west to the great Buttonwillow Lake area.

Tulare County, with the second largest Indian population of the Tenth Congressional District, has approximately 30 tribes, with an aggregate population of 350 Indians. The great Tule River Reservation harbors the Kalayunmi, Koyati, Pankahlhchi, Serrano, Serrano-Yawilmani, Tachi, Tejon, Tejon-Wikchami, Tejon-Yawilmani, Wicchamni, Wikchamni-Tachi, Yaudanchi, Yawilmani, Yawilmani-Pankahlahchi, and Yawilmani-Wikchamni Tribes, while off the reservation are found remnants of the Apache-Navajo, Cherokee, Cherokee-Waksachi, Chuckchansi, Intimbich, Intimbichi-Wikchamni, Koyati, Koyati-Waksachi, Monachi, Tachi-Tachi-Waksachi, Tachi-Wikchamni, Tejon, Waksachi, Wikchamni, Wikchamni-Cherokee, Yawilmani, Yawilmani-Waksachi, and other tribes. This 45,000-acre reservation is the largest in central California. It lies 17 miles east of Porterville. Also, near the town of Strathmore there is 40 acres of land purchased several years ago for the use of homeless Indians of that vicinity. However, that is a bare tract of land without any improvements or any water, and the Indians have not been able to make the necessary improvements for use and occupancy of the land, and no funds have been made available for such a purpose.

Ventura County has no reservations, and only a dozen Indians; but Santa Barbara County has the Santa Ynez Reservation with about 92 persons, all of alleged Shoshonean origin, with an admixture of Spanish. These individuals resent the name and insist they are of Spanish origin. The reservation comprises 75¾ acres, and while it is not a reservation, in that title to the land is not in the United States, these Indo-Spaniards reside on it and have use and occupancy only.

The land originally was owned by the Catholic Church (The Collego Rancho) and later sold to others, but the Catholic Church made an agreement with the Government permitting the Indians the use and occupancy and this agreement is binding on later purchasers.

San Luis Obispo County has an Indian population of 20 and no reservations.

All the Indians of the Tenth Congressional District are citizens of the United States, and the same laws govern them as any other citizen. The birth rate of the full-blooded Indians naturally is decreasing, owing to their assimilation into the general population, and, conversely, the birth rate of the mixed bloods is increasing, by virtue of the same reason.

With recognition of their claim by the United States Government, approximately $300 will be placed in trust for each of the enrolled Indians of the Tenth Congressional District.

Deprived of their lands by palefaces in a ruthless search for gold, beaten from their place in the sun, and forced to wander about the State, little wonder that the Indians are a dejected and decreasing race, and less wonder that it is said, "Pity poor Lo!"

NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVES

Crude oil, natural gas, and natural gasoline extracted from the two naval petroleum reserves located within the boundaries of Kern County have been valued at approximately $168,434,026, according to figures of the United States Navy Department, and according to the same official source, petroleum still harbored there, based on a fixed value of 75 cents the barrel, will bring an income estimated at $338,150,000. The volumes of oil, gas, and natural gasoline which have been produced and sold from the Government's two reserves, to a fixed date in the past year, are:

	Quantity	Value
No. 1 reserve—production:
Oil.....barrels	42,390,784	$38,129,907
Gas.....thousand cubic feet	39,226,831	2,196,702
Gasoline.....gallons	32,048,139	3,140,718
Total		43,467,327
No. 2 reserve—production:
Oil.....barrels	86,246,695	109,994,850
Gas.....thousand cubic feet	58,634,833	3,220,779
Gasoline.....gallons	178,802,325	20,741,070
Total		124,966,699
Grand total, all production		168,434,026

No estimates have been made of the value or quantities of unrecovered gas and natural gasoline in the reserves.

Engineers of the United States Geological Survey have recently estimated the original recoverable oil, using present production methods, from Government lands in the no. 1 reserve at 400,000,000 barrels, of which more than 43,000,000 barrels will have been produced at the date of this reading, leaving approximately 357,000,000 barrels still in the ground, and estimated at the average price of 75 cents the barrel, this oil still in the ground has a potential value of $267,000,000. On the same basis, recoverable oil in no. 2 reserve is estimated at 150,000,000 barrels, minus 86,000,000 barrels which will have been produced by the time of this reading, for an estimated potential value of $1.10 the barrel, or $70,400,000.

The two reserves were created by Executive order of September 2, 1912, and December 13, 1912, respectively, by President Taft. They consist of 68,239 acres, of which 26,046 acres are privately owned lands within the reserves, 10,075 being leased Government lands, and the balance of 32,228 acres Government lands not leased.

Withdrawal of these public lands was followed by extensive litigation. This litigation continued until after the passage of the Leasing Act, approved February 25, 1920. Under this act all claimants to lands in reserve no. 2 (no discoveries having been made on Government lands in reserve no. 1 prior to the passage of the act of Feb. 25, 1920) who could qualify thereunder were granted well leases to operate the wells they had drilled.

These well leases remained in effect until after the Harding administration took office March 4, 1921, and Albert B. Fall became Secretary of the Department of the Interior. Secretary of the Navy Denby, on April 14, 1921, took the first steps toward leasing the Government's land in Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 1, adjoining areas being developed outside of and bordering the reserve. By Executive Order No. 3474, of May 31, 1921, the administration of the naval petroleum reserves was committed to the Secretary of the Interior.

Then followed one of the most far-reaching scandals in the annals of our Government, when, by November 26, 1923, the Department of the Interior had succeeded in leasing to private oil operators all of Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 1 (Elk Hills), and all but 320 acres of the Government's land in Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 2 (Buena Vista Hills).

The congressional investigation of these leases led to legal action which resulted in the cancelation of these leases, and by December 9, 1932, all of land in No. 1 Reserve, save four leases comprising a combined area of 429 acres, had been recovered and returned to the Government.

By Executive order of March 17, 1927, no. 4614, the Executive Order No. 3474, of May 31, 1921, was revoked, and jurisdiction over the petroleum reserves was returned to the United States Navy Department, where it remains today. At the present time there remain 4 active leases in Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 1, having a combined area of 429 acres, and 21 active leases in No. 2 Reserve, having a combined area of 9,546.01 acres.

No oil development is permitted by the Navy Department or operations on the lands remaining under its control in the reserves. On the leased lands lessees are required to produce the necessary wells to protect the Government's lands from losses by drainage to producing wells on adjoining lands owned in fee.

The purpose of the naval petroleum reserves is to retain a reserve supply of oil in the ground until such time when the demands of the Navy will require its production, because none is available from other sources, or until some national emergency makes its production necessary to supply the Government's needs.

WHAT HAS BEEN ACCOMPLISHED

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I want us to take a casual review of the things accomplished by the Democratic Party under the leadership of President Franklin D. Roosevelt in the first year of his administration.

The heavy, dark cloud of despair and gloom was seen and heard on every hand when President Roosevelt was sworn in as President. Confidence had been destroyed in a large measure by the lack of wise leadership by the Republican Party that had been in power for a number of years. Ninety-five percent of the business of the world is done largely on confidence, and the first task of the new President was to restore confidence in the Government that had almost been lost in the Hoover administration.

The plea of President Hoover in his campaign and radio messages for reelection was that he had kept the country on the gold standard and on a high tariff. These were the two things that had made it impossible for his administration to succeed.

When Mr. Roosevelt was inaugurated, there was a long line to the Treasury windows by everyone who had a gold certificate, to get it cashed and get the gold coin to take home with them to be put in a lock box and to be taken out of circulation.

One of the first acts of President Roosevelt was to make an order stopping this run on the Treasury and requiring those having gold coins to return them to the Treasury and receive certificates in lieu thereof.

The United States now has in the Treasury and Federal Reserve banks $7,756,042,447 as shown by the Treasury report of May 5, 1934.

We only have about $11,000,000,000 in gold in the world. We now have the most of it, and at the rate we are going we will soon have it all. We could now issue $15,000,000,000 in money under the existing law with a 40-percent gold reserve, and that is all that is required under our law with a single gold standard.

Congress has authorized the President to coin into money an unlimited amount of silver and return to a double standard of both gold and silver as is provided for by our Constitution, and we hope he will use this power at once. That and that alone is the sure road to prosperity. Pumping morphine into a patient never cured him of a disease but is only given as a rest medicine until the patient can be given a real cure for his sickness.

The alarmist who goes about trying to make people believe that the Government is going on the rocks should be carried to a specialist and have his head examined. Let us take a correct view of it and see where our Government stands.

The Government owes an outstanding interest-bearing debt of about twenty-two and a half billion dollars. We have owing to us from foreign countries $11,000,000,000 in principal and near $1,000,000,000 dollars in interest that is now due. If this amount is paid, and it will be paid in the future, our interest-bearing national debt would only be around $10,000,000,000. As stated before, we could now issue on the gold basis of 40-percent reserve, which is the highest reserve that is required by any gold-standard nation, $15,000,000,000 in gold certificates and pay off all the national debt and still have around $5,000,000,000 in money in the Treasury, with near $8,000,000,000 in gold bullion to back it up. A nation's money is ordinarily valued by the nation's ability to pay its obligations, and there is no limit to our ability. Not only that, but we also have $500,000,000 in silver in the United States Treasury on which to issue silver certificates.

It is the firm belief of many thinking people that we should have both gold and silver money as a metallic basis; and then let us have a sufficient amount of it in circulation to carry on the business of the country, and we shall be a happy and prosperous Nation again.

Four fifths of the nations of the world are today using the single silver standard of money and one fifth the gold standard. The United States is the greatest silver-producing nation in the world and has to buy the most of its gold, except what is mined in Alaska. If we are to establish a world trade, which we must have, then it seems imperative that we have a double standard of money in order that we may deal with the foreign countries with relation to the money it uses.

Agriculture will never come to its proper place and be protected as it should until we get on a double standard of money. The greatest single agricultural product produced in the United States is cotton. Let us take that as an example and show you how the gold standard we have been forced to remain on for a number of years has affected the price of cotton.

Let us take, for example, India and China—and the same argument is applicable to every other country—and show you how the money question has affected our cotton. India and China, as you know, are on the single silver standard of money. Prior to the recent agitation of silver the amount of silver that was in the silver dollar of those nations was only worth a fraction over 25 cents under the gold standard. So when they came to America to buy our cotton, under the gold standard they were required to bring four silver dollars to buy one dollar's worth of our cotton. In other words, they paid 20 cents per pound for cotton and the man producing it got 5 cents. That is the thing that has crushed the life out of the American farmer, and besides that it has forced India and other countries to go to growing cotton that never would have produced it had it not been for this condition. Prior to the war they were growing a little over 6,000,000 bales of cotton in foreign countries, and now they are growing twelve and a half million bales. They grow an inferior cotton of short lint. It is not profitable to them to grow it. When we get back to a double standard of money, where they can buy a dollar's worth of cotton with a dollar of their money, then they will quit raising cotton altogether and the United States will have a market for all the cotton it can grow.

Under the gold standard this could never be true, and we could never have a foreign market for all the cotton we produce. We hope to see before the close of this session of Congress some mandatory measure that will compel the use of a reasonable percentage of both gold and silver as a money basis.

The trouble now is we have no money in circulation. Enough money may be coined and in the banks and trust companies and lock boxes to carry on the business of the world if it were in circulation, but there is less money in circulation now than has ever been before. There is no common sense in trying to run a Government and carry on business without a medium of exchange that really circulates and creates employment for people who work.

Another bill passed by this House, and we hope will soon pass the Senate, authorizes the President of the United States, on proper information obtained through the Tariff Commission and other sources, to make reciprocal trade relations with other countries and reduce or raise the tariffs as may be necessary in each case not exceeding 50 percent. With this power properly administered there is no question that we can soon establish a reciprocal trade relation with the great nations of the world and never again have a stagnated business as we have had for the last 2 or 3 years. years.

Another bill passed by this House, and which is now pending in the Senate, is known as the "Dies bill", that provides for taking over our surplus agricultural commodities and selling them to these silver-using countries and taking silver in exchange for the agricultural commodity. If this bill passes and is properly administered a year from now, we would not have any surplus that would hold down the price of cotton.

The legislation coming from the Committee on Agriculture, in my opinion, passed by this administration, has been more helpful than any other legislation to give relief that the country has had. Cotton has gone down to around 5 cents per pound; something had to be done to save this commodity, because it is the principal money crop of the United States Government. A farmer could not grow it at that price. They had nothing for home needs and were almost depressed to the point of giving up. I am glad I have had some humble part in drafting and passing the bills that we have had affecting our agricultural products. We now have cotton to a price of more than 12 cents per pound, and unquestionably with the legislation recently passed we can reasonably expect a price of at least 15 cents per pound for every bale of cotton marketed this fall. Then, with other legislation that is now contemplated and in the making and that will likely be passed during the next Congress, we hope to see cotton stabilized at a price of around 20 cents per pound; and when that is done, we will have an era of prosperity in this country that has not been witnessed in many a year.

Another act that has been passed during this administration that has been exceedingly helpful is the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act. When we began a study of this question, we found that the homes of the United States were mortgaged more than $20,000,000,000.

There is no better evidence of good citizenship than the ownership or a desire to own a home which one can call his castle and feel free that he may have a continued abiding place.

The first bill passed by the Congress on this subject was a guaranty on the part of the Government for the interest alone. My contention was then that the Government should have guaranteed both principal and interest, and I have contended for that all the while. This session we have passed a law amending the act whereby the Government guarantees both the principal and interest and gives the home owner a chance to redeem his home from mortgage.

The next thing that confronted the administration was the question of the farm-loan debt. The farms of the United States are today mortgaged for around nine and a half billion dollars. We have established a Federal land bank, which has not functioned as it should, and which has been entirely unsatisfactory in meeting the pressing demands for relief against farm mortgages.

We have passed during this administration an act authorizing the extension of $2,000,000,000 credit for the refinancing of mortgage debt. This only relieves a part of the distress along this line. There are several bills pending that would relieve this condition.

The Frazier bill proposes to refinance the debt over a period of 40 years, 1½ percent for interest and 1½ percent for retiring the debt. Some object to this bill, saying it is too long a time to be in debt. I have introduced a bill, and it was first introduced in 1932, which provides for the refinancing of all the mortgage indebtedness of farms at a rate of interest not exceeding 3 percent. In other words, that the debt within a 10-year period would be paid off, and we would then have our lands free.

I believe, with the increased price of agricultural products, we could easily get out of this condition in that period of time. If not, we could then again refinance for whatever time was needed.

This administration has also corrected the deplorable situation existing in our banks. Banks were failing everywhere, and persons having deposits were losing the earnings of their life. During this administration we have passed a bank guaranty law, and we now have, it is said, the soundest banking system and law we have ever had, and we hear nothing now about bank failures and will not hear of it, I hope, in the future. It restores confidence of the people in the banks and the banks in the people, and we certainly hope they can soon begin to extend their helping hand in creating industry and employment by the loan of their funds and which we must have before we can accomplish much.

One of the rocks ahead of us, unless we change our course, is that of nontaxable interest-bearing bonds on the part of this Government. The United States Government today is paying around $760,000,000 a year interest on bonds that it has issued. These bonds should be called as rapidly as they are callable and paid off in United States currency, which can now be issued without any question at all, and stop this debt. They did not pay gold for the bonds, they paid currency; and we should give them the currency and take up the bonds and save that interest to the Government.

We will at the rate we are going, within another year or two, be paying out about one third of the taxes received by the Government to big bondholders that are making their millions.

We passed a few days ago a very important bill regulating the stock exchange, which will in the future guarantee to traders the right to invest their money in stocks with some degree of safety and security. The manner in which it has been carried on in the past has been absolutely ridiculous. If the bill passed a few days ago had been the law in 1929, the bottom would never have fallen out of the stock market, and the condition brought on by it would never have occurred.

If this bill is passed by the Senate and signed by the President, we will then have an exchange business carried on in a legitimate way where capital can be invested.

Another important work of this administration was the act of the House a few days ago in passing the 10 bills in 1 day for the regulation of crime in the United States as is sponsored by the Attorney General, Hon. Homer Cummings. Organized crime should never be allowed to exist. Of course, as long as we have people, we will have them violating the laws; but when it comes to the point of organized crime in the United States, organizing for the sole purpose of robbing banks, kidnaping people, and committing the high crimes that are being committed now, it is high time that the Government should rise up in its might and put a stop to it. With the power given under these acts to the Attorney General and to the Department of Justice forces, and in addition to the States' enforcement of laws, the crime wave prevailing in the United States should cease.

There are many other acts that have passed during this administration that I do not have time to mention. Taking it as a whole there has never been a year of administration where so much wholesome legislation has been passed as there has been in this administration. It is true that the country is not yet in a normal condition, but it is far superior to what we found it a year ago, and I think within another year our prosperity will be fully restored.

THE MILITARISTS THWART IN PART THE PRESIDENT'S AMNESTY PROCLAMATION

Mr. FOULKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOULKES. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to a huge injustice that is being done many men who opposed the war and who were entitled, in the spirit of the President's amnesty proclamation last Christmas, to restoration of citizenship. The military clique that was all along bitterly hostile to the Presidential amnesty, has evolved a new way to thwart to considerable extent the execution of his intentions.

I quote in part from an article in the May issue of the Arbitrator, published in New York City, in which this excerpt is published from a letter from Brent Dow Allison, a writer, who was one of the war-time conscientious objectors and was imprisoned at Fort Leavenworth:

My name was mentioned in the dispatch (in the Chicago Tribune) as being among those to receive the benefit of the amnesty. Not long thereafter, made by long experience skeptical, I began a correspondence with the Department of Justice and with the President's private secretary. * * * The amnesty did not and does not apply to any of the C.O.'s who were seized and sentenced by military authorities, and who, by reason of the court-martial verdicts, are deemed (by the Army) to have been deprived of civil rights. The overwhelming majority of the C.O.'s were not considered to have lost their civil rights, having been sentenced for various military offenses ranging from refusal to pare a potato when commanded to do so to insubordination, refusal to salute. A few, a few score, were convicted of desertion. This is considered to be a felony and to carry loss of all civil rights. These men have never been able to get the discrimination removed, nor their cases reviewed by any judicial process. * * *

I am in receipt, recently, of a letter from the Adjutant General of the Army, Brigadier General McKinley, containing the astonishing statement that "There is no authority of law whereby any executive officer of the Government can revoke, recall, set aside, or modify the duly executed sentence of a general court martial." * * * None of the C.O.'s who were sentenced by the military courts have ever been restored to civil rights, or had these rights restored to them by Presidential order.

May I say to my colleagues in the House of Representatives, as well as to the citizenship of the entire country, that this statement of a military official is a most astonishing and preposterous one? General McKinley says that no executive officer of the Government can alter the sentence of a court martial. I wonder if General McKinley does not know that the President of the United States has a right to pardon any man convicted of any Federal offense, and has done so on various occasions? Certainly the military oligarchy that wants to dominate everything and that is perpetually thirsting for another war is not bigger than the President. The implied assertion that the President must kneel before any general court martial in the land and cannot pardon and restore to citizenship men convicted by such courts is both comic and tragic.

The fact remains, however, that the Army is refusing to consider the President's amnesty proclamation of last Christmas when he restored citizenship to 1,500 war-time offenders as not applying to men who were convicted of such offenses by military courts. The man who was convicted of violation of the draft law or the espionage law in a civilian court is full beneficiary of the just and meritorious proclamation of President Roosevelt. The other man who had the misfortune to fall into the clutches of a court martial and be tried by men engaged in the war profession is deprived of the same privileges.

How contradictory! How absurd! How viciously unfair and un-American!

It is time that the military caste is taught that it is not above the Constitution, the President, the people, and the inherent rights of human beings generally.

Not only because a pronounced injustice is being done many war objectors who are the victims of an artificial distinction, but because the whole Nation is fed up on militarists and militarism and wants good riddance of them, action should be taken to insure that all war objectors—not the fortunate section that was lucky enough not to be snatched by courts martial—enjoy the benefits of the President's Christmas gift of restored citizenship.

INTERESTING INFORMATION IN REGARD TO VETERANS AND THEIR DEPENDENTS AFFECTED BY RECENT LAWS AND REGULATIONS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, in compliance with requests of many veterans and Members of Congress, I have prepared a statement showing how each class and group of World War and Spanish-American War veterans and their dependents were affected by laws and regulations during the past 14 months, and their present status.

The answer to practically every question that may be asked in regard to veterans' legislation will be found in this statement. No argument in favor of or against any class or group of veterans or their dependents is intended. It is my desire to quote the facts and the law fairly and impartially.

Since this statement has been prepared in the interest of individual veterans and their dependents and no effort has been spared to make it accurate, I ask any veteran or other person who may find in it any errors either of facts, law, or conclusions to communicate with me immediately so that I may make the necessary correction, and before it is printed in pamphlet form.

The titles and numbers of the paragraphs are as follows:

1. Veterans and the Economy Act.
2. President's assurance.

WORLD WAR VETERANS

3. Most vulnerable cases prior to Economy Act.
4. So-called "Economy Act" passed and regulations issued.
5. Benefits restored prior to July 1, 1933.
6. Benefits restored prior to March 28, 1934.
7. Independent Offices appropriation bill for 1934–35.
8. House amendments.
9. House and Senate agree.
10. Differences between Congress and the President.
11. Present status of World War veterans and their dependents.

IN GENERAL

35. World War veterans, Spanish-American War veterans, and peace-time soldiers—number.
36. What discussion includes.

1. VETERANS AND ECONOMY ACT

It was recognized that there were many cases on the compensation and pension rolls that could not be justified. Many Members of Congress preferred to purge the pension rolls of the undeserving cases rather than pass an act that would cause the question of veteran benefits to become one of administration and not legislation. I will admit that the task would have been a difficult one and there is much to be said in support of the argument that it would have been impossible and that the course pursued was the only one that could be used to get results.

2. PRESIDENT'S ASSURANCE

The President assured Congress and the veterans that each case would be gone into for the purpose of preventing an injustice. After the Economy Act passed, the President changed his regulations in 41 instances in the interest of the veterans; he had done much more for them than they, themselves, realized before the passage of the independent offices appropriation bill at this session of Congress. I have always been convinced in my own mind that the President desired to deal sympathetically and generously with the war disabled and their dependents. He had his own opinion about whether some of the cases were really service connected and his opposition to a service pension is well known.

3. MOST VULNERABLE VETERANS' CASES

Among the cases most frequently objected to and criticized prior to March 20, 1933, were the following:

First. Soldiers who did not enlist until after November 11, 1918, receiving benefits as war veterans. Only one rate of pay was provided for World War service-connected disabilities, regardless of whether they were actual combat disabilities, disabilities incurred during war time, or disabilities incurred during peace-time service, and regardless of whether the enlistment was before or after November 11, 1918, provided it was before July 2, 1921.

Second. Veterans without dependents drawing full compensation and at the same time receiving hospitalization at a cost of $120 a month to the Government, and a few wealthy veterans receiving hospitalization from the Government for disabilities in no way connected with their military service.

Third. Presumptive cases, administrative and statutory: There were 154,000 of them; about 100,000 were otherwise service connected, 51,213 were on the rolls because the law said if a certain disability arose within a certain time after the service—in some cases 7 years—it was presumed that the service caused it. In certain cases this presumption was conclusive and not rebuttable. The President contended, in effect, that this was not common-sense legislation.

Fourth. Willful misconduct cases: They were receiving pay as battle casualties in addition to hospitalization and other benefits. The number involved was small, and among them there were pitiful cases with ameliorating circumstances that could be justified, but as a class they were very vulnerable and all veterans' benefits criticized by reason thereof.

Fifth. Retired emergency officers were receiving from $106 to $416 a month if they were rated 30 percent or more permanently disabled. An enlisted man would receive only $30 a month for such 30-percent rating, and not exceeding $100 a month if his rating were 100 percent. In addition they were permitted to receive hospitalization free from the Government for non-service-connected or service-connected disabilities.

Sixth. Partial disability pension for an injury or disease in no way caused or aggravated by military service: The disability allowance cases which were paid $12, $18, and $24 a month were included in this group.

4. SO-CALLED "ECONOMY ACT" PASSED

March 20, 1933, the so-called "Economy Act" became a law. Regulations promulgated effective July 1, 1933, (1) rerated the service-connected cases; (2) removed the presumptive cases from the pension rolls, except where they could show actual service connection; (3) removed the dependents of veterans who had service connection by presumption of law from the pension rolls pending proof of service connection; (4) denied veterans the right to secure hospitalization at Government expense for non-service-connected disabilities if they were financially able to provide it for themselves; (5) reduced to $15 a month the compensation of a veteran who was in a hospital as long as he remained there (if he had dependents he would receive $15 a month and his dependents the remainder as long as he was in the hospital); (6) eliminated from the pension rolls all disability allowance cases except the 100-percent totally and permanently disabled who were in need and reduced their allowance to $20 a month; (7) greatly restricted hospitalization except for service-connected disabilities; (8) reduced to the same pay as enlisted men for the same disabilities the retired emergency officers who could not establish the causative factor for the disability involved; (9) reduced to $6 a month the pension of a non-service-connected veteran while receiving hospitalization at Government expense (if he has dependents he receives $6 a month and his dependents the remainder so long as he remains in the hospital); (10) barred payment or restricted the amount of pension payable to Government employees with certain exceptions and applied to all cases for non-service-connected pension an income limitation; (11) eliminated willful misconduct cases from the pension rolls but allowed them hospitalization; (12) and removed from the rolls as war veterans those who did not serve until after the war had ended.

5. BENEFITS RESTORED PRIOR TO JULY 1, 1933

By July 1, 1933, the time all reductions and eliminations were to take place, the President had either decreed by regulation or consented to be enacted into law the following changes:

First. Widows and other dependents of the presumptively service connected were restored 100 percent without any reduction whatsoever.

Second. All presumptive cases were given a day in court; special boards were set up and the burden of proof placed on the Government to show beyond a reasonable doubt that such disabilities were not traceable to service during the World War, or the cases would remain on the pension rolls. These cases were continued on the rolls at 75 percent of the old compensation rate until decision was made by the special boards.

Third. Service-connected reductions were restricted to 25 percent of the amount being paid prior to March 20, 1933; the average reduction was about 21 percent.

Fourth. The totally and permanently disabled, their disabilities in no way connected with their military service, were increased from $20 a month to $30 a month.

Fifth. Hospitalization benefits were liberalized.

6. BENEFITS RESTORED PRIOR TO MARCH 28, 1934

Prior to the passage over the President's veto of the independent offices appropriation bill March 28, 1934, the President, by regulations, had given these veterans additional benefits as follows:

First. Restored the rates to all service-connected veterans. The only difference being under the new schedule of ratings many veterans received less than under the old; at the same time, some received more than they did under the old schedule.

Second. Hospitalization benefits fully restored to all honorably discharged veterans, regardless of service connection, if in need of hospitalization and financially unable to provide it. Also included transportation to and from the hospital for either service- or non-service-connected disabilities.

Third. The 29,258 presumptively service-connected cases that were stricken from the roll by the special boards were retained with the privilege of receiving 75 percent of what they had been receiving until their cases were finally passed on by the Board of Veterans' Appeals.

7. INDEPENDENT OFFICES BILL FOR 1934–35

This bill was passed by the House January 12, 1934. It did not contain additional benefits for veterans, except such benefits as had been given to them by the President's regulations. Under the rules of the House, an amendment proposing additional benefits was not in order, as it would be an attempt to place legislation in an appropriation bill. Such an amendment was in order under Senate rules, and the Senate amended the bill so as to include the following:

First. Restored by law all service-connected cases to 100 percent of what they were receiving prior to March 20, 1933. (This had already been done measurably by the President in his regulations, but the Senate amendment gave them the additional benefit of the old schedule of ratings.)

Second. Restored by law all hospitalization benefits. (This had already been done by the President in his regulations.)

Third. Restored all the presumptives to 100 percent of what they were receiving prior to March 20, 1933, but allowed the Government to show either of the following and remove them from the pension rolls:

(a) That veteran entered service after November 11, 1918.

(b) That clear and unmistakable evidence discloses that the disease, injury, or disability had its inception before or after the period of active service, unless aggravation in service is shown.

(c) That case was established by fraud, error, or misrepresentation of material facts.

All reasonable doubts to be resolved in favor of the veterans, the burden of proof being on the Government. (The President by regulation had restored these cases pending final appeal by allowing 75 percent of amounts formerly received.)

Fourth. Cases of veterans who did not enlist until the war was over were restored.

Fifth. Willful-misconduct cases were restored.

Sixth. Retired emergency officers that had been stricken off the roll as such and reduced from $106 and $416 a month to the same pay as enlisted men for the same disabilities were restored.

8. HOUSE AMENDMENTS

The House refused to accept the Senate amendments, which restored the willful misconduct cases (except as to the blind), the after-war cases, and the Retired Emergency Officers. It also amended the Senate amendment in regard to presumptives so that those cases restored to the rolls will receive 75 percent of what they were receiving instead of 100 percent. The House agreed to the other Senate amendments.

9. HOUSE AND SENATE AGREE

The House provisions prevailed and the conference report was accepted by each House, March 26, 1934. The bill was sent to the President and by him vetoed. March 27, 1934, the House, and, March 28, 1934, the Senate passed the bill, the objection of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

10. DIFFERENCES BETWEEN CONGRESS AND THE PRESIDENT

There were only two material differences between Congress and the President on the legislation in this bill affecting World War veterans; they were, (1) the rating schedule; the President had included in his regulations a rating schedule which would base the veteran's average impairment of earning capacity resulting from such injuries in civil occupations, whereas Congress restored the old rating schedule, which bases the average impairment of earning capacity in the civil occupation similar to that of the veteran at time of enlistment, and (2) the 29,258 presumptive cases; a careful analysis of what Congress enacted into law and what the President had recommended and given by regulation fails to disclose a great difference.

It was reported that the additional veterans' cost in the bill amounted to $228,000,000 a year. This was a mistake and has been corrected many times, but it is still being reported as a fact. No informed person contends that the additional cost will amount to as much as 25 percent of $228,000,000 annually.

11. PRESENT STATUS OF WORLD WAR VETERANS

Since changes have been made in veterans' laws, every World War veteran is entitled to the following benefits:

First. If suffering from a disability traceable to the service during war, he is paid from $10 to $100 a month, depending upon disability, pre-war occupation, and so forth; also additional amounts under certain conditions. If his death is caused by such disability, his widow and other dependents receive a pension from the Government.

Second. Entitled under certain conditions to receive hospitalization and medical care for service-connected or non-service-connected disabilities; also transportation to and from the hospital.

Third. If indigent and disabled, entitled to live in a Government soldiers' home. Transportation will be furnished if veteran unable to provide it.

Fourth. If served 90 days, honorably discharged, and is permanently and totally disabled, regardless of cause, except misconduct, may receive from the Government $30 a month, if not in hospital or soldiers' home; in that event, $6 a month. If he has dependents, he receives $6 a month and his dependents the remainder so long as he remains in the hospital or home.

Fifth. Certain preferences and advantages in obtaining positions with the Government; the privilege of carrying Government insurance under certain conditions; preferences in obtaining homesteads and adjusted compensation.

Sixth. Burial allowances including headstones, regardless of length of service.

Seventh. Any honorably discharged veteran may be buried in any national cemetery, including the Arlington Cemetery at Washington. The wife of an officer may be buried prior to his death and in a separate grave. The wife of an enlisted man may be buried in the same grave but only after the burial of the veteran, except where he is 70 years of age or over and gives assurance that he will be buried in the same grave.

12. POINTS TO BE REMEMBERED IN CONNECTION WITH PRESENT LAWS AND REGULATIONS INVOLVING WORLD WAR VETERANS

A veteran of the World War is one who served between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918. Under prior acts of Congress, which have been repealed, a veteran was construed to be one who served between April 6, 1917, and July 2, 1921. Under present laws one who enlisted after November 11, 1918, is not considered a veteran of the World War and is not entitled to benefits of such veterans, but is entitled to only such benefits as a peace-time soldier is entitled to receive.

Veterans who formerly received $12, $18, and $24 a month under the disability allowance law will not receive these benefits under present laws. The only non-service-connected disability that is recognized under present law is the total and permanent cases. They may receive $30 a month as long as they are permanently and totally disabled, regardless of their age and regardless of the cause of their disability—except misconduct—and are not required to show need, further than to show an annual income not in excess of $1,000 if single and not in excess of $2,500 if married.

Any veteran may receive advice, counsel, and assistance in regard to his case by a contact man, who is paid by the Government, at every hospital and every regional office. The contact man will help the veteran by suggesting the kind of evidence that will be necessary to assist him in his case, assist him in preparing all the necessary forms, and do such other things as may be necessary to the proper presentation of his case to the Veterans' Administration.

Many veterans ask the question: "I have submitted all the proof I can and have been turned down; what shall I do now?" Of course, every question involving expenditure of public funds must be determined by some person, court, board, or tribunal. Someone must have the responsibility of passing upon the sufficiency of the evidence presented to authorize the payment of public funds. It is the same way in regard to civil rights. If one brings suit against a person, firm, or corporation for damages to person or property, certain proof must be presented to the court and the jury in order to win. Although the injured person feels that he has presented sufficient proof, if the court or jury decides against him he can appeal his case, and if the higher courts affirm the judgment there is nothing further for him to do; he has lost. A veteran may be given another trial by the Government if he can show error in the decision or submit additional evidence from the appropriate service department. He is precluded from obtaining a reconsideration of his claim after a decision has once been reached by the Board of Veterans' Appeals.

Pensions and benefits are made in accordance with actual laws and regulations and not through favoritism, "political pull", or other means.

The Government allows $100 in payment of the funeral expenses of an honorably discharged veteran of any war or a veteran in receipt of pension or compensation, provided his net assets at time of death exclusive of debts, accrued pension, compensation, or insurance due at time of death do not equal or exceed $1,000. A flag to drape the casket is furnished in all cases where the veteran was honorably discharged, and the flag is given to the next of kin after burial.

A World War veteran, who is in the employment of the Government and is receiving compensation for a service-connected disability, will not have his compensation reduced. Neither will he have his compensation reduced by reason of any amount of income from any source.

A widow of a World War veteran who died of a service-connected disability is entitled to $30 a month, and $10 for the first child and $6 a month for each additional child. Children may continue to draw compensation until 21 if in school or college, otherwise it is stopped at the age of 18.

The father and mother dependent upon a World War veteran who died of a service-connected disability may receive $30 a month from the Government. If only one is receiving compensation, the amount is $20 a month.

A widow of a World War veteran who died of a nonservice-connected disability is not permitted to receive a pension from the Government.

If a veteran deserts his wife without cause on her part, she may receive 30 percent of his compensation or pension and an additional amount for each child.

Children, motherless or not in charge of the mother, deserted by a veteran, may have a part of his compensation set aside for their benefit.

A service-connected World War veteran may receive only $15 a month while he is confined in a Government hospital or in any institution that is supported by public funds, including State and county hospitals or penal institutions, such as jails and penitentiaries. The dependents of such a veteran, however, may receive the difference between the $15 and the amount of his compensation.

A non-service-connected World War veteran who is totally and permanently disabled and receiving $30 a month will have his compensation reduced to $6 a month so long as he may be confined in a hospital or institution supported by public funds, but his dependents may get the difference between the $6 and $30.

In order for a World War veteran to receive hospitalization from the Government it is necessary for him to show:

First. That he is a veteran of the World War.

Second. That he was not dishonorably discharged.

Third. That he has no funds out of which to pay for hospitalization at a private institution—an affidavit from him to that effect is sufficient.

Fourth. That he is suffering from a disease or injury requiring hospital treatment.

No dispensary treatments are allowed at hospitals except for service-connected cases.

Any disability wherein an operation is required is considered sufficient for hospitalization.

The disability allowance law was a service pension law for World War veterans. Many people, including many veterans, had the feeling that it was enacted too soon after the war to receive the approval of the public generally. Veterans in no other war had received a service pension so soon after the war was over. This law, except as to the totally and permanently disabled, was repealed and has not been reenacted. It involved almost 400,000 veterans.

13. EFFECT OF ECONOMY ACT ON SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR VETERANS

Prior to the enactment of the Economy Act of March 20, 1933, there were two principal types of laws which governed the granting of pensions to Spanish-American War veterans and their dependents. One of these was the so-called "general" pension law which provided a pension ranging between $8 and $30 a month, depending upon the rank of the veteran, for service-connected death or disability, with rates as high as $125 to veterans for certain specific disabilities. The other was the so-called "service" pension law which provided a pension ranging between $20 and $72 a month, depending upon degree of disability or age. It was not necessary to prove service connection in order to be eligible for a service pension. They were granted primarily because the person had served 90 days or more in the military or naval service during the Spanish-American War, including the Boxer rebellion and Philippine insurrection, was honorably discharged and had later become disabled or reached the age of 62 years. Pensions at lower rates were payable to those who had served only 70 days. Inasmuch as the rates under the service pension laws were generally higher than those based on service-connected disability or death, it was customary for pensioners to elect to receive benefits under the "service" pension laws rather than the "general" law. On March 19, 1933, there were on the rolls the following number of pensioners of the Spanish-American War:

Veterans:
Service connected	458
Nonservice connected	195,387
Dependents:
Service connected	1,244
Nonservice connected	37,929

14. VETERANS 62 YEARS OF AGE PROVIDED FOR

At the time of the passage of the Economy Act it became apparent that under the broad powers which Congress was about to delegate to the President of the United States it would be possible to remove from the rolls all persons receiving a service pension based on service in the Spanish-American War unless such persons could prove service-connected disability or were then permanently and totally disabled. In order to safeguard the interests of Spanish-American War veterans past the age of 62 years, who were then entitled to pension, Congress added a proviso to the pending measure whereby these men would be retained on the pension rolls.

15. THREE TYPES OF PENSIONS UNDER THE NEW LAW

The Economy Act provided for a continuation of pension benefits in accordance with prior laws until July 1, 1933. At that time rates under the new law and regulations were to take effect. An exception was made, however, in the case of Spanish-American War veterans whereby a presumption of service connection was granted until such time as the veteran's case could be reviewed. At that time, if it appeared on the basis of medical judgment or affirmative evidence that the disability was not service connected, the pension was to be discontinued.

The new law provided for three types of pensions, as follows:

(a) Those based on service-connected, war-time disability. These rates ranged from $8 to $80 a month, with special rates up to $250 for certain specific disabilities.

(b) Those based on service-connected, peace-time disability. These rates ranged from $6 to $30 a month, with special rates up to $125 for certain specific disabilities.

(c) Those based on non-service-connected disability. Only war veterans and their dependents were eligible for this class of pension. A Spanish-American War veteran, if permanently and totally disabled, would be entitled to $20 a month. If 62 years of age or more, he was granted a pension of $6 a month, if he was entitled to a pension prior to the date of the Economy Act, even though he was less than permanently and totally disabled.

16. DEPENDENTS UNDER NEW LAW

The new law granted Spanish-American War widows $30 a month if the death was service-connected and based on war-time service, $22 a month if the death was service-connected and based on peace-time service, and $15 a month if the death was nonservice connected but the decedent was a Spanish-American War veteran. An additional amount was awarded for minor children. (Remarried widows received pensions under prior laws. They are excluded under existing laws.)

17. NEW DATES FOR WAR PERIOD

At this point it should be explained that the regulations issued pursuant to the Economy Act prescribed new dates for the beginning and termination of the various wars. Under the old practice any person who served between April 21, 1898 (the date of the declaration of War with Spain) and April 11, 1899 (the date of the treaty of peace) was considered a veteran of the Spanish-American War. The new law and regulations restrict the period so that the ending date is August 12, 1898, the date of the peace protocol and the date when hostilities actually ceased. For this reason many veterans and dependents who previously drew pensions based on war service are no longer eligible on this basis inasmuch as the soldier enlisted after August 12, 1898. They are, however, eligible for peace-time pension if suffering from a service-connected disability. In making a comparison of the rates payable to widows and dependents under the old laws and under the Economy Act, it may be said that there were individual changes up and down, as will be shown by the following table which gives the average monthly rate paid prior to the economy act and subsequent thereto:

Average rate prior to Mar. 20, 1933 (service connected)	$20.36
Average rate after Mar. 20, 1933 (service connected)	25.59
Average rate prior to Mar. 20, 1933 (nonservice connected)	32.08
Average rate after Mar. 20, 1933 (nonservice connected)	15.77

18. PHILIPPINE INSURRECTION

The old dates of the Philippine insurrection were April 12, 1899, to July 4, 1902, and any person serving in the military or naval service during this period was considered a veteran of the Philippine insurrection, and pension was payable at war-time rates. The new regulations describe the period as being between August 13, 1898, and before July 5, 1902, but actual participation in the insurrection is required for payment of pension on the basis of war service. This restriction is based on the thought that the Philippine insurrection did not constitute such a national emergency that those members of the military or naval service who were on the mainland and were never called into actual duty in suppressing the insurrection should later be given the benefit of pensions based on war-time service. Pensions are payable, however, at peace-time rates for service-incurred disabilities. This new provision affected 12,177 pensioners who had previously drawn service pensions based upon service in the Philippine insurrection.

19. BOXER REBELLION

There has been practically no change in the dates of the Boxer rebellion, the old commencing date being June 16, 1900, the new date being June 20, 1900. The ending date is the same under both old and new laws, viz, May 12, 1901, and actual participation has been continued as a requirement for war service.

20. WILLFUL MISCONDUCT CASES EXCLUDED

There is one other important change in the new policy with respect to Spanish-American War pensions which should be mentioned here. Under the old law a veteran suffering from a non-service-connected disability due to misconduct could nevertheless receive a service pension. The new law denies pension in these cases. This provision has affected 781 persons.

21. FIRST REGULATIONS TOO RIGOROUS

It became apparent within a short time after the original veterans' regulations were issued that they were too rigorous, that they went further than was intended, and that they would result in unnecessary hardship. Accordingly, before the new rates went into effect the President issued new Executive orders liberalizing pension rates. The war-time rate for total disability was increased from $80 to $90 a month, and there was an increase in certain special rates. The peace-time rate for total disability was increased from $30 to $45, with an increase in certain special rates. The rate for non-service-connected permanent total disability was raised from $20 to $30, and the special pension for Spanish-American War veterans past the age of 62 years was generally increased from $6 to $15 a month.

22. CONGRESS EXTENDS PROVISIONS IN COMPROMISE

Believing that the saving clause, whereby 62-year-old Spanish-American War veterans were retained on the rolls, was not as extensive as it should be, Congress, under date of June 16, 1933, in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act for the years 1933–34, provided that a pension of $15 a month would be paid to any Spanish-American War veteran 55 years of age or over who served at least 90 days, was honorably discharged, in need, and is now 50-percent disabled. This resulted in placing on the rolls 83,000 additional veterans, at an annual increased cost of $15,000,000. On January 19, 1934, the President further liberalized this provision by eliminating the age requirement. Accordingly, from that date any veteran of the Spanish-American War, Boxer rebellion, or Philippine insurrection who was unable to qualify for pension at a higher rate, if 50-percent disabled, could receive a monthly pension of $15.

At the time this order was issued the rates for service-connected war-time pension were also increased so that the amount for total disability became $100 instead of $90. This was much in excess of the corresponding pension under the old law.

23. WIDOWS PROVIDED FOR

In order to be sure that no hardship would be imposed upon the widows of men who served in the periods under discussion, this order also provided that if any widow was receiving less money under the new law than she would be eligible for under the old law for service-connected death, she would be reinstated at the old rate, but not in excess of $30 a month. This regulation benefited a number of widows of higher ranking Army officers who were reduced under the terms of the new regulations.

24. PRESIDENT'S VETO MESSAGE

When Congress passed the Independent Offices Appropriation Act for 1934–35 containing liberalized veterans' benefits, the President stated in his veto message the reasons why he was opposed to the legislation and indicated certain action which he was taking in the way of liberalized benefits. With regard to Spanish-American War veterans, he proposed the following plan:

First. Restoration to the rolls of those veterans who in 1920 were receiving pensions for service-connected disability, pension to be payable at the new higher rates. (The so-called "service" pension law was not enacted until June 5, 1920. Prior to that time it was necessary to establish title to pension under the "general" pension law.)

Second. Restoration to the rolls of other Spanish-American War veterans at 75 percent of the amount they were receiving prior to the Economy Act pending a final determination of service connection in each veteran's case before the Board of Veterans' Appeals.

This action which was promulgated in the form of an Executive order on March 27, 1934, was not acceptable to Congress which insisted upon its plan as contained in the veterans' provisions of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act.

25. 75-PERCENT RESTORATION

The new law restores 75 percent of the pension being paid on March 19, 1933, the day before the Economy Act was passed, to any veteran of the Spanish-American War, including the Boxer rebellion and the Philippine insurrection, and to the dependents of any such veteran, except where the veteran is hospitalized and except in willful misconduct cases. Where payment was made through fraud, error, or misrepresentation such pensions will not be restored. If a pensioner is not exempt from payment of Federal income tax, he is ineligible for pension. With these restrictions, and the further limitation as to dates and requirements of war service as prescribed by veterans' regulations, all laws in effect prior to the Economy Act granting monetary benefits to veterans of the Spanish-American War, Boxer rebellion, and Philippine insurrection are reenacted in their entirety.

26. FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

There is an additional restriction which applies only to veterans of the Spanish-American War in Federal employ. In these cases he cannot receive a pension in excess of $6 a month if his salary, if single, exceeds $1,000 a year, and if married $2,500.

27. SERVICE PENSIONS REINSTATED

The effect of the new law is to reinstate the old "service" pensions, subject, of course, to the limitations just described.

28. PRESIDENT'S REGULATIONS INCREASED BENEFITS

Inasmuch as the highest rate for war-time service-connected total disability under the old pension law is $30 a month and the corresponding rate under the President's regulations is $100, and inasmuch as the highest special rate under the old law is $125 a month as compared with $250 under the regulations, most veterans will be paid the greater benefit under the regulations rather than the rate allowed by the Independent Offices Appropriation Act.

29. REINSTATEMENT OF THOSE NOT DISHONORABLY DISCHARGED

An honorable discharge was not necessary for service-connected pension under the old laws. If a veteran suffering from a service-connected disability has been taken off the rolls by reason of the Economy Act which requires an honorable discharge he may now be reinstated at 75 percent of the pension he formerly received subject to the restrictive provisions of the new law. This does not apply to deserters.

30. OLD AND NEW LAWS

If a pension is adjudicated under the old pension laws which have been reenacted by the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, the criteria in evaluating disability will be inability to perform manual labor rather than average impairment of earning capacity.

The veterans' regulations provide liberal presumptions with respect to service connection of disability. These presumptions do not exist under the old laws. Accordingly, the Economy Act and regulations will offer an advantage which the Independent Offices Appropriation Act does not.

The new law enlarges the group of Spanish-American War veterans entitled to hospitalization and domiciliary care by removing the requirement of honorable discharge. If the veteran was not dishonorably discharged, he is entitled to hospitalization and domiciliary care, and his statement as to inability to pay traveling expenses for treatment of non-service-connected disability will be accepted as sufficient proof of the fact.

31. PRESENT STATUS OF SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR VETERANS WITH 90 DAY'S SERVICE

Since changes have been made, every veteran who served 90 days or more commencing between April 20, 1898, and August 12, 1898, during the Spanish-American War and not dishonorably discharged, is entitled to the following benefits:

First. If suffering from a disability traceable to the service during the war, he is paid from $10 to $100 a month, depending upon disability, etc. If his death is caused by such disability, his widow and other dependents receive a pension from the Government. The widow receives $30 a month, with $10 additional for first child and $6 for each additional child.

Second. Entitled to receive hospitalization and medical care for either service-connected or non-service-connected disabilities; also transportation to and from the hospital.

Third. If indigent and disabled, entitled to live in a Government soldiers' home. Transportation will be furnished by the Government, if he is unable to provide it.

Fourth. If permanently and totally disabled, regardless of cause—except misconduct—may receive from the Government $45 a month; and if in need of an attendant, $54 a month.

Fifth. If partially disabled, regardless of cause—except misconduct—he is entitled to receive the following monthly benefits:

(a) One-tenth disability, $15; one-fourth disability, $18.75; one-half disability, $26.25; three-fourths disability, $37.50. Regardless of disability, but if 62 years of age, $22.50; 68 years of age, $30; 72 years of age, $37.50; 75 years of age, $45.

(b) A widow of such a veteran will receive $22.50 a month and $4.50 for each child.

Sixth. Certain preferences and advantages in obtaining positions with the Government and preferences in obtaining homesteads.

Seventh. Burial allowances for veterans of all wars regardless of length of service.

32. BOXER REBELLION AND PHILIPPINE INSURRECTION

Anyone who actively participated in the Boxer rebellion or Philippine insurrection is entitled to the same benefits as a 90-day Spanish-American War veteran. His widow and other dependents are entitled to the same benefits.

33. SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR VETERANS WITH 70 DAYS' SERVICE COMMENCING DURING THE WAR PERIOD

These veterans are entitled to the same benefits and allowances as the 90-day Spanish-American War veterans, except for non-service-connected disabilities. They are entitled to the following benefits:

First. If permanently and totally disabled, regardless of cause—except misconduct—may receive from the Government $22.50 a month and, if in need of an attendant, $37.50 a month.

Second. If partially disabled, regardless of cause—except misconduct—he is entitled to receive the following monthly benefits:

(a) One-tenth disability, $9; one-fourth disability, $11.25; one-half disability, $13.50; three-fourths disability, $18. Regardless of disability, if 62 years of age, entitled to $9; 68 years of age, $13.50; 72 years of age, $18; 75 years of age, $22.50.

(b) Widows and other dependents of these veterans are not entitled to benefits, except in a case where the veteran was discharged by reason of disability.

34. SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR VETERANS—INTERESTING POINTS

A Spanish-American War veteran is one who served between April 20, 1898, and August 12, 1898. Others who did not serve during that time but actively participated in the Philippine insurrection or the Boxer rebellion are entitled to the same benefits as a Spanish-American War veteran.

Such a veteran may receive a pension for disabilities not connected with his military service even though his disability is not total and permanent.

The same law in regard to the reduction of his pension to $6 a month if in a hospital or institution supported by public funds applies as in the case of World War veterans. Also a reduction to $15 a month in service-connected cases.

These veterans are entitled to the same benefits in regard to hospitalization, domiciliary care in soldiers' homes, and burial benefits as World War veterans.

A widow of such a veteran receives $22.50 a month if her husband died of a non-service-connected disability; she receives $30 a month and the same allowances for minor children as World War widows if her husband dies of a service-connected disability.

35. NUMBER OF VETERANS AND DEPENDENTS ON ROLLS BEFORE AND SINCE ECONOMY ACT

The following table discloses information that I have received from the Veterans' Administration in regard to the number of veterans and their dependents.

Column 1 represents the number that was drawing compensation or pension on March 19, 1933, prior to the Economy Act.

Column 2 represents the number drawing compensation or pensions on March 31, 1934, and not including the additional number affected by Public, No. 141, the independent offices appropriation bill, passed over the veto of the President March 28, 1934.

Column 3 includes the number now on the rolls and that will be restored to the compensation and pension rolls when they have received the full benefits of Public, No. 141, of March 28, 1934.

	Column 1	Column 2	Column 3
World War veterans:
Service connected	338,544	308,978	329,853
Nonservice connected (D.A.)	425,894	33,152	32,320
Peace time, service connected		10,374	9,991
Retired emergency officers	6,037	1,527	1,517
Total	770,475	354,131	373,631
Dependents of service connected	101,542	100,039	100,039
Total, veterans and dependents	872,017	454,170	473,720
Spanish-American War veterans, including Philippine insurrection and Boxer rebellion veterans:
Service connected	458	6,212	6,212
Nonservice connected	195,387	117,861	174,388
Total	195,845	124,073	180,600
Dependent:
Service connected	1,244	1,598	1,598
Nonservice connected	57,929	31,091	33,302
Total dependents	39,173	32,689	34,900
Total veterans and dependents	235,018	156,762	215,500
Grand total of all veterans of Spanish-American War, World War, and their dependents	1,107,035	610,932	689,220

The 10,374 listed as peace-time veterans enlisted after November 11, 1918, and before July 2, 1921, and were formerly considered World War veterans. Recent acts have permitted a few of them, including the blind and certain presumptives, to be restored to veterans' benefits, thereby reducing the number to 9,991.

The number of disability allowance cases estimated to be put on the roll appear to be less than the number on the roll March 31, 1934. This is not due to Public, No. 141, but is due to adjudication and administration.

This table does not include special acts of Congress. The number in that class is small.

A peace-time soldier for disabilities traceable to his service receives about one half as much for such disability as a war-time veteran receives. Only service-connected disabilities are recognized by the Government in peace-time cases.

36. WHAT DISCUSSION INCLUDES

This information is intended to cover the subject in a general way by including references to such benefits as may cause the expenditure of a large sum of money and without any intention of being specific, going into details, covering exceptional cases or including groups affecting only a comparatively small number of veterans.

AGRICULTURE

Mr. PEAVEY. Mr. Speaker, 1933–34 has been a hard time for the dairymen and diversified farmers. Prices for nearly all farm crops went down to the lowest level in 25 years. Due to the operations of the N.R.A. and general recovery program prices on manufactured goods the farmer buys were raised to meet increased labor costs and shorter hours. all of which added to the burdens of the farmers and other consumers.

The dairy farmers' situation has been difficult in all sections of the country during the past 2 years and added to the normal burdens were 2 years of drought in northern Wisconsin which forced many farmers to the point of desperation.

Early in January several associates in the House and I, went with Senators LA FOLLETTE and DUFFY to the office of Secretary Wallace for a conference. We told him the facts and appealed for immediate emergency appropriations of $300,000,000 with which to buy up the surplus butter and cheese and raise prices. Butter was then selling in New York at 19½ cents wholesale. Secretary Wallace was receptive but felt he was helpless because no appropriations were available for this purpose. He suggested that we confer with Harry Hopkins, Director of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration. We did and appealed to Hopkins to double the Government's purchase of milk, butter, and cheese for those on relief. Mr. Hopkins responded nobly and immediately placed orders for the purchase of millions of pounds of surplus butter and cheese and as a result butter went to 26 and 27 cents in New York and has held there.

The raise was not enough, but it helped every Wisconsin dairyman at a critical time.

Passage of the Frazier-Lemke bill to provide refinancing of farm indebtedness on a basis of 1½-percent interest and 1½ percent on the principal would help Wisconsin farmers greatly to meet the economic disparity between the farm and factory. The principal argument made in opposition to the Frazier bill is that the Government, under the terms of the bill, is directed to finance the farmers by issuing new money.

The Government has more than seven billions in gold in the Treasury and Federal Reserve banks at this time; more than enough in addition to the five and one-half billion already issued to provide for the issuance of currency in an amount necessary to finance the Frazier bill and to provide a 100-percent gold base.

Democratic and Republican leaders are combined against the bill. Nearly 140 of the 145 signatures necessary to bring the bill up for a vote had been obtained when Democratic leaders at the suggestion of President Roosevelt prevailed upon 9 or 10 Members to erase their names from the petition. Every effort is being made by progressives in the House, led by Representative LEMKE, of North Dakota, to get the bill up for a vote before Congress adjourns.

I was no. 27 to sign the petition, I believe. The administration leaders are bitterly opposed to the bill being acted upon at this session.

One of the prime difficulties in reaching a solution of the dairy farmers' situation in Washington is that the dairymen are hopelessly in disagreement among themselves as to the character of legislation necessary to solve the problem. I have in the past 3 months attended more than a dozen conferences between farm and dairy leaders and Members of the House and Senate. Not one of these conferences could agree on a legislative program or bill to meet the situation. That is why I voted for the tariff bill. If Congress will not legislate to put agriculture on a parity with industry, then let President Roosevelt lower the Hawley-Smoot tariff rates in protection of industry on everything the farmer has to buy.

TARIFF

The House passed a tariff bill a few weeks ago by a vote of 272 to 111. The purpose of this bill is to give the administration power and authority to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements with other nations and to give the President authority to raise or lower existing rates by 50 percent. The bill was amended so as to prevent foreign-debt cancelations or settlements in conjunction with the tariff. It was also amended to limit its authority to 3 years.

Pursuant to the campaign pledges contained in the Republican national platform in 1928 that tariff rates would be revised to place agriculture on a parity with industry, Herbert Hoover convened Congress in special session in April 1929 for the purpose of carrying out the party's campaign pledge.

This is what happened. Political pressure from big industry and national Republican leaders prevented Hoover from fulfilling the campaign pledge. Congress reconvened in December 1929 after the first stock-market crash. In the meantime the powerful industrial and manufacturing influences, aided by the New York financiers and Andrew W. Mellon, in control of the Republican Party, coerced Congress into adopting schedule after schedule in the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill giving industry extortionate rates of protection and thereby increased the disparity between agriculture and industry. This is what the Hawley-Smoot bill did to the people on the farms in the Western States. The people in Wisconsin have been paying tribute ever since. Every time a farmer bought a plow or a seeder or his wife bought a dress or a broom they were made to pay tariff to the manufacturers, while the price of agricultural products since the passage of the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill have gone down to the lowest level in recent history.

I am a Lincoln Republican. I believe in a protective tariff and the theory underlying the tariff of paying an American scale of wages to insure an American standard of living.

The only way that agriculture can be put on a parity with industry at the present time, in my opinion, is to reduce the high tariffs given industry on everything the farmer has to buy. It is true the farmers were given protection under the Hawley-Smoot bill, but they cannot collect or realize on this protection because they cannot control their production or fix their sale prices.

Secretary Wallace is seeking to make the tariff effective to the farmer by the commodity-allotment plan and control system, to be paid through the medium of a process tax. I hope he succeeds, but I doubt the outcome. On the other hand, industry, large industry and monopolized industry, can and does control both production and sale price, and as a result those industries are exacting high prices from the American consumers who are to a large extent the American farmers and working men.

This is the first opportunity the Congress has had to vote on any measure that would offer hope that these extortionate tariff rates on steel, iron, aluminum, and textiles under the Hawley-Smoot bill might be reduced. Hoover let the tariff barons run wild in writing the schedules. He did not have the " guts " to stand up and fight them. He gave in to them. Members of Congress like myself who voted for the new tariff bill the other day hope and expect that President Roosevelt will have the backbone to defy the demands of those special-privilege seekers of high tariff rates and that he will lower some of the rates which are so high as to not only keep out foreign competition but exact extortionate rates from the American farmer and consumer. That is why I voted for this bill.

Old Guard Republicans in the House yesterday voted with the regular Democratic wheelhorses to kill the Couzens amendment to increase income taxes a flat 10 percent. The vote was 282 to 77 on a standing vote to reject the Couzens amendment. Progressives on both sides of the aisle tried to get the necessary Members to stand up to force a roll call, but without success.

Friends of the Couzens provision wanted the amendment to provide additional revenue to finance the heavy relief measures that will be necessary for another year or two, if the unemployed and destitute are to be clothed and fed. Local and State funds for relief are in many States completely exhausted.

Senator LA FOLLETTE's amendment providing for full publicity remains in the bill, as well as a 3-cent tax on imported oils used as food substitutes in butter and lard. This provision is of particular interest to Wisconsin dairymen. The House originally voted a 5-cent tax on imported oils, but the Senate cut it to 3 cents.

The bill as passed provides an estimated revenue of $417,000,000. This provides ample funds to pay the disabled soldiers and Government employees the raises voted by Congress in overriding the veto of the President in the independent offices appropriation bill.

WAR AND PEACE

The House in February passed the Vinson naval appropriation bill providing for the construction of 105 new war vessels and 1,100 new airplanes. When Congress has finished with the Army and Navy bills, appropriations and authorizations in the amount of $1,400,000,000 for national defense and war preparations for the year of 1935 will have been made.

This is more money than is being spent by any country in the world for war preparation at this time.

Japan is going to build more battleships. England is spending $8,000,000 more for her army this year than she did last year. France and England alike are embarking on a program of bigger and better navies, and the United States is setting the pace with her appropriation of $1,400,000,000 for 1935.

"Big navy" groups are about to take off on an armament race that bids fair to surpass the most ambitious militaristic plans of the past. The Kaiser was a "piker" by comparison. The most startling angle of this race, however, is developed in the statement of Japan's Minister of the Navy that Japan must build more warships in view of the action of the United States House of Representatives in the passage of the Vinson bill appropriating $750,000,000 for warships.

Committee hearings during the present session of Congress on appropriation bills for the Army and Navy, particularly in the aviation divisions of these two departments of government, have revealed profits for private concerns out of the Federal Treasury that amount almost to extortion. Airplane companies profited on Government contracts for several years past as high as 36 percent. The Department of Justice is inquiring into the sale of surplus Army goods to private individuals, another transaction wherein Uncle Sam is alleged to have taken a tremendous loss.

These investigations bring to mind some of the profits made by private concerns during the World War. United States Steel during the period from 1916 to 1918 made profits in excess of 50 percent. Bethlehem Steel in 1917 paid a 200-percent dividend.

The Congress is becoming more vigilant and alert in these matters. The House adopted an amendment to the naval appropriation bill providing for the construction of one half of the ships provided for in the bill to be done in Government navy yards, and by another amendment limited profits to private contractors building Government vessels to 10 percent.

These precautions should make for peace if the findings of a committee of the League of Nations a few years ago were accurate. This committee presented evidence to the League showing that private manufacturers of munitions and armaments instigate war scares, stimulate armament races by false stories of other nations' degrees of preparedness, and organize international armament trusts which play one country off against another.

NYE COMMITTEE

The Senate last month passed the Nye resolution creating a committee of five Members of the Senate to investigate the activities of individuals and corporations in the United States engaged in the manufacture and sale of arms and munitions and to inquire into the desirability of creating a Government monopoly.

Senator BORAH, speaking on the floor of the Senate on March 5, said:

No treaty, no law made by man or God, controls munitions' manufacturers.

A few years ago our country with fanfare and trumpets announced the signing of the Kellogg Peace Pact, under the terms of which we agreed with the other civilized nations of the world not to resort to war to settle any dispute which might arise. The Kellogg Treaty outlawed war. Yet in 1934 Congress authorizes and appropriates $1,400,000,000 to build and maintain warships, soldiers, airships, and armaments.

Few Wisconsin people have any conception of the actual cost of war implements, armaments, and devices. I wish to illustrate by recording just a few.

First. It cost $4,000,000 for oil to fuel the American fleet in its journey from the Atlantic to the Pacific this last winter. It is taking another $4,000,000 to bring it back.

Second. Machine guns of the kind used by the American Army cost $640 each.

Third. The French 75-mm field gun we all learned about in the World War costs around $8,000 each.

Fourth. The new Christy tanks used by our Army cost over $25,000 each.

Fifth. A large caterpillar tank costs upwards of $80,000 each.

Sixth. Military airplanes in the United States cost from $6,000 for light scouting planes to as high as $100,000 for a heavy bomber.

Seventh. A naval cruiser costs as high as $11,000,000 and a battleship as high as $40,000,000.

Those are just a few of the reasons why wars cost money. It shows the tremendous saving that can be effected by maintaining world peace.

In view of the Roosevelt administration's protestations for world peace, reduction of armaments, and friendly negotiations of trade agreements, Members of Congress as well as the people of the country wonder just where the administration is going. Past history records not a single instance of any great nation that ever spent such huge sums on war preparations without getting into a war. It is true that some four hundred million of the fourteen hundred million mentioned above is just an authorization, but it is the experience of the Congress that such authorizations are taken by generals and admirals in charge of national defense as a direction from Congress, and the money is eventually appropriated.

LABOR

The urgency and importance of discarding the last remnants of the depression and taking a new and wiser course to prevent a return of the devastating conditions which have prevailed for the past 3 years is reflected in the legislation which has been sponsored in this session of Congress by the various labor organizations of the country.

The 21 standard railway labor organizations are firmly supporting the following bills before the House and Senate:

Federal train limit bill, introduced by Representative WITHROW, Wisconsin, providing for a limitation of the number of cars to each train.

Full train crew bill, introduced by Representative GRISWOLD.

Amendments to the Federal Employers' Liability Act, introduced by Representative MEAD, which would fix the liability of railway companies for injuries to employees.

Six-hour day bill, introduced by Representative CROSSER of Ohio, providing for a 6-hour day or 42-hour work week for all railway employees.

Amendments to the Railway Labor Act providing for prompt disposition of disputes between carriers and their employees, introduced by Representative CROSSER of Ohio.

Amendment to the Federal hours of service law reducing hours on duty from 16 to 12, introduced by Representative CROSSER of Ohio.

Retirement insurance for railroad employees, known as the "Wagner-Crosser bill."

The 6-hour day bill, introduced by Representative CROSSER of Ohio will come before the House under a discharge petition, offered by Representative WITHROW, of Wisconsin, unless Congress adjourns before the measure can be reached under the rules. Today there are 143 signatures attached to the petition. Only 145 are needed. I was no. 8 to sign the petition.

The retirement insurance bill for railroad employees which has been caught between the cross fires of the railway organizations and the association of railroad employees under what is known as the "Royster plan" is being rewritten in committee under a compromise agreement between the two factions.

Unfortunately the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce does not contemplate taking action on any of the other railroad bills listed at this session.

Probably the most important measure in Congress in protection of labor is the Wagner-Connery labor disputes bill now before the Committee on Labor. This bill has for its fundamental purpose a plan to encourage capital to operate and insure labor its right to organize and thereby exercise its liberty of contract to secure a just reward for labor performed and to preserve a decent standard of living.

Recently a petition was laid on the Speaker's desk to discharge the Committee on Labor from further consideration of the bill and bring it to the floor for a vote at this session of Congress. Representative CONNERY, author of the bill in the House, soon after the petition was placed on the desk appealed to the Members to refrain from signing the petition, stating he was in constant communication with the White House on the measure for the purpose of bringing it up for consideration at the best time. The general sentiment prevailing is that the administration is opposed to the measure and that it will not be considered at this session, unless consideration is forced by discharge of the committee.

This resolution contains nothing of economic or political value to the colored race. Its purpose is to give colored people the right of being served in the House dining room on an equality with Members of the House, their families, and friends. For 12 years under Republican control and management the House restaurant was operated under exactly the same policy as it is today; Negroes were not allowed to eat in the Members' restaurant. The author of this resolution came to Congress March 4, 1929. He was here for 2 years under Republican control of the House and its restaurant. Under Speaker Longworth and the Republican chairman of the committee in charge of the restaurant, Mr. Underhill, exactly the same policy was carried on with regard to serving in the House restaurant as is being done today under Mr. WARREN. I think Representative WARREN as chairman of the committee in charge of the House restaurant is to be commended for following the established policy as to serving only Members, their families, and guests in the restaurant. Every Member of this House knows that Representative WARREN has administered his position as Chairman of the Committee on Accounts ably, honestly, and efficiently. He has been courteous, frank, and fair with every Member of this House at all times. The passage of this resolution is in itself a reflection on his administration. The House advances a form of censure when by every rule of justice and reason a vote of commendation is due.

To agitate and raise this technical question of racial rights for political purposes at this time is wrong and responsibility for this vote will at some future date rise up to plague every man who has voted for it. This is no time to agitate racial or religious questions.

I am a friend of the common people, whether they be Caucasian, Indian, or Negro. I work and vote consistently in their behalf. My mother was raised in an orphanage because my grandfather gave his life to preserve the Union and abolish slavery. That terrible conflict was brought on by just such agitation as that contained in the DE PRIEST resolution. Knowing the author as I do I cannot believe that he would intentionally disrupt the friendly association of the Membership of this House in its use of the House restaurant, but if this resolution is to be of any force and effect that is bound to happen, in my opinion.

I am opposed to any bill or resolution that has for its principal purpose the raising of a religious or racial issue. This is not the time or is the National Capitol the place to start an internal turmoil over a constitutional right involving nothing more substantial than the right of a few aristocratic colored people to eat in the same room with Members of the House of Representatives and their families.

That we are all free and equal under the Constitution is conceded. That this concession gives any of us the right to intrude our presence on others regardless of whether they are white or colored, is contrary to the American idea.

Representative DE PRIEST, Republican, of Illinois, the author of this resolution, has, I understand, been served in the House restaurant with the same attention given other Members. He now seeks by resolution to insure this same social privilege to all other colored citizens whom he may invite. Under the guise of securing a constitutional right, what Representative DE PRIEST seeks for his colored friends is a privilege based on social position. This involves wealth, education, common tastes, and family traditions, over which neither the Constitution nor Congress has any power to bestow.

During the Republican regime in the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DE PRIEST] introduced no resolution denouncing this policy, nor did he complain. Why has it all at once become a burning political issue? Is it because this is campaign year and the gentleman has a large colored population in his district? That may justify him in introducing such a resolution, but I cannot feel that that would in any way justify me in voting for it. That may be good Republican politics in the district of the gentleman from Illinois, but I am sure the voters in my district in Wisconsin would not approve of it.

With 10,000,000 men still unemployed, with nearly 2,000,000 still on relief, with millions of white and colored farmers alike hopelessly in debt, does the gentleman from Illinois believe that he is advancing good Republican doctrine to raise the issue of whether his colored visitors at the Capitol are served with the white Members on the second floor or in their own dining room on the first floor?

THIRD PARTY IN WISCONSIN

Mr. Speaker, you ask me if I intend to join the third party. My answer is I fail to see where the formation of a new party will in itself accomplish a single thing in behalf of the farmers, workers, or business men in my congressional district.

Tom Amlie made my office his Washington headquarters last winter. Ever since he was defeated for renomination for Congress from the First District at the last election he has tried repeatedly to sell me the new-party idea. I like Tom personally. I admire also the other half of the La Follette "brain trust" at Madison, Professor Groves. Both Amlie and the professor are able parlor intellectuals. They both admit it. But I cannot follow them on what appears to me to be a wild goose chase to bag Wisconsin first and then the Nation politically. I just do not think it can be done. Such a course seems to me visionary and extremely doubtful as to direct benefits and actually vicious and disastrous in that it will eliminate and destroy the representation and influence that Wisconsin progressives or liberals now wield in the State and Nation. I am unable to follow their political reasoning. Two years ago they ran on the same ballot with me as progressive Republicans. They were defeated in the primary. They then espoused the Democrats who, to the surprise of themselves and the whole State, were elected. Both men sought appointments in the Roosevelt administration. They did not get them. Now they want a third party. Again I confess I am unable to follow them.

What about the rights and interests of the people of Wisconsin? Unless they can show me where the political and economic conditions of the people of Wisconsin and my district will be improved, I cannot go along. Platforms and campaign promises are plentiful and easy to make, but my people want jobs and something with which to buy food and clothing and with which to pay their taxes. Last election after the primary they openly advocated the election of Democrats. This year they seek to divide the progressive Republican voters before the primary. Such a course may be expedient, but it does not square with progressive principles, and it is too devious as to method and nebulous as to results for me to understand or undertake.

Millions of destitute workers and farmers as well as distressed business men need honest, fair, and practical government as they never did before. A third-party program under these conditions, it appears to me, is a bolt to rule or ruin the progressive cause.

I believe in the American theory of representative government. On May 15 I submitted to over 600 progressive leaders and workers in the 14 counties of my congressional district the question of a third party. Two hundred and four have replied to date. Fourteen of these favor a third party, 181 are opposed to a third party, 9 were neutral.

My list to which I sent the questionnaire includes all of the known progressive Republicans of my district. It includes five or six of the advocates of a third party at the Madison conference in March.

It matters little who the new-party leaders may be or how good their platforms may read; the obvious fact remains that no leader or new party can accomplish much for the distressed people of Wisconsin unless such political leader or party can garner enough votes to be elected to office.

I believe in representative government and that we should let the people rule. I feel compelled, therefore, to recognize the expressed wishes of the overwhelming majority of the progressive Republicans of my district. After all, it does not matter so much what happens to progressive leaders in the coming election. They are but individuals and must accept their political fate regardless; but what about the thousands of unemployed, the distressed farmers, soldiers, and home owners, and other citizens? Every progressive or liberal representative who is lost to them in the legislature and Congress at this time means that their life and economic future will be so much harder. The welfare and rights of these people are involved in this election. Their rights should not be gambled away on the false hope that some progressive leader or two may win a grand prize. It was the loyal work of men like GEORGE NORRIS, LA FOLLETTE, FRAZIER, and CUTTING, supported by the progressive Republicans in the House for the past 20 years that made the new deal possible. It will take some more progressive Republican brains and energy to put it on a sound basis and eliminate the petty graft and favoritism that now permeates the new deal administration.

CONTROL OF LIQUOR TRAFFIC

The SPEAKER. Under the special order for today the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPPEL] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, last Sunday our Nation was united in paying homage to the motherhood of America. In my remarks here I wish to urge the enactment of laws and the adoption of a progressive program which, fostering improved economic, social, and moral conditions and the development of a cleaner, more responsible citizenship, would be an everlasting tribute and memorial to the power and influence for good exercised by the mothers of America.

I recognize that the question I propose to discuss is one of a highly controversial nature, and I wish to be as impartial as possible in my remarks. Because my time is limited, I hope that the gentlemen will refrain from questioning me until I conclude.

I had the pleasure recently of hearing an address delivered by the Honorable Homer S. Cummings, the Attorney General, in which he described crime as a national problem and recommended the enactment of a number of prohibitory laws enlarging the police powers of the Federal Government.

Crime is indeed a national problem and in its relation to the liquor question it can best be solved, in my opinion, by national control rather than by prohibitory legislation. Instead of enacting laws to punish the individual, we should enact laws which would aid him in remaining a law-abiding and self-respecting citizen.

It is noted in the press of yesterday that the Attorney General is asking for a war chest up to $3,000,000 to equip the Government, even to the purchase of armored cars, for the suppression of crime. In the same issue, on the same page on which this information appears, we find that New York State is returning to the saloon and the brass rail. It should appear to any thinking individual that the policy of enacting legislation on one hand to combat crime and on the other to enact legislation to create incubators of crime is indeed unfortunate and ill advised from a practical standpoint. What we need in America today, instead of increased appropriations for law enforcement and the return of the open saloon, is a moral and spiritual awakening of our people. We should have more honesty on the part of our public officials and the leaders in big business, with less greed and unconcern on the part of these officials where the interests of the common people are involved.

Aside from monetary control and the extension of credit by our own Government direct to the people at a low rate of interest, it is my opinion that no question confronts the American people so important and far reaching in its application and potentialities as the question of liquor control. Will we Members of Congress take note of the statements made by Joseph H. Choate, Jr., Director of the Federal Alcoholic Control Administration, who has pointed out some very pertinent reasons why the bootlegger thrives and why the results of repeal are assuming aspects even more deleterious to the individual and more alarming in their contribution to our crime problem than the conditions which characterized legal prohibition days?

Unfortunately, he lists as remedy no. 1 increased appropriations for enforcement, which, in my opinion, is the same fallacy advocated during the days of legal prohibition. He does, however, stipulate that legal liquor should be cheaper in order that it may compete with the bootleg liquor. By this indirect comparison, he confesses the inefficacy of our present laws.

As an individual, interested in temperance, it is nauseating to me to find the windows of drug stores and myriad other businesses filled to the ceilings with wines and liquors of a high alcoholic content which any degenerate may purchase as he will. The recent murder of two men here in the city of Washington by an inebriated negro, without any apparent provocation whatever, is, in my opinion, an indirect responsibility of the Congress.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If the gentleman will yield, the intoxicated colored man admitted that he had a glass of Coca-Cola, in which 24 aspirin tablets were dissolved.

Mr. HOEPPEL. That is what the Whisky Trust always says when anything occurs against their industry.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I object to being called a "Whisky Trust."

Mr. HOEPPEL. The unrestricted sale of liquor, with the increasing number of accidents and infractions of law traceable to its unbridled use, is becoming a national menace, just as is the unrestricted sale of firearms to whosoever has the price.

It was hoped that repeal would eliminate the politician and the profiteer from the liquor business but such appears to be far from true in practical application. The inordinate profits accruing to the liquor industry, despite the bootlegger's competition, can best be indicated by the amounts expended in embellished labels, fancy containers, and high-pressure advertising in an effort to inveigle the American people into an orgy of drinking. For instance, a 16-page issue of a Washington paper recently carried more than four full pages of liquor advertising. With an advertising charge of $316 per page, it is self-evident that the liquor business is perhaps the most prosperous in America today, despite the fact that 4,700,000 families are on the relief rolls and approximately 11,000,000 citizens are yet unemployed. Our newspapers are not to be censured for accepting this advertising, but, nevertheless, I feel that they would willingly forego this profitable business in the interest of eliminating bootlegging and its concomitant crime background and in lieu thereof, receive advertising from other legitimate businesses.

The liquor business should be nationalized. The only opposition which may arise to the nationalization of the liquor industry would be that from the Whisky Trust, which, according to reports reaching me, is very close to leading officials, elective and appointive, in government.

With C.W.A. workers, earning a mere pittance, walking directly into any of the myriad of liquor stores and paying as high as $2 per pint for whisky, it is frightful to consider what may occur when the prosperity which we anticipate in the new deal is restored to us. Mothers and fathers are becoming increasingly apprehensive on this subject and we already sense a reaction against repeal taking place in our country, a reaction which I deeply deplore, because it will again pit individual against individual and bring to fruition a spirit of intolerance on this question.

Drys and wets—not including the profiteering, law-breaking wets and corrupt politicians—should cooperate for the nationalization of the liquor problem instead of renewing the age-old war of the wets and the drys. Both factions should recognize that liquor was with us even before the Ten Commandments, and it appears that it will be with us until the end of time or the hoped-for millenium. The drys have a perfect right to their own opinions, but after 12 years of disheartening experience with legal prohibition it would seem that, instead of resurrecting that nightmare and organizing to defeat legislators who differ with them, the drys should join with the temperate wets in the interest of solving this problem once and for all in the furtherance of temperance, in which appropriate control and the injurious effects of alcoholic indulgence may be taught.

While I have been in accord with the President in most of his experiments under the new deal, I am not willing to experiment further with the liquor problem. One noble experiment is sufficient for me. I do not believe in impromptu, ill-considered legislation on this subject. The candidates for Congress in the approaching election should, in my opinion, seek to learn the wishes of their constituents on this subject and should return to the Congress definitely resolved to enact some measure nationalizing the liquor industry. I am very hopeful that the drys will join with those who believe in real temperance, and that they will together use the political club to defeat any legislative candidate unless he will pledge himself to cooperation in correcting the abuses and the confusion resulting from 48 divergent State laws and the thousands of county and municipal laws on this subject.

We seem to have no misgivings in the Congress today toward enacting legislation giving to one man arbitrary power over the destiny of our people, as witnessed in the N.R.A. and other organizations in the new deal. In the matter of gold devaluation, we gave the Secretary of the Treasury absolute control over $2,000,000,000 in gold. Why then should we quibble about turning over the national control of liquor to a nonpartisan commission?

No one questions the integrity of the Supreme Court of the United States; therefore I would suggest the appointment of a nonpartisan commission of seven or more members, appointed for a long tenure of service or for life. In order that such commission may be truly representative of a cross-section of the Nation, I would suggest that 1 of these individuals be selected from the medical group, 2 from the religious, 1 from the scientific, 1 from organized labor, 1 from the agricultural groups, and 1 from the United States Chamber of Commerce, all of these individuals to be recommended to the President for appointment by their own respective groups and any vacancies occurring on such commission to be filled under the same procedure. This commission should be directly amenable to the Congress of the United States and its members subject to removal, with or without charges, only by a vote of two thirds of the actual membership of the Congress, not merely by two thirds of those present and voting.

The manufacture, distribution, and sale of all beer, wine, and liquor should be directly under the control of this commission. If the present licensing features of the N.R.A. do not permit this innovation, laws should be enacted to this effect. The profits of manufacture, if retained under private auspices, should be restricted to a reasonable return on the investment of the brewery, winery, or distillery. All Federal licenses on these products should be repealed and the surplus revenue, if any, resulting from such control should go into the Treasury of the United States. It was preposterous and ridiculous to me to find individuals advocating repeal because of the revenue which would accrue to the Government through the legalization of the liquor industry. This revenue is infinitesimal compared with the large expenditures, totaling into the billions, necessary in the suppression of crime traceable to drink, not to mention the distressing, heart-rending effects upon those who suffer indirectly because of crime and its kindred manifestations.

In the event it is decided that a profit should be made from the national control and sale of liquor, I would suggest that such profit be turned over to the respective States and Territories in proportion to the sale of liquor in such States and Territories, and that these funds be used solely for pensions to the aged and disabled.

While I readily appreciate the fact that the suggestions I offer here may not provide the panacea desired, I feel confident that the American people, if given the opportunity, could evolve a scheme of national control which would be iron-clad and workable.

In furtherance of my suggestions, I would reduce to the barest minimum the number of places where liquors of any kind could be purchased. I would make no restrictions whatever as to the amount any individual might purchase at any time, provided he had in his possession a permit issued by the local authorities under regulations established by the national commission, and I would not require registration of such sales.

National control will solve our liquor problem if anything can. The bootlegger will not compete if the Government is in control of the liquor industry any more than the counterfeiter competes successfully with the Government in the sale of stamps or the making of money. The politician also would be deprived of his percentage or commission.

I wish to reiterate, however, that the bootlegger will never be removed as long as we continue to tax the industry, with which he is competing, by inordinate taxes. The tax on beer and light wines should be merely a regulatory tax and reduced to a minimum. Wine is, in fact, a food and is usually consumed with meals. Seldom do we see a man drinking a glass of wine at a standing bar. The recognition of this fact would lead to the development of the wine industry and contribute to our economic recovery through the employment of thousands of Americans and at the same time would have a tendency to wean drinkers from the use of heavy intoxicants.

In conclusion, I repeat that I consider the liquor question one of our most important problems because of the large amount of public funds which might be saved to the taxpayers through the proper control of the manufacture, distribution, and sale of liquor, resulting in a reduction of crime and its costly consequences. I have the utmost confidence in the integrity and intelligence of the American people, and in the interest of the youth of America, I appeal to drys and wets to lay down their armor of combat and to extend the hand of fellowship and cooperation in order that this problem may be solved as expeditiously as possible in the furtherance of making the new deal a new deal for the restoration of the moral fiber of our citizens and the elimination of all the graft and evils which have centered in and which will always center in the private manufacture, distribution and sale of liquor. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 minutes more.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 1 minute.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

RELIEF GRANTED BY GOVERNMENT TO DEPOSITORS OF CLOSED BANKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein an address that was made by Mr. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency, at Tulsa, Okla., a few days ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of Hon. J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency, to the Oklahoma Bankers' Association, meeting in Tulsa, Okla, through special leased wire from Washington, D.C., May 9, 1934:

To the members of the Oklahoma Bankers Association, meeting in the Mayo Hotel in Tulsa this afternoon, I send greetings from the Nation's Capital.

Surely this is the age of magic, when the voice of a person in Washington is transmitted 1,500 miles to a meeting of bankers in Oklahoma. It is peculiarly fitting that these words should be devilered in such a mysterious manner to Tulsa—The Magic City.

Oklahoma, the forty-sixth State to enter the Union, is in many ways the most amazing of all in the United States. "Labor Conquers All Things" is your State's motto, and a better one could not have been chosen. For the people of Oklahoma are conquerors. They have conquered the earth, penetrated its most secret chambers, and there gushed forth millions upon millions of dollars of wealth in oil.

You bankers are interested in the banking situation in the United States, and it affords me a great deal of pleasure to be able to tell you that the general banking outlook in this country was never brighter.

It is only a little over a year ago since the banking holiday of March 1933—when every bank in the United States was closed by Presidential edict—but, already, most of the scars left by that wound have disappeared. The day after the banking holiday terminated—on March 16, 1933, to be exact—there were 1,417 national banks in this country which for one reason or another were not allowed to reopen, and these institutions had on deposit some $2,207,964,000. By May 1, 1934, a period of less than 14 months, 1,232 of these 1,417 national banks had either been reopened, liquidated, absorbed by another institution, or placed in receivership.

This left 185 unlicensed national banks on the 1st of May, but, of these, 156, or nearly 85 percent, had received approved reorganization plans from the Comptroller's Department, so that they can be reopened just as soon as the terms of such approvals are fulfilled. There were only 29 national banks with disapproved reorganization plans on May 1, 1934, and their aggregate frozen deposits amounted to $16,281,000.

This latter figure, you will note, represents less than three quarters of 1 percent of the $2,207,964,000 in frozen deposits tied up in all unlicensed national banks on March 16, 1933.

In the State of Oklahoma there were 16 national banks which failed to receive licenses to reopen at the conclusion of the March 1933 banking holiday. Since that time—up to May 1, 1934—9 of these institutions have been reopened in one form or another, 5 have been placed in receivership, and 2 are still unlicensed. However, of the 2 still unlicensed, 1 has an approved reorganization plan. The one Oklahoma national bank with a disapproved plan of reorganization has but $374,000 in frozen deposits.

Nothing has contributed more to the improved banking situation in the United States than the insurance of deposits, which went into effect on January 1, 1934. Under the provisions of the temporary-insurance plan now in effect, deposits in insured banks are protected in full up to $2,500 per depositor.

At the close of business April 30, last, 13,984 banks in every section of the country held membership in the insurance fund. In these institutions, 55,956,783 accounts are insured; insured deposits amount to $15,706,905,590 and total deposits aggregate $38,356,701,979. The ratio of insured to total deposits is 41.09 percent.

As a result of the protection afforded by deposit insurance and the improved public psychology resulting from such assurance to bank cutomers, deposits have been increasing so far in 1934 throughout every section of the United States, hoarding has decreased sharply and there has been a complete absence of runs on solvent institutions.

The insurance fund is now in its fifth month of operation, and as these words are spoken, no insured bank has yet closed its doors. It is true that a small insured State bank in Pennsylvania has been placed on a restricted basis by the banking authorities, and will probably prove to be a claim against the resources of the Insurance Corporation, but in this instance the troubles of the restricted institution were due to defalcations. The depositors in this bank are covered practically 100 percent by deposit insurance and other guarantees.

The practical absence of failures so far this year presents a striking contrast to the record of former periods. During the 10 years, 1923 to 1932, inclusive, 3,141 banks failed in the United States in the first 4 months of such years alone, involving $1,097,055,000 in deposits. The average number of bank failures in the months of January, February, March, and April only during these 10 years was 314, while the average amount of deposits involved was $109,705,500.

In the State of Oklahoma 395 banks are enjoying the protection of deposit insurance. In these institutions 705,532 accounts are insured. Insured deposits aggregate $108,810,567 and total deposits in such banks amount to $287,273,273. The ratio of insured to total deposits in these Oklahoma institutions is 37.9 percent.

Besides the tangible effects of deposit insurance, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, which administers the insurance fund, has put into effect rules, which, if their dollars-and-cents value cannot be determined, are equally helpful to the banking situation. These include regulations that banks which are members of the insurance fund cannot pay interest on demand deposits and can pay no more than 3 percent on time deposits. These rules prevent the careless banker from ruining himself and his institution by paying higher interest rates than his bank can afford.

A part of the public seems to have absorbed the idea that bank-deposit insurance will be terminated shortly. Nothing could be more incorrect. It is true that the temporary-insurance fund, now in operation, is scheduled to end on July 1, next, but this does not mean the end of this protection. A bill has been introduced in Congress—and it has been passed by the Senate—providing for the extension of the present insurance fund for 1 year to July 1, 1935. My confidence in the good judgment of the House of Representatives leads me to believe it will pass that body.

But bank-deposit insurance—in some form—will continue next year, and undoubtedly for all years to come.

However, it has been felt, and the directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation agree, that the present insurance—whereby deposits in insured banks are protected in full up to $2,500 per depositor—should be continued for another year. Those who favor the 1-year extension contend—and it seems to me that their contention is sound—that the $2,500 protection is adequate to take care of the average bank depositor, the little man. In addition, it gives the directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation another year in which to study the whole question of bank-deposit insurance, during which time they should be able to decide definitely just what changes, if any, should be made in the permanent-insurance fund to best serve the people's interest.

There has been much loose talk in various sections of the country that nothing has been done for depositors in closed banks, and that the cost of receiverships is so great that nothing is left for the poor depositors.

Both of these charges are untrue.

In reality, a remarkable record has been made in distributing dividends to depositors in closed banks, and no distinction has been made as between national and State institutions. Largely due to the efforts of the Deposit Liquidation Board, of which I am a member, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has advanced to unfortunate depositors in closed banks the staggering total of $785,000,000 to date. It has taken as security for such advances the assets of the closed banks. Of course, the amount actually distributed to depositors in closed institutions is much greater than the sum mentioned, since many banks have made collections and had cash on hand at the time they closed. Since March 16, 1933, there has been distributed in dividends to depositors in national banks $475,806,742, of which sum $123,994,380 was borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Here we account for over a billion dollars distributed through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency. Figures are not available to show the amount distributed by State institutions. The chairman of this special committee is Hon. C. B. Merriam, of Topeka, Kans., a director of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Mr. Merriam is one of the outstanding executives in Washington and has rendered a service in a quiet manner which has attracted the attention and won the approval of all of the leaders in the Capital City.

Considerable clamor has been heard urging that the Government repay in full the losses sustained by depositors in banks closed during recent years. There is little merit in the argument of those who propose this raid on the United States Treasury.

It is claimed by interests who would have depositors in closed national and Federal Reserve member banks repaid that such repayment fulfills the Government's implied guaranty of deposit safety in such institutions. But this is not true, since the United States Government has never declared or implied that it guaranteed deposits in these banks. Moreover, this would be a most hazardous responsibility for the Government to admit or accept. It would establish a precedent that might well be extended to any business activity over which the United States Government exercises any supervision, such as over the sale of alcoholic liquors, railroads, radio, and possibly to individual losses in the stock market, where the Government takes supervision thereof.

The most important thing to remember, in connection with this agitation for repaying losses sustained by bank depositors, is that, if these losses are to be made good by the Government, it will cost some $2,000,000,000, possibly more, if all banks are included. Now, assuming that such a program is to be carried out, the money must come from somewhere. And that somewhere will be from the pocket of the individual taxpayer. If the taxpayers are willing to be assessed for this purpose, it will be a surprise, particularly since the greatest portion of the money that would be repaid would go—not to the poor man—but largely to a few people who already have above the average in wealth. Should an appropriation be made by Congress for this purpose, 44 percent of whatever sum is appropriated will be paid to one half of 1 percent of the depositors. The argument is sometimes made that people put money into the banks because of certain appeals made by ex-President Hoover and other high officials in the Treasury. The fact is that depositors took money out of the banks after these appeals were made. Congressman PATMAN, of Texas, pointed this out in a speech before the House of Representatives on April 26, 1934, when he said:

"It is contended that depositors were persuaded to deposit their funds in national banks by reason of the antihoarding speeches made by President Hoover and Secretary of the Treasury Mills in February and March of 1932, which caused them to lose it. Let us consider the facts. The last report of deposits in national banks before these speeches were made was December 31, 1931. At that time the deposits were $19,244,347,000. The next report after the speeches were made was June 30, 1932. The deposits had dropped to $17,460,913,000. In other words, it seems that deposits decreased almost $2,000,000,000 instead of increasing.

"Within 12 months after these speeches were made, the deposits in all banks had been reduced more than $4,000,000,000."

The following figures should convince anyone that bank receiverships do not unduly penalize depositors: Between the date of the first failure of a national bank in 1865 to the close of business October 31, 1933, 1,155 national-bank receiverships were administered by receivers. Expenses incident to the administration of these 1,155 closed trusts—such as receivers' salaries, legal and other expenses—amounted to $32,030,848. This represented merely 3.90 percent of the book value of the assets and stock assessments administered, while it was 6.66 percent of collections from assets and stock assessments. Over 93 percent of every dollar collected has been returned to the depositor. Assessments against shareholders averaged 67.97 percent of their holdings, and the total collections from such assessments as were levied were 49.47 percent of the amount assessed.

Great as has been the improvement in the banking situation since March 1933, it is my firm conviction that even greater gains will be shown in the years to come. Bankers, as well as other people, have learned much from the depression years and are not likely to repeat the mistakes of 1928 and 1929.

This country is indeed fortunate to have chosen so wisely at the election of November 1932. President Roosevelt is exceeding the preelection hopes and expectations of even his most ardent admirers. He is working night and day that this Nation may find the way to better and more prosperous days—not for the few, but for the many. Emulating his example, we should all strive to do our small parts to bring this hope to reality.

My friends, I am glad to have had this opportunity to speak to you from the Nation's Capital.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I asked for this time to talk on the McLeod bill.

M'LEOD BILL

If this bill is enacted, and it includes only the banks closed on and after January 1, 1930, the Government will lose more than a billion dollars.

The following statement is self-explanatory:

Number of banks closed on or after Jan. 1, 1930	Reconstruction Finance Corporation advances	Recoveries	Loss to United States
1,581 national banks	$575,125,304	$257,100,216	$318,025,088
281 State member banks	402,679,945	150,998,619	251,681,326
5,554 State nonmember banks	829,494,693	315,989,361	513,505,332
Total, 7,416 banks	1,807,299,942	724,088,196	1,083,211,746

The foregoing figures, of course, do not include any estimate for interest costs pending final liquidation.

WHO WILL GET THE BILLION DOLLARS?

Most of this money will go to the wealthy—people who are not in distress and are not entitled to public charity. One tenth of 1 percent of the depositors will get almost 50 percent of the deposits. One depositor will get $32,000,000. If we owed these people anything, I would advocate its payment; but the Government does not owe them a penny. It is not right to say we owe the $2,500 depositor but do not owe the $32,000,000 depositor; if we owe one, we owe the other. If there are 1,001 depositors of a closed bank, one having on deposit $2,500,000 and the other 1,000 having on deposit $2,500 each, or $2,500,000 in all, it will be neither right nor legal to pledge the assets of the institution to pay the 1,000 depositors and not pay the large depositor his proportionate amount. For the benefit of all depositors, large and small, I am glad that the Government is doing so much to aid them and to again make their banks going institutions.

WHY ARE STATE AND PRIVATE BANKS INCLUDED?

The Government had nothing to do with the supervision and operation of State and private banks. The policies of the Government in regard to monetary affairs did not affect them any more than they affected the railroads, insurance companies, building-and-loan companies, manufacturing industries, laborers, farmers, wage earners, and others. If Congress expects to pay depositors of national banks, State banks, or private banks on the theory that there was indirect supervision, control, or influence by the Government which caused the losses, it will set a precedent that will call for the payment by the Government of losses to holders of stocks or bonds of the concerns now receiving aid from the Government's Reconstruction Finance Corporation; the R.F.C. exercises some supervision over these institutions and much more control or supervision than the Comptroller of the Currency held over the national banks of the country.

OTHER INSTITUTIONS WILL BE INCLUDED LATER

Let us consider the different branches of commerce, industry, and agriculture that are being helped by the R.F.C., in order that we may have an idea of whom and for how much there will be an attempt to invoke this principle in the future, if it is enacted by the passage of the McLeod bill:

Loans to banks and trust companies, $1,896,925,340.

Loans to railroads, $402,287,361.

Loans to mortgage loan companies, $221,272,169.

Loans to Federal land banks, $193,618,000.

Loans to regional agricultural credit corporations, $166,442,905.

Loans to building and loan associations, $114,017,920.

Loans to insurance companies, $88,587,563.

Miscellaneous, $48,674,351.

Purchase of preferred stock in banks and trust companies, $257,600,616.

Purchase of other bank securities, $192,947,150.

Under this McLeod fallacious theory and foolish doctrine, the Government's liability will not be limited to the amount of credit or money extended to these institutions. Every bank that was loaned $25,000 and later fails the depositors of that bank to the amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars will be able to come under the wire and ask to be paid by the Government; they will proclaim long and loud that the Government exercised a degree of supervision over their institutions, and it failed; therefore they should be paid just like the depositors in the national, State, and private banks were paid.

CLAIMED CURRENCY WILL BE EXPANDED—WILD SCHEMES

Because I am in favor of expansion of the currency it has been suggested to me that I should not oppose this bill or any other bill that will cause credit or money to be expanded. I expect to oppose every measure that is not sound, or that will set an indefensible precedent for the Government to follow in the future. The people cannot be helped in that way; if there should be a small amount of expansion by using such methods and adopting such principles, the rebound and future abuses will destroy several times the benefits so received.

Those of us who are in favor of controlled expansion of the currency will not help our cause by running off after every wild scheme that is proposed. I can defend every expansion of the currency plan I have proposed. Further, the credit expansion in the McLeod bill will amount to practically nothing when it is considered that interest-bearing tax-exempt bonds will be sold by the Government, or its agency, to furnish the credit. This will enable the large depositors of these institutions to convert their lost investments into bonds that will be free from taxation and upon which the Government guarantees both principal and interest.

IF PRINCIPLE GOOD, LOSSES BACK TO 1920 SHOULD BE PAID

Our monetary troubles started in 1920, when the other body controlled by Republicans passed a resolution which caused the Federal Reserve Board to order deflation of credit. In 4 months wheat fell in price from over $3 a bushel to $1.40 a bushel; cotton fell in price from 40 cents a pound to 7 cents a pound; purchasing power was destroyed, values were destroyed, and much misery was caused to the people. The farmers lost more than $20,000,000,000 in a very short time, causing many of them to lose their homes, which they have never recovered. If people are to be paid by the Government on account of a wrong monetary policy being pursued, the farmers have a good claim for at least $20,000,000,000, and by the time we analyze all the principles and precedents that will be set by the McLeod bill the claims will probably aggregate closer to a hundred billion dollars.

Many of us are anxious to know why the date January 1, 1930, was put in the bill. Can any good reason be given why it should not be January 1, 1929, or 1928 or 1925 or 1920? Possibly the McLeod bill is intended as the camel's nose.

FIFTH VICTORY LOAN

The patriotic people of this Nation were persuaded to borrow money and make payments on Fifth Victory Loan bonds. This was in 1919. I know hundreds of them that made payments of $10 to $25 on hundred-dollar bonds. They were being patriotic, they were responding to the call of our country; they wanted to do their part. What happened after these bonds were distributed all over the Nation into the hands of poor people who could not pay the remainder of their installments to the banks? Deflation of credit and money caused the bonds to go down in value, their loans at the banks were called, and these poor people were forced to lose as much as $20 on each hundred-dollar bond. That was enormous, considering the fact that in many instances the purchaser had pledged or mortgaged his property to make the initial installment on the bond and required to pay twice as much interest to the bank as he was receiving on the bond. It is like pouring salt in the wound to know that large banking institutions with the free use of the Government's credit purchased these bonds and made tens of millions of dollars in profits. In other words, the ones encouraging the deflation made the profits in these transactions.

If our Government expects to pay losses on account of a destructive or wrong monetary policy, I think the people who were squeezed out in this bond swindle should have first consideration.

STOCK ARGUMENT

The argument is made that the Government will not lose anything by purchasing the assets of closed banks 100 cents on the dollar, the claim being made that values will be restored and there will be no loss. No effort is being made by those in authority to restore 1929 values. The assets acquired on 1929 prices are the ones giving the most trouble. We are not having trouble with the 1926 loans. It is the 1926 price level we are trying to get back to. It is very inconsistent to advocate the purchase by the Government of assets according to 1929 prices and not advocate restoring the price level that prevailed in 1929. If the Government purchases the assets of closed banks by paying 1929 prices and then holds these assets until the goal—1926 prices—is reached, the Government will necessarily lose the difference between the 1926 prices and the 1929 prices.

ALL ASSETS CANNOT BE HELD

Many assets in the closed banks cannot be kept for a period of years, such as grain, cotton, and other perishables, besides livestock and machinery. There are apartment houses and office buildings badly in need of repairs; new apartment houses and buildings will be erected in a short time, and the tenants will leave the buildings we have in receivership. Therefore, we cannot hold these properties for any long period of time.

ASSETS OF BANKRUPTS

Included in the so-called "assets" of closed banks are the obligations of persons, firms, and corporations that have gone into bankruptcy. They are of no value, yet it is contended that the Government will not lose money. Certainly the Government will lose money if it purchases all the bad assets of closed banks 100 cents on the dollar. The loss will have to be paid; it will be paid by the taxpayers.

REPUBLICAN PARTY SUPPORTING THIS INDEFENSIBLE BILL

If the bill contained a good principle that we could build to, I would not object to bringing it before the House for consideration, in the hope that it might be amended; neither would I mention politics in connection with it, but since it fails to contain a single good principle and contains a very bad precedent, I think we can well consider who is backing such a measure. We can get a fair idea by examining the list of sponsors.

The House of Representatives is composed of 312 Democrats, 115 Republicans, and 5 Farmer-Labor.

April 23, 1934, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] made a motion which would have cleared the way for immediate consideration of the McLeod bill. A motion was made to table. Members opposed to the McLeod bill voted "aye"; Members favoring the McLeod bill voted "no." There were 212 Democrats and 15 Republicans voting "aye." There were 38 Democrats, 80 Republicans, and 4 Farmer-Labor voting "no." That vote indicates the Republicans are supporting this measure. You will notice that such Republican leaders as the Honorable Ogden Mills, the Honorable Herbert Hoover, and the Honorable BERTRAM SNELL are just as silent as the tomb. Do they want all the credit they can get out of it and not take any of the responsibility? Their failure to announce the stand of the Republican Party or themselves as Republicans strongly indicates that they are favorable to its passage. The principal reason the Republicans are supporting this measure is they want to use it as a means of embarrassing the Democrats in the districts where a large number of the beneficiaries of such a law reside. They are using it as a trap to catch votes; probably "deadfall" would be a better name.

SIGNERS OF PETITION

In the Washington Times of yesterday, May 14, there was published a list of the Members of the House who have signed the petition to force consideration of the McLeod bill. Presuming it is correct, we find another strong indication of Republican support. The article indicates there are 115 signers to the petition. The analysis of the list discloses the following:

Sixteen and one-fourth percent of the Democratic Members of the House have signed the petition.

Fifty-two and one-fourth percent of the Republican Members of the House have signed the petition.

One hundred percent of the Farmer-Labor Members of the House have signed the petition.

These figures indicate very little Democratic support. Of course, that is explained by the fact that very few Democrats can be persuaded to permit their names to be used in support of such a measure, and, further, the President of the United States is opposed to the passage of the bill.

REFERENCES TO OTHER SPEECHES ON THE SAME SUBJECT

April 20, 1934, commencing at page 7090 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, will be found my discussion of the McLeod bill. It covers the following subjects:

Cost of the McLeod bill.

Can Government pay all losses?

Bad precedent.

Unlimited appropriation to unknown parties for unknown reasons.

Insurance claims.

Will take $200,000,000,000 to pay all losses.

I again discussed the McLeod bill April 26, 1934. My discussion commences at page 7482 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. In that speech the following points were discussed:

McLeod bill supporters like Columbus.

What the bill proposes.

Will there be a loss, and who will pay it?

Who will get the money (table is inserted showing the distribution of the money)?

The rich man's bonus (a table is inserted showing loans made by Reconstruction Finance Corporation to banks in each State).

Hoover and Mills speeches—deposits decreased.

What is now being done to aid banks and depositors.

May 2, 1934, I inserted an extension of remarks on the Old and New McLeod Bills, pages 7963–1964. I discussed the following points in this extension:

Purpose of bill according to its title.

The new bill.

Motion to discharge the Rules Committee.

Bill without a good principle.

Compliment to Mr. Hoover (table showing all bank suspensions since 1920 by years, showing deposits, and including State, private, and national banks).

During the last month I have been getting up a statement with regard to veterans' benefits, and this statement includes the status of all veterans before the Economy Act was passed. It states the cases that were most frequently objected to and criticized, and the rules and regulations passed by the President under the Economy Act telling exactly what was done with respect to each class and group of veterans and the effect of such action, also the regulations that were passed putting veterans back on the pension rolls, and the different laws that were enacted restoring benefits. Then the independent offices appropriation bill is taken up and tells what was done in each House and the effect of the amendments that were proposed and adopted.

Then it tells the difference between the President and Congress in regard to the veterans' legislation, the present status of the World War veterans and their dependents and the benefits which each class is entitled to under the present law, rules, and regulations.

Then it takes up the Spanish War veterans and the Philippine insurrection and gives the same information, also of the Boxer rebellion. It will answer practically any question veterans will ask.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, on the 3d day of this month I filed a petition to discharge the Rules Committee from the further consideration of H.R. 295, which provides for an open rule for the consideration of the Connery 30-hour week bill. I filed this petition after a great deal of deliberation, for I was very reluctant to do anything that might embarrass the administration in its effort to bring about recovery. I came to the conclusion that this legislative body and its every Member has a constitutional duty to perform and that if we are to be a body that sincerely tries to represent the 435 congressional districts of these United States we must take on a share of the burden of enacting legislation which in our honest opinions is necessary to bring about recovery and a fairer distribution to each and every citizen whom we represent. By the filing of this petition I felt that every Member here would be given an opportunity to express his opinion on this vital question, so that our President might know how we feel in our representative capacities.

H.R. 8492, the Connery 30-hour week bill, in brief, provides for a 5-day week and a 6-hour day for industries that are operating under the National Recovery Act. It sets up a board which has the power to grant exemptions from the 30-hour-week provision where such exemptions are really necessary for the proper conduct of business, and, more important still, it further provides that the same wages must be paid for the 30 hours as for the hours previously worked under the code where the hours were more than 30. One of the reasons that I am so vitally interested in this fundamental measure is that I have a definite campaign commitment to work and fight for a 30-hour week without wage reductions.

Under the present N.R.A. codes labor is compelled to work 40 or more hours per week, and in view of the fact that there are at present more than 11,000,000 unemployed, it seems to me that we are proceeding toward recovery in reverse. It is my sincere belief that we will never get out of this horrible depression until these honest and sincere Americans are given a real opportunity to obtain gainful employment at wages that will allow them not only to buy the necessities of life but also the comforts as well as a few luxuries. This is the age-old battle of human rights against property rights. We are called upon today to indicate in our representative capacities whether we deem the human rights of millions of Americans more important than the rights of capital to interest, dividends, and profits. Yes; we are called upon now to express ourselves on the grave question of further allowing millions to starve amidst plenty.

In a spirit of constructive criticism, I believe that our present recovery program is entirely wrong in that it is based upon the philosophy of economic planning of production instead of consumption. More and more of us are coming to the belief that if we economically plan consumption production will take care of itself; that if we create an opportunity for gainful employment for all who honestly seek to be employed that no longer will there be any further necessity of plowing under cotton, burning wheat, and destroying hogs; and unless we immediately enact legislation such as the measure on which I now speak we will never create a real consumers' purchasing power, which is the dire need of this country today. This bill strikes at the fundamental cause of the depression, for every economist who is worthy of the name holds that the cause of this depression is that labor has not received a just portion of what it has produced.

Some have expressed a fear that a compulsory 30-hour week would destroy small industries. I want to say here and now that the same fear has been expressed in times past when labor has been fighting its bitter battle for increased wages and reduced working hours. The same cry was raised in behalf of small industries when the effort was being made to reduce the working hours from 14 to 12, from 12 to 10, and from 10 to 8. When the battle was being carried on for an 8-hour day in the State of Washington one of our largest newspapers in the city of Seattle editorially predicted that a compulsory 8-hour day would drive all industry out and that our State of Washington would be as barren as a desert within a month's time, but when we look back today we find no foundation for such a rash prediction. The same arguments may be advanced in the future when the need of a 4-hour day will become very evident, due to the terrific pace of labor-saving devices and the increased efficiency of labor. Regardless of these arguments, I say that the right to earn an honest living at gainful employment, the right to live and enjoy life, are more important than the right to make profits, collect interest, or obtain dividends. There is not a reasonable-minded person today who will honestly maintain that there is not enough for everyone, if a fair distribution of the things created by labor is brought about.

In view of the arguments that have been advanced against reduced hours and increased wages, as well as better prices to the producers of farm products, we find that at present, according to the figures of Dr. Wilbur I. King on the Distribution of Wealth, if today we only had $100 and 100 persons, 1 of those persons would have $59, 1 person would have $9, 22 persons would have $1.22 apiece, and the remaining 76 persons would have less than 7 cents each. Do not these figures forcefully argue that compulsory measures must be taken to give labor, in its larger sense, a greater share of what it produces?

A few days ago in the city of Seattle we had a pitiful example of a little 4-year-old girl, the daughter of an unemployed shoemaker, eating weeds because of hunger. Among the weeds that she ate happened to be some poison hemlock, which caused her death a few hours afterward.

I ask is it more important to protect the rights of little children who are not responsible for being born into this world than the rights of rapacious greed that thinks only in terms of interest, dividends, and profits? I for one cannot see how any person with a human heart and understanding can even hesitate as to what course he shall choose under these circumstances.

Today in the city of Seattle 750 unemployed are being added to the relief rolls daily. Although I believe in adequate relief and relief measures for the time being, nevertheless, I recognize that that is not a remedy for unemployment. Only measures such as the one of which I speak contain a solution for the grave injustices which constantly surround us.

Many persons here feel that the 30-hour week bill might be held unconstitutional by our Supreme Court because of the previcus decisions of that tribunal with reference to child-labor legislation in its relationship to Interstate Commerce, nevertheless, the prevailing view is that this measure would be held constitutional, due to the grave emergency that now confronts our modern civilization.

Congressman CROSSER has introduced a constitutional amendment, House Joint Resolution 145, which is before the Judiciary Committee today, which I feel is the more sensible manner of approaching this problem of unemployment. The text of this amendment is as follows:

ARTICLE XX

To promote the general welfare Congress shall have the power to reduce the number of hours of service per day and days per week for which contracts of employment may be lawfully made.

In Congressman CROSSER'S speech upon this amendment on July 8, 1932, he states:

This amendment could provide for a body like the Interstate Commerce Commission, which would remain constantly in session. Applications for the reduction in hours of labor in any industry could be filed with the Commission whenever the facts might seem to warrant such action. The Commission then could conduct hearings and receive testimony to determine whether or not any increase in the efficiency of labor may have resulted because of the use of improved machinery or otherwise; if it should find that such increase in efficiency had occurred, then it would be the duty of the Commission to reduce the hours of labor for that industry in proportion to the increase in efficiency of labor.

Although such a constitutional amendment would be far more preferable than the present bill about which I am speaking, nevertheless, in absence of this constitutional amendment, I think every Member who has the interests of the producer at heart will work for the enactment of the 30-hour week for the time being.

I am wholly satisfied that our President is absolutely sincere in his effort to bring about recovery under the N.R.A. program. Personally, I am thoroughly satisfied that it is a failure, particularly for the reason that big business and their representatives draw up the codes, and we all know that they draw them up to serve their own selfish interests and not the interests of labor or the small business man.

To me the N.R.A. codes resemble the proverbial sausage that was made of half horse and half rabbit, and when the maker of the sausage was asked how he figured this out he informed his questioner that it was made of 1 horse and 1 rabbit. Labor is the rabbit of the present codes, and a very skinny little rabbit at that.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. Does the gentleman think that the N.R.A. is a failure on account of the law itself or because of its administration?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Partly because of its administration, but fundamentally because of the law itself. It is next to impossible to administer such a law, for I think past experience shows that any time the Government attempts to regulate industry that it is but a short time before the regulated are regulating the regulators. The attitude of industry a year ago and its attitude today is as different as night and day. At that time they were crying for governmental interference in business, and today, as soon as their profits increase, they cry that Government should not interfere with business. As an example of the attitude of some employers, under the present N.R.A. codes, I want to insert a bulletin of a Chicago employer, whose name I can furnish upon request, which reads as follows:

CHICAGO, August 3, 1933.

To Factory Employees:

Beginning with the week of August 7 this entire plant will be operated under the Federal National Recovery Act. By this law we are governed as to minimum wages and weekly hours of labor. Except in emergency we cannot give any factory employee, except foremen, more than 35 hours labor per week. For the regular shift these hours will be from 8 o'clock morning to 12 noon, and from 12:45 to 3:45 afternoons, for 5 days, Monday to Friday, inclusive.

With these regulations and with the increase in old taxes and the addition of several new taxes it will be difficult to operate any industrial plant without loss. Therefore we must get maximum production from every man and woman who holds a job here. Every employee must be in his place and ready to start before the whistle blows at 8 o'clock. There will be no time allowed in any department for washing or dressing at the close of the day. Full speed must be carried on for every minute of the 7 hours. There will be no unnecessary loss of time allowed for drinking, lunching, toilet going, or personal conversations during operating time. In short, we expect to receive 7 full hours of best effort from every person who desires to remain in our organization. Any worker who will not thoroughly cooperate must be dropped from our roll.

When the special code for our industry is issued there may be some change made in working hours.

I do not want myself to be interpreted as maintaining the position that a 30-hour week will remedy the present situation. I am thoroughly convinced that companion measures must be enacted. For the time being the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should be authorized to make loans direct to small industries at a low rate of interest.

The next necessary step, in my estimation, must be an act that will nationalize commercial and deposit banking, leaving the investment field alone to private bankers; and along with this we will have to increase the gift, income, and inheritance taxes in the higher brackets so that the creators of unemployment will have to support the unemployment they create through governmental agencies, or, in the alternative, by way of pay envelopes in order to avoid the payment of these taxes to the Government.

Some of the Members feel that the 30-hour week bill is drastic legislation, but I say it is but mild compared to the legislation that must be enacted in the near future if we are intelligently to avoid utter chaos. It seems perfectly apparent to me that when a patient is very sick strong medicine must be administered if the patient is to recover. I am certain that if the different Members of Congress were able to visualize the actual conditions existing in their congressional districts at the present time they would have no hesitation in signing this petition. Many undoubtedly think that we are out of the depression today, because of the conditions that they see existing in Washington, D.C.; but I want to state here and now that in the city of Washington, D.C., the people do not know what a depression really is; but I predict that they will, unless we pass legislation in the very near future which is fundamental and basic and for the benefit of the great majority of the people, who are not only the producers, actual and potential, but also the consumers.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein one editorial and some excerpts from the newspapers at the same time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the editorial and the newspaper excerpts. I have no objection to his own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the editorial and the newspaper excerpts. The gentleman can extend his own remarks.

RELIEF EXPENDITURES (H. DOC. NO. 372)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

In my Budget message to the Congress of January 3, 1934, I said to you:

> It is evident to me, as I am sure it is evident to you, that powerful forces for recovery exist. It is by laying a foundation of confidence in the present and faith in the future that the upturn which we have so far seen will become cumulative. The cornerstone of this foundation is the good credit of the Government.
> It is, therefore, not strange nor is it academic that this credit has a profound effect upon the confidence so necessary to permit the new recovery to develop into maturity.
> If we maintain the course I have outlined, we can confidently look forward to cumulative beneficial forces represented by increased volume of business, more general profit, greater employment, a diminution of relief expenditures, larger governmental receipts and repayments, and greater human happiness.

The Budget which I submitted to the Congress proposed expenditures for the balance of this fiscal year and for the coming fiscal year which, in the light of expected revenues, called for a definite deficiency on June 30, 1935, but, at the same time, held out the hope that annual deficits would terminate during the following fiscal year.

It is true that actual expenditures since January have proceeded at a slower rate than estimated; nevertheless, it must be borne in mind that, even though the actual deficit for the year ending June 30, 1934, will be below my estimate, appropriations are still in force and the amounts actually to be expended during the following fiscal year will therefore be increased over and above my estimate for that fiscal year. In this connection it is relevant to point out that during the fiscal year 1935 it is estimated that there will be actually expended on public works $1,500,000,000 out of appropriations heretofore made.

In my Budget message of January 3, 1934, it was pointed out that there could be no abrupt termination of emergency expenditures for recovery purposes, that the necessity for relief would continue, and that appropriations amounting to $3,166,000,000 in addition to the appropriations contained in the Budget itself would be requested for the 2 fiscal years ending June 30, 1935.

The present Congress has already made appropriations out of which, for the 2 fiscal years in question, it is estimated there will be expended the following sums:

Relief	$950,000,000
Crop loans	40,000,000
Farm mortgages	40,000,000
Reconstruction Finance Corporation	500,000,000
Veterans' benefits	22,000,000
Army Air Corps	5,000,000
Flood control, Mississippi River, etc	29,000,000
Independent offices act	228,000,000
Miscellaneous supplemental estimates	30,000,000
	1,844,000,000

This leaves a balance of $1,322,000,000 to be appropriated.

Out of this balance it is necessary first to take the specific items to be appropriated for:

Federal land banks:
Subscription to paid-in surplus	$75,000,000
Reduction in interest payments	7,950,000
Emergency bank act and gold transfer	3,000,000
Internal Revenue Service	$10,000,000
Salaries, Office of the Secretary of the Treasury	100,000
Secret Service	45,000
	96,095,000

This leaves $1,225,905,000 available for the following purposes: Civilian Conservation Corps camps, public works, and relief work, in addition to amounts already appropriated, and including aid to the dairy- and beef-cattle industries.

It is estimated that the minimum requirements for the Civilian Conservation Corps will be $285,000,000 and that the amount available, therefore, for Public Works and relief will be $940,905,000. A very simple check-up of these figures shows that they total $3,166,000,000, to which reference was made in my Budget message of January 3, 1934.

It was my thought in January, and is my thought now that this sum should be appropriated to me under fairly broad powers because of the fact that no one could then, or can now determine the exact needs under hard-and-fixed appropriation headings. In furtherance of this thought it seems appropriate to provide that any savings which can be effected out of certain appropriations made for emergency purposes shall be available for emergency-relief purposes.

In my judgment an appropriation in excess of the above amount would make more difficult if not impossible an actual balance of the Budget in the fiscal year 1936 unless greatly increased taxes are provided. The present estimates should be sufficient as a whole to take care of the emergencies of relief and of orderly reemployment at least until the early part of the calendar year 1935. If at that time conditions have not improved as much as we today hope, the next Congress will be in session and will have full opportunity to act.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 15, 1934.

LA FAYETTE MEMORIAL EXERCISES

The Clerk read as follows:

Pursuant to the provisions of House Concurrent Resolution 37, the Chair appoints as members of the joint committee to make suitable arrangements for fitting and proper exercises for the joint session of Congress in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the death of Gilbert du Motier, Marquis de La Fayette, the following Members of the House: Hon. MARY T. NORTON, Hon. SOL BLOOM, Hon. SCHUYLER O. BLAND, Hon. DANIEL A. REED, and Hon. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS.

LOAN OF WAR DEPARTMENT EQUIPMENT TO CONFEDERATE VETERANS

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill (H.R. 9092) to authorize the Secretary of War to lend to the housing committee of the United Confederate Veterans 250 pyramidal tents, complete; fifteen 16- by 80- by 40-foot assembly tents; thirty 11- by 50- by 15-foot hospital-ward tents; 10,000 blankets, olive drab, no. 4; 5,000 pillowcases; 5,000 canvas cots; 5,000 cotton pillows; 5,000 bed sacks; 10,000 bed sheets; 20 field ranges, no. 1; 10 field bake ovens; and 50 water bags (for ice water), to be used at the encampment of the United Confederate Veterans, to be held at Chattanooga, Tenn., in June 1934, and pass it as amended. It is a bill to authorize the Secretary of War to lend equipment to the United Confederate Veterans for use at the encampment at Chattanooga June 5, 6, and 7. The Government is fully protected by a bond and the usual requirements that follow the lending of tents to these national organizations.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand it, this is the usual bill that is passed for occasions of this character.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes. Certain matters are cut out by amendment, because that equipment is being used by the C.C.C. camps.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H.R. 9092, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to lend, at his discretion, to the housing committee of the United Confederate Veterans, whose encampment is to be held at Chattanooga, Tenn., June 6, 7, and 8, 1934, 250 pyramidal tents, complete with all poles, pegs, and other equipment necessary for their erection; fifteen 16- by 80- by 40-foot assembly tents, complete with all their poles, pegs, and equipment necessary for their erection; thirty 11- by 50- by 15-foot hospital-ward tents, complete with all their poles, pegs, and equipment necessary for their erection; 20 field ranges, no. 1, with necessary equipment for their erection; 10 field bake ovens with necessary equipment for their erection; 50 water bags (for ice water); 10,000 blankets, olive drab, no. 4; 5,000 pillowcases; 5,000 canvas cots; 5,000 cotton pillows; 5,000 bed sacks; 10,000 bed sheets; 10 officers' tents, complete with all their poles, pegs, and equipment necessary for their erection; 900 mess kits, complete; 6 litters; 6 fire extinguishers; 20 tent flys with poles for wall tents; and 30 garbage cans: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of said property, the same to be delivered from the nearest quartermaster depot at such time prior to the holding of said encampment as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the chairman of the said housing committee, Mr. Maurice C. Poss: Provided further, That the Secretary of War, before delivery of such property, shall take from said Maurice C. Poss, chairman of the housing committee of the annual Confederate reunion, a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition and the whole without expense to the United States.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 12, strike out "50 water bags (for ice water;)".
Page 2, line 14, strike out "5,000 pillow cases; ".
Page 2, line 15, strike out "5,000 cotton pillows; 5,000 bed sacks; 10,000 bed sheets; ".
Page 2, line 18, strike out "6 fire extinguishers; ".

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "A bill to authorize the Secretary of War to lend to the housing committee of the United Confederate Veterans 250 pyramidal tents, complete; fifteen 16- by 80- by 40-foot assembly tents; thirty 11- by 50- by 15-foot hospital-ward tents; 10,000 blankets, olive drab, no. 4; 5,000 canvas cots; 20 field ranges, no. 1; 10 field bake ovens, to be used at the encampment of the United Confederate Veterans, to be held at Chattanooga, Tenn., in June 1934."

PROMOTION BY SELECTION IN THE LINE OF THE NAVY IN GRADES OF LIEUTENANT COMMANDER AND LIEUTENANT

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up the resolution (H.Res. 347) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H.R. 9068, a bill to provide for promotion by selection in the line of the Navy in the grades of lieutenant commander and lieutenant; to authorize appointment as ensigns in the line of the Navy all midshipmen who hereafter graduate from the Naval Academy; and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 10, strike out the words "2 hours" and insert "1 hour."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the usual 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] to use as he sees fit.

I wish to make a very brief preliminary statement with reference to this rule. It is an open rule and provides for the consideration of the bill stated in the resolution, to provide for promotion by selection in the line of the Navy in the grades of lieutenant commander and lieutenant; to authorize appointment as ensigns in the line of the Navy all midshipmen who hereafter graduate from the Naval Academy; and for other purposes.

It was represented to the Committee on Rules that this bill had the unanimous support of the Committee on Naval Affairs and had the recommendation of the Navy Department and was in line with the Budget estimates, as far as any appropriations were concerned.

I think that is all I care to say at this time. The purposes of the bill will be explained in the discussion of the rule by members of the Naval Affairs Committee.

I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order, as I may be out of order.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, the matter I desire to discuss is of interest to every Member of this House. The Navy Department is one of the great arms of the Government. I believe the maintenance of our great Navy commands more interest and more sentiment than any other branch of our Government. I believe, for instance, that we are more interested in our Navy than we are in our Military Establishment. We provide immense funds for our Navy's support, and annually, and more often sometimes, we appropriate hundreds of millions of dollars to supplement its present equipment.

On May 31 there will be a review of our entire fleet. The fleet will enter New York Harbor. I understand the President is going there to review our fleet. He is going on some naval ship out to Ambrose Light where the fleet will pass through the Narrows into the Harbor of New York.

For some time I have been interested in finding out what part the Members of Congress will take in that great review. I learned yesterday that the Navy Department thought its only friends in Congress were the Committee on Naval Affairs and the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations on the Navy. I agree that our great Naval Affairs Committee, headed by the brilliant and distinguished chairman [Mr. VINSON of Georgia], is one of the great committees of the House, and I also will concede that the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations for naval affairs is one of the hardest working of one of the greatest committees of the House; but I do not feel that the Navy Department obtains all the results which it gets solely from those two committees. If the Navy depended solely on those two committees it might not be so successful in securing the great appropriations which it obtains from Congress. If the Navy depended on those two committees alone, these two bills which we shall discuss today would not be before us, because the Rules Committee had to report them out, otherwise they would have been buried in the calendar.

Nor do I stop there, because, although I have no personal interest in the matter, I do believe that every Member of this House is vitally interested in our Navy, so the Navy Department should not confine its catering solely to the Naval Affairs Committee and the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations on naval affairs. I believe that a review of our great fleet is important enough that the entire membership of Congress should be invited to see it. I do not suggest a junket. The Members will pay their own railroad fares to New York and back. Probably not more than 100 Members would make the trip. A naval boat could be provided, perhaps either the Wyoming or the Louisville, to take the Members of Congress who desire to go out down the New York Harbor to review the fleet. The Navy Department should not confine its catering solely to the two committees with which it comes in closest and most direct contact. We are all interested in our Navy.

Now, I am not talking about myself. I may not go out to Ambrose Light to see the fleet, because once, when I went out there, I became seasick; but I believe the Navy Department and the other departments of our Government should realize that every one of the 435 Members of this House and the 96 Members of the other House are of some consequence when it comes to naval affairs or the other affairs of our Nation.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. I purposely refrained from interrupting the gentleman because I wanted him to get out of his system the remarks that have just been presented to the House.

Mr. O'CONNOR. They are nearly all out.

Mr. BRITTEN. I will say that after talking with the distinguished gentleman from New York on yesterday, my colleague [Mr. DELANEY] and I called upon the Secretary of the Navy this morning, and I can assure the gentleman that every Member of Congress will be invited to participate in the review of the fleet and that proper facilities will be arranged for proper observation of the fleet on that day and on the subsequent days.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Having accomplished my purposes, I now retire. [Applause.]

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman has accomplished his purpose.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the rule as presented provides, as he has just stated to you, 1 hour general debate. Then the bill is to be considered under the 5-minute rule and open to amendments.

I deem it important to call to the attention of the House the purpose of this measure, which is twofold: First, it is to extend selection downward to the grades of lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade); and, second, to authorize the President to give commissions to all the graduates of the Naval Academy.

Under the law as it exists today promotion by selection is only extended to the grade of lieutenant commander, and this proposed measure contemplates carrying it to the grades of lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade).

By the act of May 6, 1932, only 50 percent of the class that graduates at the Naval Academy is entitled to receive commissions. In other words, those whose ratings at the academy are high enough to be grouped and classified in the first half of the class receive the commissions. Now, this bill is to repeal that part of the law.

This measure as presented to the Naval Affairs Committee had the approval of the Navy Department and was in accordance with the financial program of the President. However, when the bill was under consideration by the committee, an amendment was agreed to as set out in section 4. Now, as section 4 is presented to you it is not in accordance with the financial program of the President, but I propose, by authority of the Naval Affairs Committee, to ask the Committee of the Whole House to disagree to the committee amendment, thereby eliminating the committee amendment, which, in turn, will present the measure in the exact form that was sent to the Naval Affairs Committee by the Navy Department, which has the approval of the Director of the Budget and is in accordance with the President's financial program.

All that this bill does is, first, to extend selection downward, so that promotions to lieutenant commander and lieutenant will be by selection of instead of seniority; second, to make the number to be selected for the ranks of lieutenant will be by selection instead of seniority; second, Secretary of the Navy; third, to retire lieutenants or lieutenants (junior grade) who have completed 14 years and 7 years' commissioned service, respectively, and who have not been recommended for promotion to the next higher grade by a line-selection board—this provision is held in abeyance for 2 years after the passage of this act in order to give the officers affected an ample opportunity for selection—fourth, to authorize the President to commission as ensign all midshipmen who graduate from the Naval Academy, and provision is also included to commission as ensign those members of the class of 1933 who received a certificate of graduation in lieu of commission, provided that they are found physically qualified and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe. The limit in date for the class of 1933 is June 1, 1934.

If this bill is enacted, it will show a saving in pay of the Navy over existing laws. This saving for a period of 8 years, from the fiscal year 1935 to 1942, will be $1,643,356.

I shall now explain briefly what each section of this bill provides:

Section 1 extends existing selection down two grades, requiring selection to the grades of lieutenant commander and lieutenant. Existing law permits a number equal to 10 percent of the authorized number in the next higher grade to be selected annually; this bill leaves it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy as to the number to be selected; otherwise there would be wholesale retirement the first 2 or 3 years.

Section 2 defines the eligibility of lieutenants (junior grade). Existing law requires 4 years' service in grade before eligible for selection. Due to total service of 7 years provided for junior lieutenants, 4 years would not give them an opportunity for selection prior to automatic retirement.

Section 3 provides for the composition of the selection board. Present law requires admirals. This permits eight captains to serve on the board.

Section 4 provides for the disposition of officers not selected in accordance with this bill. This is in line with existing law to retire officers after so many years of commissioned service in the various grades. Two years are provided to make necessary adjustments.

Section 5 provides for commissioning all graduates of the Naval Academy. Present law provides for 50 percent to be commissioned.

Section 6 simply takes care of the promotion for staff officers in the lower grades in view of the proposed change in the promotion of line officers of those grades.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. McCLINTIC. If this legislation is enacted into law, what effect will it have upon the proposed new arrangement with respect to all promotions in the Navy?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This is the first step in that direction. We are creating a uniform method. Through this bill we propose to have promotions made by selection all the way down the line, instead of promotions being made part by selection and part by seniority.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Then the gentleman has in mind to carry on this program until he has perfected the entire proposal with respect to promotions?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. And to go even further, I hope, in the next session to bring in legislation to reorganize the whole Naval Establishment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. How many more naval officers have we on shore than we have on the sea?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. We have everyone on land that is necessary to be on land; and we have everyone on sea that is needed at sea.

Mr. BLANTON. And we have more on land than we have at sea.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is surely mistaken.

Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman give us the figures?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I cannot give them accurately, but I can state them approximately.

Mr. BLANTON. I will give them to the gentleman; I will come to the gentleman's office and give them to him accurately.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Is it not a fact that this bill does not attempt to provide for promotion by selection from ensign to lieutenant?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; that is correct. The only grade in the Navy that will not be dealt with by the selection board is that of ensign. Under the law an ensign stays in that grade 3 years and is then automatically advanced to the rank of lieutenant (junior grade); and from lieutenant (junior grade) on up to admiral promotions will be made by selection instead of seniority.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. What will happen to those graduates of the class of 1933 who did not receive commissions?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am glad the gentleman called my attention to that. The bill permits, under rules and regulations to be established by the Secretary of the Navy for the giving of commissions to the graduates of the class of 1933 who did not receive commissions provided they file their application by June of this year.

Mr. AYRES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. AYRES of Kansas. Under the regulations of the Navy, if a midshipman should get married before receiving his commission, he is not entitled to his commission.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is the law.

Mr. AYRES of Kansas. Fifty percent of the young men who graduated last June, of course, received no commission. Eleven of those men have since married. I intend to offer an amendment when that particular part of the bill is reached that these men shall receive their commissions, notwithstanding the fact that they have married, provided they are otherwise qualified.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may state to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. AYRES] that he did me the courtesy of bringing the amendment to my attention. I am thoroughly in accord with the amendment, and I will ask at the proper time that it be agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If my recollection is correct, when we passed the legislation withholding commissions from 50 percent of the graduating class last June we at the same time withdrew from those men one of their allowances.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No; the gentleman is mistaken. The midshipmen who failed to get commissions last year received 1 year's pay, because the bill was not passed in time to deny them the 1 year's pay. In addition to that, they received their $900 which had accummulated for uniforms.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was mistaken. I think when it passed the House in the first instance that matter was brought up.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman inform the House as to whether or not the status of those men who were denied commissions last year will be changed by this bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. We propose to accord them an opportunity to come into the service if they file their applications between now and June 1934.

Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to consume more time in a discussion of the rule. This is an open rule and the bill is subject to amendment after we adopt the rule. I shall endeavor at that time to explain each and every section of the bill so that every Member may thoroughly understand the object and purpose of it. It is merely to extend the selection down to the two lower grades and have practically a uniform method of promotion in the Navy.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman inform us what it costs to educate a midshipman during the 4-year period he is in training, including all allowances?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It is estimated that it costs about $13,000.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. In other words, if we educate a boy for 4 years, make an officer of him, at a cost of $13,000 to the taxpayers of this country, and he is not commissioned, the Government gets nothing for its expenditure?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is true.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, there are some good features about this bill, and some that, in my opinion, are not so good.

In the first place, I think we ought to have a Navy that is built along the lines of national defense, an efficient Navy, and one in which the officers are enabled, because of the training they have had, to command our ships in time of war. For that reason I feel that we should have the number of officers that are needed, but we should not have a great many officers for whom we are unable to give the requisite sea training.

There is one other feature of a minor character that I desire to go into for a moment or two. That is the provision for the selection of officers from the grade of junior lieutenant to lieutenant. I am inclined to question whether or not the flag officers of the Navy who make up the selection board, namely, the admirals, will have acquaintance enough with the junior lieutenants to make this selection. I am inclined to doubt that those officers will have come enough to the attention of these flag officers so that the flag officers will have a proper judgment on them, and I doubt whether or not promotions should be made by selection from junior lieutenant to lieutenant.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman has raised the only question that has occurred to my mind about this legislation, and that is how this selection will be protected from favoritism in making these promotions.

Mr. TABER. Frankly, that is a difficult job. I have had considerable experience with selection boards and that sort of thing. It is supposed to be on the basis that only those who have been promoted to admiral, and who have no possibility of further promotion by any selection board or anything of that kind, are put on the selection board. They are supposed to be absolutely unbiased and to have no reason for doing anything except what their honest judgment may dictate. I think that is the theory of the proposition.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. They take the record of each officer and go over it, reaching a decision as to who is next best fitted for promotion.

Mr. TABER. They take his efficiency rating. That is what they try to do.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I may say to the gentleman from Colorado that, from long experience in the Army, I think the favoritism comes not from within the Army itself but from the politicians on the outside. You have to trust the leaders in the Army and Navy to keep their ranks straight, and they will do that if you will trust them. That is what they want to do, but the trouble comes on account of politicians stepping in.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I have had a lot of experience, and I think there is just as much politics in the Army and Navy as there is outside.

Mr. TABER. That might be.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. That kind of politics may determine the selections rather than merit.

Mr. TABER. May I talk for a while about the number which we will have available, if this bill goes through, for officers in the line of the Navy?

At the present time the appropriation bill for 1935 provides for 5,900 officers of the line, approximately. I may be 1 or 2 off. We are not able to give proper training and proper posts to those 5,900. We have approximately 500 more than the law is supposed to allow.

They are put in by special act commissioning certain classes of the academy. We have had to provide special courses in post-graduate work and that sort of thing in order to give them something to do. The ships that are coming along, with very few exceptions, are replacements, and we are not going to require a lot more officers than we had before.

The average attrition in the Navy over the last 3 years has been 165. This bill results in a certain amount of attrition in addition to this. The Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, Admiral Leahy, estimated it to me at 118, which makes a total attrition of approximately 283.

Mr. THOM. What does the gentleman mean by attrition?

Mr. TABER. Attrition means the number that die or retire or are lost to the Navy in any other way.

This means that if you take this set-up and go down the line, and these are the figures that I obtained from Admiral Leahy the other day, at an hour and a half session in my office, you have 5,900 provided for in your appropriation bill.

I understand other figures have been given in other places, but the figure given me as to the number you commission of the class of 1933 is 100. Frankly, my own opinion after an hour and a half's talk with the admiral is there will be 150.

In addition to those that were figured on when the Navy appropriation bill was under consideration, you will commission 215 additional out of the class of 1934 that you did not figure on. This, with the 150, makes a total of 6,265 who will be in the Navy as line officers during the fiscal year 1935.

The class of 1935 is estimated to produce 346. This will provide 6,611. The attrition will be 165 plus 118, or 283, leaving a net on July 1, 1935, of 6,328.

In the class of 1936 available for the Navy line there will be 184, making on July 1, 1936, 6,512, and with the attrition going on in the same way, 283, the number on July 1, 1936, will be 6,229.

The class of 1937 will produce for the line 246, making 6,475, and deducting 283, you have on July 1, 1937, 6,192.

The class of 1938 will produce 292 for the line, making 6,484, and if you deduct your attrition of 283 on July 1, you have 6,201.

The class of 1939 will produce 310, according to the estimates. Frankly, I think these figures are all conservative. If you deduct your attrition you have 6,228, and you go on down through to July 1, 1940, when you have 6,208 officers.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman's figures are very interesting if one can follow them, but I am wondering if the gentleman takes into account the young officers who will go out of the service because of failure of selection.

Mr. TABER. I do.

Mr. BRITTEN. How many does the gentleman figure will go out next year on that account?

Mr. TABER. I was told by Admiral Leahy that the number to go out because of failure of selection in the grades that are to come under selection on account of this bill would be 118 each year.

Mr. BRITTEN. Beginning with the first year?

Mr. TABER. Not in the fiscal year 1935. It would only begin to be effective in 1936.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is mistaken, and that is the reason I asked the question. No one goes out for 2 years.

Mr. TABER. Well, it begins at the end of the year 1936, the selection board meeting in the spring of 1936.

Mr. BRITTEN. I wanted to show the gentleman that his figures are entirely in error.

Mr. TABER. That is the way it works out and that is the way I have it figured.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I notice the gentleman from New York, as well as the Chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, mentioned officers of the line. This bill does not affect, then, the promotion of Construction Corps men or Medical Corps men or men who have been selected for special work?

Mr. TABER. My understanding is this does not affect anyone but officers of the line.

Frankly, I feel that the number of officers of the line that you would have in the Navy would be so large that you would not give them proper training and they would not be half as efficient as they would be if you stick to the requirements of the law and have your 5,400.

Let me say to the House that when the bill was brought in a year ago and a couple of years ago to commission the classes of the academy, the statement was made that we would get rid of a group of officers in the lieutenant, junior lieutenant, and lieutenant commander class who came in as emergency officers and whose failure to be promoted has been clogging the promotion lists. There are about 500 of them. They have never gone out, as it was represented to us they would go out. Frankly, those who are not good enough among that group to be promoted will go out under this bill, and that is a very good feature of the bill.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is one of the best provisions of the bill.

Mr. TABER. It should be.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. And if the lieutenant, after 14 years, and the junior, after 7 years, fails to be selected, they go out of the service.

Mr. TABER. That is correct.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Does not the gentleman agree to that?

Mr. TABER. I do. Now, it seems to me that we should go along and keep the five-thousand-four-hundred-odd officers that the law provides we should have, and in that way we can get along by commissioning the 50 percent of the graduating classes that we have provided for until we get the number.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I should like to have the gentleman tell us how that can be accomplished unless the elimination provided for in this bill is enacted into law?

Mr. TABER. That can be accomplished by cutting out a little bit of the language in section 5 of the bill at the top of page 4.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Is the computation the gentleman made with Admiral Leahy based on the amendment suggested in the report of the committee, or was it based on the language originally submitted by the Navy Department?

Mr. TABER. It was based on the report of the committee.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. With the committee amendment eliminated, the gentleman will find that there must be a reduction in the figures he gave the House.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, as indicated by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] the figures presented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] include an amendment, an undesirable committee amendment, which is in the bill and which will be taken out when we come to consider the bill under the 5-minute rule.

That will save some $400,000, and the total saved by the bill will amount to $1,645,000 over a period of 8 years.

I can understand that there is a controversial element in the provision that the young lieutenant may go out in 7 years. Josephus Daniels told me the other day that this selection-up bill, going down as it does to lieutenant, is a good bill, and that he hoped it would pass. He said that even 5 years was plenty of time to determine a young officer's qualifications. It would be plenty of time in any large commercial or industrial institution.

In addition to the 7 years' commissioned service the junior lieutenant has had 4 years of intensive training at the Naval Academy, where his marks have been kept and are jacketed, so that when he is considered for promotion he has had really 11 years intensified service—7 years on the high seas, where the officers have had an opportunity to determine his capabilities for selective promotion.

The balance of them, 90 percent, would go up. They go up almost automatically because of the great number of vacancies in the next grade, but under the provisions of this bill they will be selected. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] a moment ago said that we had so many line officers that we did not know what to do with them, and that we accordingly sent them to post-graduate courses. Then he said there were some 5,900 in the line of the Navy. The truth of the matter is that today there are only 221 out of 5,900 officers in post-graduate courses.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. TABER. I did not say that there were 6,200 now in the Navy in line officers. I said that the appropriation bill for 1935 carried funds for 5,900.

Mr. BRITTEN. But the gentleman said that we have so many of them that we were sending them into post-graduate courses, because we did not know what else to do with them.

Mr. TABER. Certainly.

Mr. BRITTEN. That is what the gentleman said?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Out of those 5,900 only 221 are in 10 or 12 post-graduate schools, scattered throughout the United States. That certainly is not a serious number.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], as well as all others who have given any thought to this will recognize that post-graduate courses are most important.

Mr. BRITTEN. Of course.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And should not be eliminated.

Mr. BRITTEN. In those post-graduate schools, scattered throughout the Nation, 172 of the 221 are at Annapolis. They have had 7 years' service at sea. In the University of California there are 16, 14 studying marine engineering and 2 radio engineering; in the University of Michigan 4 in aeronautical engineering and ordnance; in the Carnegie Institute 1; at George Washington 8; Rennsselaer Institute of Technology 1; Harvard 6; Massachusetts Institute 9. A total of 221. Not an important item.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Does the gentleman think there are enough in these schools? Does the gentleman realize during the war, during the most intense fighting, we pulled officers off the fighting line to put them into schools?

Mr. BRITTEN. I think it is very important to give them this intensive training.

There are only two elements in this bill, and on each of them there can be a difference of opinion. Without going into all of the figures in the various grades, and all that sort of detail, this bill does two things. It provides for commissioning all the boys who graduate successfully at the academy this year. If we are not for that, then let the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], or someone else, bring in an amendment to reduce our appointments to the Naval Academy from 3 to 2. That will be the way to do it, and you will save a lot of money if you do not want that many officers. The other important item is the extension of the selection system that has been employed successfully in the Navy for 18 years. They have been promoting officers in the line of the Navy by selection for 18 years and with great success. It is true they only went down to the grade of lieutenant commander, but now they desire to go down two more grades, because they have found that many boys who come out of the Naval Academy should not be kept in for 21 years before retirement. Under existing law, where promotion by seniority prevails, a boy who successfully leads his class may remain at the head of that class for more than 20 years after graduation. He would stay at the top of that class and every class following his for years, just so he could pass his professional examinations.

This bill will provide something quite different from the old seniority system. It will provide that where a boy falls down during his first 21 years, where he does not show the proper aptitude for the control of men and mechanics, he will automatically go out of the service. You and I know the type of boy we send to the Naval Academy. They are as fine type of boy as you will find any place in the world, but they are not all capable of managing men and mechanical equipment. That develops only after they come out of the academy, after they have studied intensely and had at least 7 years at sea. Then, and then only, can you determine whether they are qualified to handle men and ships. Those that are not will go out, as they should. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] has told you that the Treasury will save in the first 8 years $1,645,000. That will be done by taking these boys out of the service, separating them from the full salary, and giving them retired pay of 2½ percent for each year of service. If they have served 7 years they will get two and a half times 7. A young lieutenant's retirement pay is $350 a year; not much, but at least they keep him on the pay roll so that he may be useful as a reserve officer, and in time of war he would be a very valuable man, and we are paying something because he failed in his great objective. He wanted to be an officer in the Navy, but all men cannot be officers and all men cannot be promoted. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] said a moment ago that we have too many officers in the Navy. Five thousand four hundred and ninety-nine is the authorized number.

That was the authorized number when President Hoover was Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. Since May of last year we have either completed or we have appropriated for and now have in the course of completion 62 ships. Those ships will require officers. They will require men. Last month we passed the Vinson bill authorizing appropriation for 102 additional ships. That makes 164 ships. One hundred and sixty-four new ships will go into the Navy within the next 4 years. They will require hundreds of officers and thousands of men. You cannot make an officer in a year or 2 years or 4 years. It takes 20 or 30 years to make an officer who is capable of commanding a $40,000,000 investment on the high seas with 1,200 lives aboard that investment.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I would rather not for the time being.

The best expert advice in the Navy advises us that we will not have enough officers. We will need more of them, and they should be efficient. Japan yesterday went on record for 7,000 line officers—and her Navy is much smaller than ours—and 90,000 men. Notwithstanding her Navy being much smaller than ours, she will have between ten and fifteen thousand more men in the service than we have. I would much rather have a ship overmanned than undermanned; I would much rather have a turret overmanned than undermanned, with the highest type brains we can accumulate. Cold steel is not worth a damn in an emergency. You need men to direct it. Talk about so many thousand tons of battleships and so many thousand tons of submarines and so many thousand tons of cruisers. They are not worth a nickel unless they are manned by the very highest type of efficiency in the world. I have always said that man for man and ship for ship we can lick anything on earth, but if we have a 30,000-ton battleship and it is undermanned, if it has only a skeleton crew, you cannot expect that ship to deliver efficiently. It is a physical impossibility. I am for more officers, and so are you if you listen to the Naval General Board and the highest expert authority we have.

Let us have an increased number of officers, even if the gentleman's figures are correct, and they are not, because we are going to take out of service 2 years from June 30 some 800 men in the lower grades, and unless we get an increased authorization from Congress, in 7 or 8 years we shall be commissioning all of the men from the academy, and we will run the total authorization down to 5,499, where it is today. It is true we have several hundred more officers in the line than 5,499, as was indicated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. That has been brought about by the very condition that we aim to cure by this legislation; namely, retirement of those men who are drawing big pay. Do not keep them in there until they are 48 or 50 years old as commanders and then retire them at high pay for life. Retire them now at low pay for life, and let the most efficient remain in the service. That is how you will improve your ships' efficiency, your engineering efficiency, and your target practice.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield for a question.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If you retire a lieutenant after 14 years of service, his retired pay will only be about $1,080 a year. If you retire him after serving 20 years, it will be $2,126 a year.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; and under existing law you will have to keep him that long.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. MAY. I am interested in knowing whether this bill will increase or decrease the cost to the Government, or whether there is any additional appropriation.

Mr. BRITTEN. It will increase the cost to the Government over existing law, only to the extent of commissioning the other 50 percent from the Naval Academy.

Mr. MAY. I am strongly in favor of adequate preparedness in the Navy and in the Army, but I want to know how much it is going to cost.

Mr. BRITTEN. It will decrease the cost of pay in the Navy by retiring a lot of the men who cannot go up.

Now, my thought is this: Europe today is sitting on a volcano. Men like Mussolini and Wells and others say there is likely to be an explosion over there before 1935. We can keep out of that explosion if we are strong. They talk about a possible emergency existing in what they call the Far East—Japan. If something happens over there, we can keep out of that if we are strong. If we are not, we will be dragged into it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] has expired.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Will the gentleman yield himself more time so that he can answer a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, it is gratifying to be able to anticipate from the speeches that have thus far been made that the discussion of this bill will be informing, intelligent, and impassionate. It presents very important legislation, which, if not passed, may very seriously affect the morale of the service. It is interesting to find that the Members who are present this afternoon have evinced a keen desire for full and accurate information about the bill. By implication, this attitude is a fine and deserving tribute to the Navy.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], whom I hold in very high esteem and who is thoroughly familiar with Navy legislation, will, I am sure, as he indicated in response to the question which I asked, find it necessary to revise downward the figures which he submitted to the House, since evidently his computation was based on an amendment which the committee at first suggested in their report they would insist upon in the House, but which the chairman indicated today would be withdrawn and language recommended by the Department inserted instead.

This will work a substantial reduction in the figures submitted by the gentleman from New York, since such figures were predicated on a different assumption.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In this connection, if the gentleman will yield, the bill will then be in accord with the financial program of the Chief Executive?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes. Now, I do not understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has any serious objection to what I consider, after all, to be the most important part of the bill, namely, the selective promotion of officers in the grade of lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade), rather than continue the present system of promotion according to seniority.

Mr. TABER. I was a little afraid there might be some misinterpretation.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I am quite familiar with the views of the gentleman from New York in regard to naval legislation, because I remember certain amendments which the gentleman has offered at previous sessions of Congress which, had they been favorably acted on, would have resulted in substantial savings to the Treasury.

There are many lieutenants in the Navy now, who, because existing law provides a different pay scale for officers falling in a certain class or group, are receiving much higher pay than other lieutenants. There are some lieutenants, for instance, who are today receiving more than $6,500, including allowances, which, in many instances, is much higher than many commanders are receiving, and more than some captains under whom these lieutenants serve. I think the statement was made that in one of the ship groups on the western coast last year, there were 20 lieutenants, serving under an admiral in the lower grade, who were receiving higher pay than the admiral. Now, of course such disparity of pay seriously disturbs the morale of the Service.

The effect of this bill will be that at the proper time many of these officers will be retired in a way that is absolutely fair and just to them. For instance, some now receiving over $6,500, would be retired at $3,375, even though they are still lieutenants. This is due to a strange and unusual pay bill passed in 1922, and which someone has said would require a week's hard study to understand, but which I think will require 2 weeks of hard study to interpret. By reason of the pay bill passed in 1922, one scale of pay was given to the officers then in the service, and an entirely different scale of pay was fixed for those who came into the service after July 1, 1922. I might put it even stronger. There is one scale of pay for those who came into the Navy service from the Naval Academy after June 30, 1917, and an entirely different scale of pay for many who came into the Service from the academy prior to that time, and for some who were taken into the service in 1920 through channels other than the Naval Academy. The selective feature of the bill is most important and it is pleasing to note that as to this there seems to be a unanimity of sentiment. I regret that lack of time will prevent me from discussing the pay bill of 1922, to which I filed a minority report at the time of its adoption.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was adopted.

EVERGLADES NATIONAL PARK

Mr. BANKHEAD, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report on the bill (H.R. 2837), to provide for the establishment of the Everglades National Park in the State of Florida, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1635) for printing in the RECORD under the rule:

House Resolution 384

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 2837, to provide for the establishment of the Everglades National Park in the State of Florida, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill or any amendment recommended by the Committee on the Public Lands are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Public Lands, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION ACT

Mr. BANKHEAD, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report on the bill (S. 2347), an act to amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act, approved June 3, 1924, as amended (Rept. No. 1634), for printing in the RECORD under the rule:

House Resolution 383

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 2347, an act to amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act, approved June 3, 1924, as amended. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 30 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

FOREIGN TRADE ZONES

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report on the bill (H.R. 9322) to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign-trade zones in ports of entry of the United States to expedite and encourage commerce, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1636) for printing in the RECORD under the rule:

House Resolution 381

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H.R. 9322, a bill to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign-trade zones in ports of entry of the United States to expedite and encourage commerce, and for other purposes. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

BANKRUPTCY LAWS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Speaker be authorized to appoint an additional conferee in the matter of the conference with the Senate on the bill (H.R. 5884) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints Mr. OLIVER of New York as an additional conferee. The Clerk will notify the Senate of the appointment.

PROMOTION BY SELECTION IN THE LINE OF THE NAVY IN THE GRADES OF LIEUTENANT COMMANDER AND LIEUTENANT

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 9068) to provide for promotion by selection in the line of the Navy in the grades of lieutenant commander and lieutenant; to authorize appointment as ensigns in the line of the Navy all midshipmen who hereafter graduate from the Naval Academy; and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 9068, with Mr. BEAM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That except as otherwise provided in this act, the provisions of existing law with reference to promotion by selection in the line of the Navy and the retirement of officers who are not on the promotion list or who are found not professionally qualified are hereby extended to include and authorize promotion to the grades of lieutenant commander and lieutenant, and the retirement of lieutenants and lieutenants (junior grade). The number to be recommended for promotion to each such grade and to be placed upon the promotion list shall be furnished the selection board for that grade by the Secretary of the Navy and shall be the number of existing vacancies in the grade concerned plus such additional number, if any, as the needs of the service may require.

SEC. 2. That lieutenants (junior grade) who on June 30 of the year of the convening of the board shall have had 3 years' service in the grade of junior lieutenant shall be eligible for consideration for selection for promotion to the next higher grade.

SEC. 3. That the board for the recommendation of line officers for promotion to the grades of lieutenant commander and lieutenant shall consist of 9 officers on the active list of the line of the Navy above the rank of commander, not restricted by law to the performance of shore duty only, at least 1 of whom shall be a rear admiral.

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of extending section 3 of the act of March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1483; U.S.C., supp. VII, title 34, sec. 286a), to officers below the rank of lieutenant commander, the said section is amended so that the length of service therein prescribed shall be 14 years for lieutenants and 7 years for lieutenants (junior grade): Provided, That no officer of said rank shall become so ineligible prior to June 30 of the second calendar year following the date of this act: And provided further, That the restriction on the number of involuntary transfers in any fiscal year to the retired list prescribed in section 7 of the act of March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1484; U.S.C., supp. VII, title 34, sec. 286e), shall not apply to the grade of lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade).

SEC. 5. That section 1 of the act approved May 6, 1932 (47 Stat. 149; U.S.C., supp. VII, title 34, sec. 12), is hereby amended by inserting the word "hereafter" after the words "midshipmen who", and the words "Provided, That all former midshipmen graduated in 1933 who received a certificate of graduation and honorable discharge may, upon their own application, if physically qualified, and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, be appointed as ensigns prior to June 1, 1934, in accordance with this section and shall take rank next after the junior ensigns appointed in 1933 and among themselves in accordance with their proficiency as shown by the order or merit at date of graduation: And provided further", after the words "Naval Academy" and by striking out "in 1932, and at least 50 percent of all graduates in subsequent years: Provided", so that as amended the said section will read as follows:

"That the President of the United States is authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint as ensigns in the line of the Navy all midshipmen who hereafter graduate from the Naval Academy: Provided, That all former midshipmen graduated in 1933 who received a certificate of graduation and honorable discharge may, upon their own application, if physically qualified, and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, be appointed as ensigns prior to June 1, 1934, in accordance with this section and shall take rank next after the junior ensign appointed in 1933 and among themselves in accordance with their proficiency as shown by the order of merit at date of graduation: And provided further, That the number of such officers so appointed shall, while in excess of the total number of line officers otherwise authorized by law, be considered in excess of the number of officers in the grade of ensign as determined by any computation, and shall be excluded from any computation made for the purpose of determining the authorized number of line officers in any grade on the active list above the grade of lieutenant (junior grade) until the total number of line officers shall have been reduced below the number otherwise authorized by law."

SEC. 6. That hereafter any staff officer on the active list below the rank of lieutenant commander shall be advanced to the next higher rank in his corps when the running mate of such staff officer or an officer junior to such running mate has been promoted to that higher rank in the line of the Navy or when a vacancy in that rank exists in the line of the Navy which will in due course be filled by the promotion of his running mate or an officer junior to his running mate: Provided, That such staff officer is found qualified in accordance with law for such advancement. The provisions of law relating to the advancement of staff officers now embodied in sections 255, 321, and 348r of title 34, supplement VII, United States Code, are hereby amended in accordance with this section.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 15, strike out the word "lieutenants" and insert in lieu thereof the word "lieutenant."

Page 3, line 2, strike out the word "second" and insert the word "first."

Page 3, lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "the restriction on the number of involuntary transfers in any fiscal year to the retired list" and insert in lieu thereof "officers of the grade of lieutenant designated for retention on the active list as."

Page 3, lines 8, 9, and 10, strike out "not applied to the grade of lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade)" and insert in lieu thereof "be carried as additional numbers in the grade of lieutenant, but shall be included in the total authorized number of commissioned officers of the active list of the line of the Navy and of any grade to which later promoted."

Page 3, line 24, strike out the word "ensigns" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ensign."

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration is a personnel bill submitted by the Navy Department and, as introduced in the House, has the approval of the administration. It provides for promotion by selection in the line of the Navy in the grades of lieutenant commander and lieutenant and authorizes the appointment as ensigns in the line of the Navy all midshipmen who hereafter graduate from the Naval Academy.

Under the present law, there are two methods of promotion in the Navy—by selection and by seniority. Under the selection system, which is in effect from the grades of lieutenant commander and up, a board of admirals goes over the efficiency records of the eligible officers and recommends for promotion those considered best fitted to perform the duties in the next higher grade. Officers not recommended for promotion are, after a certain number of years of commissioned service, automatically placed on the retired list.

The objective and purpose of this bill is to extend the selection to the next two lower grades; that is, to the grades of lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade). The only grade in the Navy to which selection will not apply is that of ensign.

Therefore, you will observe that by extending selection to the next two lower grades, that is, lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade), there will be a uniform method of promotion, and it will all be by selection, except in the rank of ensign, and the officer who stays in that rank 3 years is automatically eligible for promotion to the rank of lieutenant (junior grade).

Under the present law an officer with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) remains in that grade until there is a vacancy in the next higher grade, when promotion is made by seniority, and the same is true with reference to an officer who has the rank of a lieutenant; however, the law only permits a lieutenant commander to remain in that grade until he has completed 21 years of commissioned service, and if he fails to be selected by the selection board by that time, he automatically goes on the retired list. The same applies to a commander with 28 years commissioned service and to a captain with 35 years.

You will observe, therefore, that the Navy deems it highly important to have officers of certain age in the various ranks commensurate with the duty and responsibility required of that rank, and that is what this bill proposes to do—it will thus make uniform the periods of maximum commissioned service for each of the grades, namely, lieutenant (junior grade) 7 years; lieutenant, 14 years, lieutenant commander, 21 years; commander, 28 years; and captain, 35 years. An admiral automatically retires on reaching the age of 64.

By the system of promotion by seniority there exists in the ranks of lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade), what is referred to as a "hump" or "stagnation" of officers in these two grades. During the World War a great many Reserve officers and noncommissioned officers were given temporary commissions, and by the act of June 4, 1920, a considerable number of these temporary appointments were made permanent. This therefore brought into the line of the Navy approximately 1,000 officers, the majority of them being in the ranks of lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade). At the same time there were large classes at the Naval Academy that were graduated in 1919, 1920, and 1921. These were the two things that produced the hump or stagnation now existing in the ranks of lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade).

To relieve this condition it becomes necessary that legislation as set forth in this bill be enacted, for it will establish a normal flow of promotion into the grades of lieutenant commander and lieutenant, and, on the other hand, it will eliminate from the active list of the Navy those officers least fit to perform the duties of the next higher grade. Let me present to you exactly the picture as a result of the promotion by seniority in the two grades covered by this bill. There are about 1,200 officers in the lieutenant's group causing the hump in that grade.

At the present time the average number of promotions from the lieutenant's grade is in the neighborhood of 100 annually. With this number of promotions yearly it will require about 12 years to get through this large group of officers who all entered the service within the short period of 3 years. All other things being equal, they should all be promoted within about the same period of time; that is, 3 years. Nevertheless, under existing conditions it will require four times as long for them to be promoted as it should be normally.

Due to this slow promotion in the lieutenants' grade, promotion in lieutenants (junior grade) grade is consequently slowed up. Without the legislation in this bill this condition will grow progressively worse, and in a very few years' time the Navy will be in an intolerable position with reference to its officer personnel. It will tend to approach the condition that existed before there was a selection-out or selection-up system, and when all promotions were by seniority only.

Mr. Chairman, I want to assure you that the provisions of this bill in relation to selection is not an innovation in the promotion system of the Navy, but it is simply extending it to apply to 5 grades instead of to 3 as it is at present. This bill is not drawn to operate against any class or special group of officers, nor does it in any way provide for any increase in the number of officers in any of the grades above ensign.

To select and develop potential leaders and to promote the efficiency of the Navy as a whole it is essential that, within certain limits, the several grades should contain line officers whose ages are suitable for their respective duties and responsibilities, and at the same time give all line officers affected an equal opportunity for selection, having in view solely the special fitness of officers and the efficiency of the naval service. This in substance is what this bill proposes to do.

In addition to the promotion provisions, this bill also provides for the commissioning of all graduates of the Naval Academy. Ships and aircraft already authorized and building, together with legislation providing for a complete treaty Navy, will eventually require a considerable increase in the authorized officer strength of the Navy.

For the ships now built and building under the increased Navy and N.I.R.A., and exclusive of any ships or aircraft projected under the treaty Navy bill, there will be required the following number of line officers:

Fiscal year:
1935, including 997 aviators	6,263
1936, including 997 aviators	6,387
1937, including 997 aviators	6,630
1938, including 997 aviators	6,748

At which point, unless more ships and planes are built under the authority of the treaty Navy bill, no more officers will be required.

On a three-appointment basis, under this proposed bill, the strength of the line will increase slightly the first 2 years and, thereafter, will gradually be reduced until it is below the authorized strength of 5,449. It will, therefore, be necessary, at a later date, to increase the number of appointments to the Naval Academy for each Senator and Congressman and to authorize an increase in the officer strength of the line of the Navy, if we are to have a fully manned treaty Navy. Of the additional line officers that will be required, approximately 50 percent are for aviation.

The foregoing figures show the necessity for commissioning as ensigns all midshipmen graduating from the Naval Academy, including those of the class of 1933, who were honorably discharged upon graduation, provided they qualify physically and conform to such rules as are laid down by the Secretary of the Navy.

Of course you know that the present authorized line-officer strength of the Navy is 5,499. This strength is distributed on a percentage basis: 1 percent admirals; 4 percent captains, 8 percent commanders, 15 percent lieutenant commanders, 30 percent lieutenants, 42 percent lieutenants (junior grade) and ensigns.

A distribution in the grades of the officers is as follows:

Rear admirals	55
Captains	220
Commanders	440
Lieutenant commanders	825
Lieutenants	1,650
Lieutenants (junior grade) and ensigns	2,309

This authorized strength and the percentages were considered appropriate when they were first established and when the Navy was made up mostly of large ships; however, since that time the proportion of small ships to large ships has materially increased. This relative increase in the number of smaller ships, as well as keeping abreast of the latest development in fire control, radio, and other highly technical improvements on our combatant vessels, will require an increase in the authorized strength as well as a comparative change in the distribution of officers in the various ranks of the Navy.

It being recognized that for their relative size small ships require a different proportion of officers in certain grades than would be required on a battleship; however, this particular question is not under consideration now; nevertheless, it is closely related, and in passing I might say that this matter will be given serious study by the Committee on Naval Affairs during the next Congress.

Incidental to the main purposes of the bill is the saving of money. The bill eliminates lieutenants after 14 years of commissioned service and lieutenants (junior grade) after 7 years' commissioned service when they fail to be selected, and places them upon the retired list.

Those officers retired under this act will receive 2½ percent of their active-duty base pay multiplied by the number of years' service for which they are entitled to credit in computation of longevity pay, not to exceed a total of 75 percent. The retired pay of a lieutenant with 14 years' service will amount to approximately $1,008 a year, or $84 a month. The retired pay of a lieutenant (junior grade) with 7 years' service will amount to $385 a year, or $32 a month.

The existing law would retain these lieutenants upon the list, would promote them by seniority to lieutenant commanders, and would eventually retire them at an average rate of pay of over $3,000 a year.

Under this bill a saving in each case will be effected of over $2,000 per annum.

If this bill is enacted, it will show a saving in pay of the Navy over existing laws. This saving for a period of 8 years, for the fiscal years 1935 to 1942, will be $1,643,356.

Fiscal year	Increased cost	Saving
1935	$354,114
1936	625,716
1937		$710,433
1938		514,177
1939		342,535
1940		387,338
1941		308,480
1942		360,223
Total	979,830	2,623,186
Total saving		1,643,356

I grant you that it might seem to be inconsistent to provide for the elimination of officers on the one hand and at the same time to provide for taking in additional officers from the Naval Academy; however, the need for doing this is to have officers of appropriate ages in the different ranks commensurate with the duty and responsibility required in the grades and at the same time give all line officers affected an equal opportunity for promotion, having in mind the special fitness of the officers and the efficiency of the naval service.

The average age of the graduates of the Naval Academy is 22 years. In order that officers may receive adequate training to prepare them for the duties in the next higher grades and at the same time to have officers in the various grades of ages appropriate for the duties and responsibilities of the different grades, the maximum length of time they should be in any one grade is 7 years. Therefore, an average-age officer should pass from the junior lieutenant's grade before reaching 29; from the lieutenant's grade before reaching 36; from the lieutenant commander's grade before reaching 43; from the commander's grade before reaching 50; and from the captain's grade before reaching 57.

Now, let me show you what the actual effect will be under the existing system of promotion; that is, by seniority. The Naval Academy class of 1920, who should all be lieutenant commanders by June 30 of this year, at an average of 36, will not all be lieutenant commanders until 1939, or at an average age of 41—when he should be 36, 5 years over age. This condition will continue to be aggravated year after year so that the 1924 class of the Naval Academy will begin to enter the rank of lieutenant commander at an average age of 43—7 years after the time that they should all be lieutenant commanders, and at an age when they should all be in the commander's grade.

This is a condition that must be corrected in the interest of national defense.

It is absolutely necessary that the Navy be manned by the most able officers that the country is capable of producing. This bill insures that condition. [Applause.]

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GOSS. Does that mean that the gentleman expects to come in with a bill probably next year for redistribution in grade and rank?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is my thought.

Mr. GOSS. As well as a further authorization in reference to the line officers?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Exactly.

In other words, when the selection board passes upon the record of a lieutenant who has served 14 years total commissioned service and he is not suited or the best fitted for promotion, under this proposed bill he will go out of the service. The same thing applies to lieutenants (junior grade).

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does the gentleman know of selections being made in a similar way in these two ranks by any of the great powers?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am only familiar with our method. I am not familiar with what other countries do with reference to selection, but I may say that this is the fairest method that I know of to make promotions.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. EVANS. Does this do away entirely with selections by seniority?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Absolutely.

Mr. EVANS. In all the grades?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In every grade except ensign, and he automatically goes to the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) after 3 years.

Mr. EVANS. And that rule of seniority applies in part as to all grades now?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It does. It applies to the first three grades. It applies to the ranks of admiral, captain, and commander. The object of this bill is to extend it on down to the rank of lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade).

Mr. EVANS. How are these selection boards created?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The bill provides that the Secretary of the Navy shall select one admiral and the remaining members shall be captains.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 7 additional minutes.

Under the existing law the service record of each officer is gone over and the selection board determines whether, in the judgment of the men constituting the selection board, he is the best one suited for promotion.

Under the proposed bill there will be a saving on each one that is retired of the difference between $1,008 and $3,000, or approximately $2,000.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. EVANS. Take, for example, a lieutenant, junior grade. When he serves 7 years and there is no room for promotion, is he retired automatically?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not by any means. If the selection board passes on him and he is recommended for promotion by the selection board, under the existing law he goes on what is known as the promotion list and there he remains until a vacancy actually occurs.

Mr. EVANS. And that rule applies to all the other grades?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Exactly.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be such a unanimity of opinion on this bill that I do not care to take up the time of the House with any further discussion.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I have no requests for time over here.

Mr. BRITTEN. I think we might start consideration of the bill under the 5-minute rule. The bill is simple and good and one in the interest of improved efficiency in the service. I feel probably there will not even be a roll call.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DREWRY].

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill. Since August 29, 1916, the system of selection for promotion has been established in the Navy down to the grade of lieutenant commander. The selection system now in existence, without reference to the two grades affected by this bill, seems to me to have worked very well, and it is thought that by extending the system to the grades of lieutenant commander and lieutenant that there will be a further improvement in the system.

The direct purpose of the bill is to correct a condition that exists now in the lower grades of the Navy, owing to the commissioning of large Naval Academy classes after the war, along with several hundred officers from sources other than the academy, the result being a "hump" or stagnation in these lower grades. Such stagnation was hurtful to the service, for as long as the promotion of officers above the two grades brought in in this bill was delayed, the ambition of the younger men and their initiative were affected. The bill provides that after a board decides upon the recommendation of line officers for promotion to the grades of lieutenant commander and lieutenant, and said officers, to a number to be recommended for promotion to each such grade, are selected by the Secretary of the Navy as the needs of the service may require, then there shall be a retirement of those not promoted. This gives all line officers affected by the stagnation aforementioned, as nearly as practicable, an equal opportunity for selection.

It will make the younger officers more ambitious, and there will be very active competition among them for their promotion under this plan, all of which will redound to the efficiency of the service.

This promotion system will also allow the personnel departments of the Navy to keep well in hand the progress of those officers who show themselves most efficient and worthy of higher responsibility.

Those who are retired will be retired at an age when they will be able to go into other work, and they will be absorbed into private enterprises for which probably they will be better fitted.

It has been found, in comparison with other navies, especially the British Navy, that the comparative retirement age of the officers of the British Navy in each grade is at least 4 or 5 years lower than the corresponding retirement in the grades of our Navy. This bill will correct this situation. It is necessary that the several grades should contain line officers whose ages are suitable for their duties and responsibilities. An illustration was given in the hearings which showed that before the next session of Congress, under the operation of existing law, 82 vacancies in the rank of lieutenant commander will be filled by promotion of lieutenants at an age that will average 41 years. It is thought that the average maximum age for entry into the grade of lieutenant commander, to permit sufficient time in the higher ranks to obtain the necessary experience, is 36 years. So that the officers promoted who must remain in the grade of lieutenant commander for 4 years before they are eligible for selection for promotion to the grade of commander will have an average age of 45 years, and 4 years more will elapse before they would normally be reached by the selection board for promotion to commander, at which time they will average 49 years of age. The efficiency of the service would be promoted if this average age were reduced as it is intended to be by this bill, for at the age of 49 years the officer so promoted should be entering the rank of captain instead of commander. In other words, it promotes the younger and more active and ambitious men to the various grades at an age that will be some 4 or 5 years lower than it is under the present law.

It is thought that this bill will provide a minimum period of service within each of the lower ranks so that officers will be thoroughly prepared for the duties of the next higher rank after they have been thoroughly trained, and it also prevents too long a period of service within any one rank.

If it is agreed that the selection system has worked well in the other grades, it is reasonable to believe that it will work just as well, if not better, in these lower grades, to which this opportunity for promotion is extended. The only objection to the plan would be that it would result in an increased cost, if such objection were true, but it is not true, for it is shown by figures submitted that there will be a saving, over a period of 8 years, from 1935 to 1942, over the existing law of $1,643,356. However, for the first 2 years there will be an increased cost, but the total saving will be over a million and a half dollars for a period of 8 years. It would seem, Mr. Chairman, that there could be no strong objection to the proposed legislation.

The remaining portion of the bill provides that all former midshipmen graduated in 1933, who received certificates of graduation and honorable discharges, may, upon their own application, if physically qualified, and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, be appointed as ensigns prior to June 1, 1934, and take their rank after the junior ensigns appointed in 1933, in accordance with their proficiency as shown at the date of graduation.

This legislation is necessary in order that the line-officer strength of the Navy may be brought up to the requirements for the new ships that will be built by 1938. Since the act of May 6, 1932, 7 ships have been completed, and 55 more are either being built or have been appropriated for, making a total of 62 new ships that will be completed within the next 4 years. It is therefore necessary that the midshipmen who under existing law would be discharged to civil life should be retained in the Navy, for their services are needed for the vessels now built and building.

In conclusion, I may say that this bill does not increase the number of any line officers above the grade of lieutenant, nor does it increase the cost of service pay; and it is believed that the bill will accomplish an improvement in the promotion system which will lead to increased efficiency and increased morale in the service.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That except as otherwise provided in this act, the provisions of existing law with reference to promotion by selection in the line of the Navy and the retirement of officers who are not on the promotion list or who are found not professionally qualified are hereby extended to include and authorize promotion to the grades of lieutenant commander and lieutenant, and the retirement of lieutenants and lieutenants (junior grade). The number to be recommended for promotion to each such grade and to be placed upon the promotion list shall be furnished the selection board for that grade by the Secretary of the Navy and shall be the number of existing vacancies in the grade concerned plus such additional number, if any, as the needs of the service may require.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I had intended to offer an amendment for the consideration of the House in reference to going to the junior grade of lieutenant in selections. I think myself that it is a mistake that this House goes down to the rank of lieutenant, junior grade, for selection. I have talked with the chairman of the committee, and he does not agree with me, but I want to point out why I feel as I do about the matter.

Mr. DARDEN. Does not the gentleman believe that 10 years' experience is enough to base a selection on?

Mr. GOSS. I may say to the gentleman that there are only 7 years to begin with. I can conceive of some young officer getting under the command of a hard-boiled commanding officer, and we have them and should have them, whereby his efficiency rating may be reduced. It may be the lot of that officer to serve under two such commanders. Then he is automatically retired on $30 a month.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. May I call the gentleman's attention to the testimony of the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation at page 1449 of the hearings? Dealing with this question, he stated:

It will be unnecessary to do any radical selection from lieutenant, junior grade.

I do not think the gentleman need be worried about the junior lieutenants.

Mr. GOSS. I think we are making a mistake in going down that far.

I understand in another body they would like to go down even to the grade of midshipman. Where are we going to stop and what are we going to gain by this procedure?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. It is quite a stimulus to efficiency for these young men to understand that their records will be gone over at stated times with a view to determining whether they should longer remain in the service.

Mr. GOSS. I agree with the gentleman on that point.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And as the gentleman from Georgia has just stated, the Bureau of Navigation feels that this provision as it relates to junior lieutenants should be liberally construed, and they will take into account all the facts about which the gentleman expressed apprehension.

Mr. GOSS. I may say that there are two schools of thought about the matter. We can all recognize the point that has just been brought out by the gentleman from Alabama, and on the other hand, we have all had experience with officers in the Army and in the Navy which would bear out the other contention.

Of course, I do not want to hold up the matter, but I did want to point out that the House is going pretty far when it goes down to the grade of junior lieutenant.

I was very much interested in the statement of the Chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee and was impressed with his fairness when he told the House what we are to expect when this bill passes. I want to congratulate him upon making this statement, and as one Member I am very appreciative of what the gentleman has attempted to do here in explaining exactly what is coming next year, and I believe we can consider that as a part of this program.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Absolutely.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the board for the recommendation of line officers for promotion to the grades of lieutenant commander and lieutenants shall consist of nine officers on the active list of the line of the Navy above the rank of commander, not restricted by law to the performance of shore duty only, at least one of whom shall be a rear admiral.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 15, strike out the word "lieutenants" and insert in lieu thereof the word "lieutenant."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of extending section 3 of the act of March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1483; U.S.C., supp. VII, title 34, sec. 286a), to officers below the rank of lieutenant commander, the said section is amended so that the length of service therein prescribed shall be 14 years for lieutenants and 7 years for lieutenants (junior grade): Provided, That no officer of said rank shall become so ineligible prior to June 30 of the second calendar year following the date of this act: And provided further, That the restriction on the number of involuntary transfers in any fiscal year to the retired list prescribed in section 7 of the act of March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1484; U.S.C., supp. VII, title 34, sec. 286e), shall not apply to the grade of lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade).

With the following committee amendment:

On page 3, line 2, strike out the word "second" and insert the word "first"; and in line 4, after the word "that", strike out the words "the restriction on the number of involuntary transfers in any fiscal year to the retired list" and insert in lieu thereof the words "officers of the grade of lieutenant designated for retention on the active list as"; and in line 8, after the word "shall", strike out the words "not apply to the grade of lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade)" and insert in lieu thereof the words "be carried as additional numbers in the grade of lieutenant, but shall be included in the total authorized number of commissioned officers of the active list of the line of the Navy and of any grade to which later promoted."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That section 1 of the act approved May 6, 1932 (47 Stat. 149; U.S.C., Supp. VII, title 34, sec. 12), is hereby amended by inserting the word "hereafter" after the words "midshipmen who", and the words "Provided, That all former midshipmen graduated in 1933 who received a certificate of graduation and honorable discharge may, upon their own application, if physically qualified, and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, be appointed as ensigns prior to June 1, 1934, in accordance with this section and shall take rank next after the junior ensigns appointed in 1933 and among themselves in accordance with their proficiency as shown by the order or merit at date of graduation: And provided further", after the words "Naval Academy" and by striking out "in 1932, and at least 50 percent of all graduates in subsequent years: Provided", so that as amended the said section will read as follows:

"That the President of the United States is authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint as ensigns in the line of the Navy all midshipmen who hereafter graduate from the Naval Academy: Provided, That all former midshipmen graduated in 1933 who received a certificate of graduation and honorable discharge may, upon their own application, if physically qualified, and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, be appointed as ensigns prior to June 1, 1934, in accordance with this section and shall take rank next after the junior ensign appointed in 1933 and among themselves in accordance with their proficiency as shown by the order of merit at date of graduation: And provided further, That the number of such officers so appointed shall, while in excess of the total number of line officers otherwise authorized by law, be considered in excess of the number of officers in the grade of ensign as determined by any computation, and shall be excluded from any computation made for the purpose of determining the authorized number of line officers in any grade on the active list above the grade of lieutenant (junior grade) until the total number of line officers shall have been reduced below the number otherwise authorized by law."

With the following committee amendment:

On page 4, line 1, strike out the word "or" and insert the word "of."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AYRES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 11, after the word "discharge", insert the words "and whether they have since been married or not."

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, we will accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That hereafter any staff officer on the active list below the rank of lieutenant commander shall be advanced to the next higher rank in his corps when the running mate of such staff officer or an officer junior to such running mate has been promoted to that higher rank in the line of the Navy or when a vacancy in that rank exists in the line of the Navy which will in due course be filled by the promotion of his running mate or an officer junior to his running mate: Provided, That such staff officer is found qualified in accordance with law for such advancement. The provisions of law relating to the advancement of staff officers now embodied in sections 255, 321, and 348r of title 34, Supplement VII, United States Code, are hereby amended in accordance with this section.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 5, line 15, after the figures "348r", insert "(supplement VII)", and in line 16, after the figures "34", strike out "supplement VII."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee will rise.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BEAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (H.R. 9068) to provide for promotion by selection in the line of the Navy in the grades of lieutenant commander and lieutenant; to authorize appointment as ensigns in the line of the Navy all midshipmen who hereafter graduate from the Naval Academy; and for other purposes, and under the rule he reported the same back with sundry amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. VINSON of Georgia, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DIVERSIFICATION OF CERTAIN INDUSTRIES

Mr. COX, from the Committee on Rules, presented the following privileged resolution for printing under the rule:

House Resolution 369

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H.R. 9404, a bill to authorize the formation of a body corporate to insure the more effective diversification of prison industries, and for other purposes. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for the amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

DISTRIBUTION, PROMOTION, RETIREMENT, AND DISCHARGE OF COMMISSIONED OFFICERS OF THE MARINE CORPS

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 348.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 348

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H.R. 6803, a bill to regulate the distribution, promotion, retirement, and discharge of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, strike out "2 hours" and insert "1 hour."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a brief statement. I have had no request for time. This bill is identical in nature with the bill that we just passed. This bill is for the Marine Corps. Unless there is some request for time, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6803) to regulate the distribution, promotion, retirement, and discharge of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. BOYLAN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter commissioned officers of the Marine Corps shall be distributed in grades, promoted, retired, and discharged in like manner and with the same relative conditions in all respects as are provided for commissioned officers of the line of the Navy, by existing law, or by laws hereafter enacted, except as may be necessary to adapt the said provisions to the Marine Corps, or as herein otherwise provided.

SEC. 2. That of the authorized number of commissioned officers above the grade of colonel, one shall be the Major General Commandant, one half shall be brigadier generals, and the remainder shall be major generals.

SEC. 3. That the heads of staff departments shall be general officers while so serving, in addition to the number of general officers otherwise herein provided, one with the rank, pay, and allowances of a major general, and the remainder with the rank, pay, allowances of a brigadier general. They shall be carried in the grades or ranks from which appointed.

SEC. 4. That promotion to major general of the line shall be by seniority from brigadier generals of the line.

SEC. 5. That in computing the number of colonels to be recommended for promotion or to be designated for retention on the active list the general officers of the line shall be considered as constituting the grade next above that of colonel.

SEC. 6. That commissioned service of officers for the purpose of this act shall consist of all commissioned service on the active list of the Marine Corps, whether under a temporary or permanent appointment, and all commissioned service on active duty in the Marine Corps Reserve.

SEC. 7. That selection boards shall consist of officers on the active list of the Marine Corps, the composition and procedure of the boards to be determined by the Secretary of the Navy.

SEC. 8. That administrative staff duty performed by any officer under appointment or detail, and duty in aviation, or in any technical specialty, shall be given weight by the selection board in determining his fitness for promotion equal to that given to line duty equally well performed.

SEC. 9. That section 1493, Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 34, sec. 665), is so far amended in its application to the Marine Corps as to require that no officer shall be promoted to a higher grade, excepting in the case provided in section 1494, Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 34, sec. 566), until he has been examined by a board of naval medical officers and pronounced physically fit to perform all his duties at sea and in the field.

SEC. 10. That the requirement of sea service in grade shall not apply to promotion of officers of the Marine Corps, and officers in the upper four sevenths of the grades of colonel, lieutenant colonel, and major, respectively, as established by the first section of this act, shall be eligible for consideration by selection boards and for promotion without regard to length of service in grade.

SEC. 11. That an officer whose name is placed on an eligible list for appointment as head of a staff department shall not be again considered for that office by any subsequent selection board, except as otherwise provided in this section, and shall, in respect to involuntary retirement, be in the same status as if on a promotion list: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, with the approval of the President, remove his name from such list and submit it to the next ensuing selection board for consideration and recommendation. If recommended for appointment by said board and approved by the President, the name of such officer shall be replaced on the eligible list from which removed without prejudice by reason of its having been temporarily removed therefrom. If not recommended by said board, such officer shall be subject to involuntary retirement under the same conditions as provided for in the case of an officer whose name is not on a promotion list.

SEC. 12. That for the purposes of distribution and promotion in the Marine Corps grade and rank shall be considered as meaning the same.

SEC. 13. That the Major General Commandant shall be appointed as now provided by law.

SEC. 14. That the selection board recommending colonels for promotion shall recommend the number of officers of the rank of colonel directed by the Secretary of the Navy for appointment as head of each staff department, and the names of officers so recommended, approved by the President, shall be placed on an eligible list for such appointment, one list for each department. As vacancies occur hereafter, heads of staff departments shall be appointed for 4 years from officers whose names appear on the eligible lists for the respective departments.

SEC. 15. That section 7 of the act of March 4, 1925 (43 Stat.L. 1272; U.S.C., title 34, secs. 624, 630, 663, 669, and 684), and all other laws and parts of laws, insofar as the same are inconsistent with or in conflict with the provisions of this act, are, except as they apply to officers heretofore retired thereunder, hereby repealed.

SEC. 16. That officers of the Marine Corps in the ranks or grades of lieutenant colonel and major shall not be retired because of not being on a promotion list or on an eligible list for appointment as head of a staff department, and shall be eligible for consideration for promotion by promotion boards without regard to completion of 28 and 21 years' service, respectively. Upon promotion or advancement after the approval of this act, with the exception of the Major General Commandant, heads of staff departments with the rank of brigadier general, an officer of the Marine Corps who may be appointed as Judge Advocate General of the Navy, and commissioned warrant officers, which officers shall receive the pay and allowances provided by law for their rank, commissioned officers of the Marine Corps shall receive the pay and allowances of the grade or rank from which promoted or advanced: Provided, That officers in the grades or ranks stated shall receive the pay and allowances of the grades or ranks in which serving upon attaining the number on the lineal lists of such grades or ranks, as follows: Major general, 2 (excluding the Major General Commandant); brigadier general, 4; colonel, 35 (common list); lieutenant colonel, 38 (common list); major, 80; captain, 254; first lieutenant, 220.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DARDEN].

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I trust the gentlemen will give me their attention. I promise I shall not trespass long upon the time of the House in the consideration of this matter. I regret that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOLAND] is unable to be here today. He was chairman of the subcommittee that heard this bill. He is so well acquainted with it that it is with hesitation that I attempt to take his place and present it to the Committee.

You heard the argument dealing with the Navy. This bill not only seeks to do for the Marine Corps what the previous bill did for the Navy, but it goes a step beyond that. Never in its history has selection been applied to the Marine Corps, except in the selection of its highest officers. Heretofore practically all promotion has been by seniority. The Navy abandoned this system almost 18 years ago. The system as applied to the Navy has worked excellently, and it is for that reason that we are anxious to apply it to the Marine Corps, not only because it has been a good system, but because the Marine Corps is an integral part of the naval service and should be governed by personnel laws applicable to the Navy. The Marine Corps is a small organization. There are only 1,024 officers in the corps, and on the 1st of July next there will be 16,000 enlisted men. There are now slightly under that number of enlisted personnel.

The Marine Corps finds itself subject to the most dangerous disease that can affect any military organization, and that is that its officers are well over age. The officers now comprise 1 Major General Commandant, 2 major generals of the line, 6 brigadier generals of the line, 3 brigadier generals of the staff, 44 lieutenant colonels and 34 colonels, 124 majors, 329 captains, 275 first lieutenants, and 206 second lieutenants. There is in the Marine Corps no separate line. All the officers are on one lineal list. It has no staff, as has the Navy. This bill, if passed, will apply to all the officers of the Marine Corps and affect them alike.

I want to leave the bill now for a short time and tell you why we feel it is so necessary that this legislation be enacted and be enacted promptly. The Marine Corps, being a small organization, has to be ready for service with the fleet at any time to be effective. Its duties, by nature, are very arduous. They require not only young men in the enlisted personnel but they require young men in the officer personnel, young men who are ready and willing at all times to enter the most difficult field service in connection with operations with the fleet. Unless the Marine Corps is in this condition, there is no use having it at all. Unless it is prepared for instant service, and unless it is well prepared and officered by young men who are capable and able to stand the rigors of a difficult campaign, we might as well abolish it, because it is neither ready nor is it efficient.

It has had a glorious history. Many of you know that probably as well as I. It is older than the Constitution itself. It has never been found wanting in case of emergency and it has always acquitted itself with honor. It has reflected credit on the United States, and it will do so in the future if we are prepared to give it the legislation it needs and that it deserves, in order to correct the present situation.

I want to read very briefly what General Pershing had to say about the question of young officer personnel. He gave it close attention. Immediately upon his arrival in Europe he was faced with this particular problem, and in July 1917 he cabled the War Department in reference to the situation. I shall now read a part of that cable:

> My observation of the British and French Armies and most exacting, arduous service at the front, fully convinces me that only officers in full mental and physical vigor should be sent here. Contrary course means certain inefficiency in our service and possible later humiliation of officers concerned. General officers must undergo extreme effort in personal supervision of operations in trenches. Very few British or French division commanders are over 45 or brigadiers over 40. We have too much at stake to risk inefficiency through mental or physical defects. Strongly recommend condition be fully considered in making high appointments, and suggest that no officer of whatever rank be sent here for active service who is not strong and robust in every particular. Officers selected for appointment general officer of line should be those with experience in actively commanding troops. Officers not fulfilling above conditions can be usefully employed at home training troops.

General Pershing never altered his opinion as to this vital problem. In a letter to the Secretary of War in October 1917 he again emphasizes it by saying:

> Both the British and French higher officers emphasize in the strongest terms the necessity of assigning younger and more impressionable men to command brigades and divisions. We would commit a grave error if we fail to profit by their experience. A division commander must get down into the trenches with his men and is at all times subject to severe hardships. * * * The French Army was filled with dead timber at the beginning of the war, and many French failures are due to this fact. General officers must be fitted physically and mentally, must have experience, and must have go and initiative if they are to fill positions fraught with such momentous consequences to the Nation and which involve the lives of thousands, perhaps hundreds of thousands, of our men.

Then, after the great conflict had passed and he had had an opportunity to view the matter more comprehensively, General Pershing had this to say in his book:

After visits to units that had lately joined, further attention was given to qualifications necessary in our higher officers. The British and French both had commented unfavorably upon the evident inactivity of many of them and even upon the infirmities of some of the division commanders who had been sent over during the preceding months to observe and study conditions at the front. It had been proved over and over again by the Allies that only the strongest could stand the continuous and nerve-racking strain of battle. * * *

Now, gentlemen, that is what is required in an effective fighting organization. That is what we have always intended and expected the Marine Corps to be, and, unless we are prepared to enable it to meet that test now, we are doing it a great injustice.

I have quoted from General Pershing because, as you know, his words are entitled to great respect. He commanded the American forces in the greatest struggle civilization has ever seen. If you will glance back over the pages of history, you will find he was justified in making these statements.

Julius Caesar was consul at 41, and during the next 10 years was governor of the western provinces of Rome, the scene of his brilliant military successes. He returned to Rome a little after 50, and, of course, as you know, was assassinated several years later.

Alexander the Great was a young man when he overran Europe and Asia, dying at 33, complaining that no more worlds were left to conquer.

Hannibal was 25 when he took command of the Army and Province of Spain. He was 29 when he crossed the Pyrenees and crushed the Roman legions at the Trebbia, and at the age of 31 he was the greatest victory of his career at Canne.

But let us turn from these ancient figures to those leaders of more recent times. Out of the terror and horror of the French Revolution stepped Napoleon, a boy of 26, who gathered around himself the tattered remnants of the armies of France and started on that career which was within a few years to make him master of Europe.

At 27 he commanded the French armies in Italy against Austria and by a series of brilliant campaigns defeated the Austrians who had regarded him as but an accidental leader of an ineffective mob. Officered by old men, they were no match for that genius of 27, who surrounded himself with officers who were young, energetic, and capable.

Genghis Kahn, of course, was a general much younger than that, but was a general also much older than that. It is a remarkable thing that he, starting from the plateau of Asia, a commander of a large body of troops in his very early twenties, he knocked at the gateway of Europe with cavalry, which has never been excelled and which was commanded by men under 30. Later he carried on his operations from his headquarters in Asia, 2,000 miles away, by pony express.

We come down to later times and we find that the leaders in our Civil War were comparatively young men. Lee was somewhat an exception. Lee left the service of the United States at 54 to take command of the armies of Virginia and the armies of the South, but Jackson was in command at 37. Mosby and Stuart were both under 30 at the outbreak of the war. Sheridan was 30. McClellan was 35 and Grant 37 at the outbreak of hostilities. All of these young men, within the time of 4 years, became great leaders in the field.

I want to read a few lines from General Hunter Liggett's book with reference to young men in command in the A.E.F. General Liggett said:

Some of the finest officers we had went to pieces under the emotional strain of command, fearful at the best, intensified here by the knowledge that they were leading troops only partially trained against the best organized and most skillful man-killing machine ever set going. * * * They were much more frequent among older officers of higher rank than among lieutenants, captains, and majors who had physical discomfort added to responsibility.

It is entirely reasonable for us to suppose that the future is going to be even more difficult than the past. Our armies are rapidly becoming mechanized. Not only must they be commanded by young men with an agile, young body, but they must be commanded by men with young minds.

I want to read you what Major General Russell, who presented this case for the Marine Corps at the time he appeared before the Naval Affairs subcommittee which had this bill under consideration, said. He is a man of illustrious service. He is now head of the Marine Cops. I do not know of any person in the United States more entitled or better qualified to speak in its behalf than is General Russell. He said:

Because of the active nature of its peace-time service and the necessity for its immediate readiness to support the fleet in the event of war, the Marine Corps must have a vigorous officer personnel. It has not a great overhead establishment or other duties in which to absorb officers not up to the physical standard of active field duty. At present the colonels range in age from 52 to 62, the lieutenant colonels from 49 to 57, the majors from 38 to 56. Seventy percent of the captains are over 40 years of age, and 37 percent of the first lieutenants are over 35 years of age. There are 43 captains over 50 and 18 first lieutenants over 40.

These latter officers are the combat leaders and must be physically equal or better than the men they lead or the full advantage of the physical quality of the troops cannot be obtained. Our enlisted men are young and vigorous and their officers must be physically capable of direct leadership. Troops can be no more active than their leaders. For this reason the over-age condition of these grades strikes at the very heart of the efficiency of the corps, namely, its fighting effectiveness. Therefore I refer to it in such strong terms.

My opinion is not based on conjecture but on the experience of the Marine Corps in its field operations in recent years, which conclusively proved that many of our officers are too old for active field service. Unless some improvement is made in this condition, the efficiency of the Marine Corps in active operations in the future will be seriously impaired.

In this connection I should like to point out that the Marine Corps is the only one of the three services of our national defense that has not received the benefit of commissioned-personnel legislation.

The present method of promotion in the Marine Corps, with slight variation, is one of seniority. An officer can be promoted to the next higher grade only when a vacancy occurs therein. The rate of promotion depends entirely upon the number of vacancies, caused by such variable factors as retirement, death, resignation, discharge, and authorized increase or decrease in strength or change in distribution. One of the inherent faults of this method of promotion is its dependence upon the variable factors just mentioned, and, further, as a result of experience, the inability to promote the smart, efficient officer over others who lack these qualifications.

The correct system of promotion should stimulate an officer's interest in his profession, arouse his energies, and bring forth his best efforts. Only the entirely fit should be promoted.

That is the statement General Russell made before our subcommittee.

Upon referring to the chart which appears upon page 1344 of the hearings, which I want to insert in my remarks, we will find that the average age of our colonels is 55; of our lieutenant colonels, 52; of our majors, 45; of our captains, 42; of our first lieutenants, 34; and of our second lieutenants, 27; and, mind you, this is an average age.

The chart referred to is as follows:

The details as to ages are shown in the following table:

[1] Over-age.

The increase of the average ages in the next 10 years shows that the situation is going from bad to worse, notwithstanding the fact that in the meantime many of the older officers appointed during the war will have passed off the active list.

It is the opinion of those best qualified to speak that 7 years per grade is the most reasonable number of years that should be allowed to each grade above second lieutenant. On that basis a first lieutenant should not be over 28, a captain over 35, a major over 42, a lieutenant colonel over 49, a colonel over 56.

I will show you a little later that the officers who commanded the Marine Corps as a part of the Second Division in the A.E.F., were about this age. If we adopt this as a premise, and I believe it is a sound one, this is the condition of the present officers of the corps: 29 percent of the colonels are over age; 98 percent of the lieutenant colonels of the present corps are over age. Seventy-two percent of the majors, 100 percent of the captains, and 99 percent of the first lieutenants, in what we call our finest fighting unit, are over age. Unless we are prepared to remedy this situation, and to remedy it immediately, we should disband the corps rather than delude ourselves by believing that it is either an available or an effective fighting unit.

While we are on the subject, it will be interesting to review briefly the ages of some of the Marine officers who served overseas during the World War with the A.E.F. and who wrote another brilliant chapter in the history of this great corps. Maj. Gen. John A. Lejuene, who commanded the Second Division, was 51; and Brig. Gen. Wendell V. Neville, who commanded the Marine Brigade, Second Division, was 48. The lieutenant colonels in the staff of the Fourth Marine Brigade averaged 40 years. Colonel Feland, the regimental commander of the Fifth Marines, was 49, while the age of two colonels who served as regimental commanders of the Sixth Marines, was 50 and 46, respectively. The average age of the majors who commanded the Fourth Machine Gun Battalion, Second Division, was 35. The battalion commander Fifth Machine Gun Battalion was a major of 27.

Today the average age, not only of the colonels, but also of the lieutenant colonels of the corps is more than the age of Major General Lejeune at the time he commanded the Second Division. The average age of the majors today is 16 years above the average age of the majors who commanded the Fourth Marine Machine Gun Brigade of the Second Division, American Expeditionary Forces.

At present, with promotion by seniority, it will take over 5 years to pass through the grade of second lieutenant, over 10 years to pass through the grade of first lieutenant, over 18 years to pass through the grade of captain, over 15 years to pass through the grade of major, 7 years to pass through the grade of lieutenant colonel, and 9 years to pass through the grade of colonel. This is more than 25 years beyond the time when a man will be retired from the Marine Corps because of age.

At the rate at which promotions were made last year it would require 55 years to pass through the grade of captain in the Marine Corps and 25 years to pass through the rank of major, making 80 years for these two grades alone. Of course, the result will be that practically all of the higher officers would go out at one time and then the Marine Corps would start again with very young men and go through the same experience they are now passing through.

Promotion by seniority is poor at best. There is no earthly reason to suppose that because one officer happens to be commissioned one day earlier than another, or maybe only a few minutes earlier than another, that he will until retirement be the more capable of the two. That one graduates number 1 in his class in 1934 does not mean that in 1944 or 10 years later he will still be the most capable officer. Too many things can happen. He may or may not be industrious. He may or may not take advantage of the opportunities presented. Promotion by seniority is a system so stupid and so costly in military organizations that those which adhere to it not only will perish, but they deserve to perish.

The Marine Corps has long recognized the danger of the plan and many attempts have been made to secure its change.

I have given you the general background. This bill proposes to correct the present situation by setting up a selection board composed of six officers from the active list, who are to pass on all promotions. It does not add a single dollar of expense nor does it add a single officer to the 1,024 now in the Marine Corps; it merely redistributes the officers somewhat in their respective grades and provides a system of selection for the Marine Corps similar to that which now exists in the Navy. It is proposed that the names of those officers eligible for promotion be put on a list and certified by the Secretary of the Navy to the board for selection. After a careful examination of their record, their physical fitness, their moral fitness, their professional fitness, they may be recommended for promotion by the board. Not only do we propose to do that but we propose also to require that they receive a two-thirds vote of the board before they are advanced.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. DARDEN. We believe that in doing this we will get officer personnel of the highest grade. We propose to promote a second lieutenant after 3 years of service, and we propose, by making a part of this bill some of the sections of the Navy bill which was passed just a few minutes ago, to apply selection from first lieutenant to general. We do not intend, as is provided by the Navy bill, to exempt the high grades. In the Navy admirals are promoted by seniority, but in the Marine Corps we expect to apply the selective system to all officers after they reach the grade of first lieutenant. We are going to redistribute the officers in the Marine Corps. I will not take the time to tell you how we are going to redistribute them, but the result will be that the officer personnel will be allocated to the Marine Corps on the identical basis that the officer personnel is allocated to the Navy, because the two arms are integral parts of one service.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a desperate situation. We have an opportunity, by this legislation, to lay the foundation for a corps even greater than we have known in the past. I hope that the House will see fit to support this proposal.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DARDEN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman explain what is proposed to be done under the new set-up with the excess number of officers who will be in the upper grades?

Mr. DARDEN. There will not be any.

Mr. KNUTSON. They will be retired.

Mr. DARDEN. No; they will not be retired. Section 16 of the bill deals with the situation. There will not be any excess of officers in the upper grades.

Mr. WHITE. There is bound to be in course of time.

Mr. DARDEN. We are not going to create an excessive number of officers in any grade by this bill.

Mr. WHITE. If a large number of the younger officers are going to be advanced in rank it will mean that before many years there will be an excess of officers in the upper grades.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It will bring about a redistribution of the officers. There are not too many officers in the Marine Corps at the present time; the corps is not overofficered, but the officers are badly distributed. Many of them are over age in their present grades.

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, being a marine myself I am naturally very favorable to this bill. It has been very ably explained by the gentleman from Virginia and I will not take any further time on the floor.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration is a Marine Corps personnel bill submitted by the Navy Department and, as introduced in the House, has the approval of the administration. It provides for promotion by selection to the grades of lieutenant colonel, colonel, brigadier general, and major general, and promotion by seniority to the grades of captain and major. Second lieutenants would be promoted to first lieutenants after 3 years' commissioned service. This bill applies to the Marine Corps; the distribution, promotion, retirement, and discharge of its officers, a law which, as modified by the Britten bill of March 3, 1931, has been in effect for the line of the Navy for some 18 years, because the Navy law has been found to be practical and efficient, and because the Marine Corps is a branch of the naval service; most of its service is with the Navy, and most of its future officers will come from the Naval Academy.

The present Marine Corps laws provide primarily for promotion by seniority from second lieutenant up to and including the grade of colonel. Each officer, as a vacancy occurs, is promoted after prescribed examinations—moral, professional, and physical—but there is no method of promoting only the able, zealous, and efficient officer. Those less able can and do qualify for promotion under the obsolete and inefficient requirements of the present laws and must be promoted. Only a few are retired because of physical disability or are eliminated because of moral failure. Only one officer has failed professionally in the last 8 years. Colonels are promoted by selection, and only in this grade is there enforced retirement because of failure to be on a promotion or eligible list.

Under the present laws the average rate of promotion is so slow that a junior officer must spend most of his service in the lower grades, and can reach the higher grades only a short time before retirement for age.

During the last 10 years, the average promotion rate to pass through each grade was as follows: Second lieutenant, 5.4 years; first lieutenant, 10.4 years; captain, 18.2 years; major, 15.5 years; lieutenant colonel, 7 years; and colonel, 9 years—a total of more than 25 years beyond the time when an officer must be retired for age. Last year there were so few promotions that, in future at the same rate, it would require 55 years to pass through the grade of captain and 25 years to pass through the grade of major.

This bill, if enacted into law, when its provisions become fully effective and when the selection system is extended for the Navy to junior lieutenant, as is proposed, will correct the present stagnation of promotion and over-age of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps, and will result in average service in each grade of about 7 years, which is what it should be.

Because of stagnation and lack of promotion in the Marine Corps, 29 percent of the colonels, 98 percent of the lieutenant colonels, 72 percent of the majors, and practically 100 percent of the captains and first lieutenants are now over-age for their respective grades. In 10 years without relief, 88 percent of the colonels and 100 percent of all other junior officers now in the corps will be over-age in grade.

During the period from 1899 to 1920, the Marine Corps was increased from time to time sufficiently to provide for promotion of its officer personnel at nearly the desired rate.

During the World War a great many Reserve officers and noncommissioned officers were given temporary commissions as in the Navy; and by the act of June 4, 1920, many of these were permanently commissioned, all of them in the rank of captain, first lieutenant, and second lieutenant. Their present status is a 14 years' increase of age without corresponding increase of rank. Many of them have held the same rank for this entire period.

As a result of the war it has been found that the distribution of officers in the various grades was obsolete. There were too few of high rank either to perform duties commensurate with their responsibility and experience or to provide a proper flow of promotion from the lower to the upper grades.

This condition has not so far been corrected in the Marine Corps, but it is provided for in this bill.

The mission of the Marine Corps in a national emergency requires that a large portion of the Regular Establishment be immediately available for overseas duty with the fleet and that the peace establishment be rapidly expanded to meet the large operating, supply, procurement, and training problems involved. These war-time needs demand that the active list be composed only of officers physically equal to the rigors of a campaign, primarily and essentially troop leaders, thoroughly trained in the duties of their ranks.

The peace mission requires intensive training for a high state of readiness for war and, if necessary, to furnish troops for active field service for the protection of American interests abroad and for minor emergencies at home.

The proposed legislation will permit the Marine Corps to develop potential leaders capable of carrying on its assigned mission in peace and war. It is essential that for the arduous service required, young, able-bodied, and efficient officers be made available.

The first 15 sections of this bill provide a complete system which will place the Marine Corps under Navy rather than Army personnel laws, which is sound and appropriate. The cost involved would amount to an annual increase of $131,000. In ordinary times this expense would be eminently justified. Unfortunately, present conditions seem to preclude the passage of this bill should it require additional cost to the Government. Therefore section 16, a saving clause, has been included to prevent any increased cost by limiting involuntary retirements to the grade of colonel, and by restricting increased pay by reason of promotion. However, the serious state of stagnation will be considerably relieved; the more efficient and deserving officers will be promoted; and many officers will assume new ranks and duties more in keeping with their age, experience, and length of service.

To sum up briefly, this bill applies the Navy system to the Marine Corps and provides:

(a) For no increase of cost to the Government and for no additional officers.

(b) For promotion by selection to the grades of lieutenant colonel, colonel, brigadier general, and major general.

(c) For promotion to captain and major by seniority.

(d) For extension of the selection system for the lower grades should such extension be authorized for the Navy.

(e) For promotion of second lieutenants after 3 years' commissioned service.

(f) For readjusment of grades to conform to the needs of the Marine Corps.

(g) For retirement of nonselected colonels after 35 years' service instead of at 56 years of age.

This year legislation has been passed which provides for building our Navy to treaty strength. I call particular attention to this, because satisfaction in having provided for such a construction program may dim the realization that material preparedness is valueless without personnel preparedness—the provision for adequate, well-trained personnel, composed of vigorous, intelligent young men, properly officered. Every organization always reflects the character of its officers. The high efficiency and morale of the Marine Corps cannot survive if the quality of its officer personnel is impaired by over-age, by retarded promotion, and by lack of reward. These restrictions now exist because of the application of obsolete and inefficient laws. It is an urgent duty that we take remedial action as is now proposed in this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN] such time as he may desire.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, like the gentleman from Texas, I desire to commend our colleague from Virginia [Mr. DARDEN] for the excellent way in which he has presented this splendid bill. The gentleman from Texas is a former marine and knows their problems. During the World War I happen to have had a brother who was in the Marine Corps stationed down here at Quantico, Va., and second-hand I have heard a great deal about their problems also. If you take the name from the Marine Corps and apply the situation to any other name, I do not think you can ever successfully defend the seniority plan for any organization, and you can include Congress in that if you want to. Men are especially adapted to the particular grade that they fill. It is not necessarily because of their age. There are other contributing agencies and elements that make them desirable for the particular grade that they occupy. I think it is wise that we follow now with the Marine Corps, and possibly some of these days with the Army, the precedent that the Navy set some 18 years ago when they, partially at least, set aside their seniority rule and put their officers on the basis of selection.

There is no use arguing the glories of the Marine Corps here on the floor of the House. Perhaps we may say that the American marine is the finest fighting human machine that the modern world knows. This bill here will simply perfect that organization until it will continue in the future the glorious past it has thus far rendered to this Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I feel like an interloper, coming into this discussion. I have never been a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, either in this body or in the other. I am so intensely interested in military legislation, having had experience with it on the Military Committee in another body, that I cannot refrain from making a few suggestions upon an occasion of this kind.

The Congress, generally speaking, has taken a quite different attitude toward the Navy and the Marine Corps than it has taken over a long period of years toward the Army. Students of military history and of the debates in the Congress with respect to military subjects will generally find that the average citizen in the United States and the average Member of Congress is perfectly ready and willing to admit that he could not command a battleship, but there are thousands and thousands of civilians who have been confident, as a general rule, at least up until the World War, that they could command a regiment of infantry. It has been the tradition of the American people that the command of soldiers was a comparatively easy thing, and that was the cause of getting us into many wars, causing the loss of thousands and thousands of lives and the expenditure of billions out of the Treasury.

It was not until 1920, when the National Defense Act was revised, that any important steps were taken to give the Army a chance to govern the Army in its interior organization and to bring it up-to-date. You would be surprised—and I am saying this as raising a contrast between the way Congress has treated the Navy, wisely so, I believe, as compared with the way it has treated the Army—to know that prior to the World War, indeed upon the date on which we went into the World War, the laws of the United States prescribed the exact number of men that should constitute a company of infantry. There should be 1 first sergeant, 9 line sergeants, 10 or 12 corporals, so many privates (first class), and so many privates, and the Army was not permitted in its interior organization to change its own tactical organization in the slightest degree without an act of Congress.

I have sat with a committee in the other House and listened to a debate between Members of that body lasting 3 hours as to whether a company of Signal Corps troops should be increased by the addition of one technical sergeant. That all had to be wiped out when we went into the World War. It caused unutterable confusion. The same thing is true with respect to promotions in the Army.

Some of us were exceedingly anxious back in 1920 to install the selection system of promotions in the Army, but an overwhelming majority of our colleagues in the Congress said, "No; we cannot trust the Army to run its own promotion system." The Navy is being trusted, as it should be. You are giving to these selection boards, as you should, the power to promote officers. You do not let the Secretary of the Navy have anything to do with the matter. Not even the President of the United States has anything to do with the promotion of officers in the Navy. You are now going to make it that way in the Marine Corps. Personally I believe in it, and I would welcome the day when the Congress of the United States would confer this trust upon the Army and let the Army select its officers for promotion. There is a hump in the promotion list of the Army worse than now exists in the Marine Corps.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. As a matter of fact, it was stated by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS], in presenting the military appropriations bill, that there are lieutenants 64 years of age in the Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but of course they are exceptions. The average age of the Army officer grade by grade is going up by leaps and bounds. They are traveling along the same road with respect to age as the Marine Corps is now traveling, and the Army is reaching that same point of over-aged men, especially in the lower grades. I express the hope, in taking advantage of this opportunity, that something may be done for the Army in the same way.

Mr. DARDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. DARDEN. Does not the gentleman believe that that is the fault of the Army rather than of the Congress? Does not the gentleman think that failure to enact such legislation is due to pressure brought on Members of the Congress by the officer personnel of the Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That has not been my experience. I think the Army would welcome it.

Mr. DARDEN. I am just asking the question, because I do not know.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Army has always been governed by law down to the details of its interior organization to an extent that the Navy and Marine Corps never have been, and one reason for the extraordinary effectiveness of the Marine Corps as an expeditionary force is that there has never been any law of Congress governing its interior organization.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Has that matter ever been studied in the appropriate committee? It seems to me the gentleman's statements are very pertinent, and I believe the matter should be gone into very carefully by the proper committees of Congress so as to permit the consideration of a promotion bill similar to the bills for the Navy and the Marine Corps.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have not had the honor of being a member of the House Committee on Military Affairs. But in the other body, in the Committee on Military Affairs on which I served, the matter was given great study, and many of us wanted to do this, but we ran up against a stone wall in the Congress itself at that time.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. JAMES. I may say that, of course there is no second lieutenant in the Army 64 years of age, because they have to retire at 64.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If the gentleman will yield, if my memory does not serve me falsely, that is my recollection of a statement made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

Mr. JAMES. Well, that is not true.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I shall only take a minute of the time to suggest that most of us on this side are in hearty accord with this legislation. It is something which the Marine Corps should have had 10 years ago. It is something they are very glad to get now. It will improve the corps; it will improve the morale of the officers, even if those who cannot be promoted will ultimately go out. If anything, the Marine Corps will be more efficient in the future than it has been in the past, and we all know how efficient it has been prior to the war, during the war, and since the war.

I think that, man for man, the Marine Corps is the greatest fighting force in the world. We had instances during the World War where a marine would throw his steel helmet off and go dashing over the top and get shot. He did not care for his helmet. What he wanted to do was to fight. This was a typical American attitude; and if there is a military force in this country that typifies American youth, it is the Marine Corps.

Legislation of this character would have been enacted into law 10 years ago but for the influence of two or three officers, particularly one officer who did not want it because he was afraid he would not be selected up. He was afraid he would never be selected up, although he had a lot of influence. Frankly, I disagree with my distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], when he says that it was the Congress that stopped selection in the Army. The real cause was the pull of a few individuals in the Army who reached Congress and prevented selection. Selection should prevail in the Army just as it is going to prevail from now on in the Marine Corps, and just as it has prevailed for 18 years in the Navy, because it means efficiency. It stands for reward of merit; and if a man is good, if he is capable, if his superiors like him, if he is an outstanding officer, he ought to be promoted. If he does not have all these qualifications, he should be retired and put off the pay roll, so he can make room for some other youngster who comes up from below, and who is efficient and will deliver when the time comes for him to do so.

I hope it may not be necessary to use any more time on this measure. We on this side are for it, and so far as we are concerned you may begin the reading of the bill now.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill may be now read for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That of the authorized number of commissioned officers above the grade of colonel, one shall be the Major General Commandant, one half shall be brigadier generals, and the remainder shall be major generals.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Goss: Page 2, line 3, after the word "Commandant", strike out the words "one half" and insert the words "two thirds."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, we have just adopted the first section of the bill which puts the Marine Corps, so far as distribution of officers in grade and rank is concerned, on the same basis as the Navy.

Unlike the Navy bill, this bill for the Marine Corps attempts to redistribute the officers in grade and rank, and when the Chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee had the floor a few moments ago he frankly stated to the House he was going to bring in a bill next year redistributing the officers in grade and rank.

If this amendment is adopted, as I hope it will be, I am going to offer an amendment to the next section which will make section 3 conform to present law, and then next year, when we bring in the Navy bill, the Marine Corps bill can be considered in the light of the Navy bill and with the same distribution of the commissioned officers in grades.

If we do not do this, if this is the final bill for the Marine Corps, then section 16 should be stricken. However, I do not believe, in view of the fact that it has not gone to the Budget, it should be stricken.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am in accord with the amendment offered by the gentleman, and I should like an approval from the Budget and to see section 16 stricken out. Then that would make a perfect bill. But, unfortunately, it cannot pass the Budget, and section 16 must remain in the bill.

Mr. GOSS. I shall not offer an amendment to do that, although I think, in view of the redistribution of officers in grade and rank, we should do that.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I think we should take care of that in the future. I am in accord with the gentleman's two amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the heads of staff departments shall be general officers while so serving, in addition to the number of general officers otherwise herein provided, one with the rank, pay, and allowances of a major general, and the remainder with the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier general. They shall be carried in the grades or ranks from which appointed.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 4, strike out section 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the head of staff departments shall be general officers while so serving in addition to the number of general officers otherwise herein provided with the rank, pay, and allowances of brigadier general. They shall be carried in the grade or rank from which appointed."

Mr. GOSS. I will say that this is to follow the same idea as section 3, and leave the matter of distribution the same as it is now.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. We have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That promotion to major general of the line shall be by seniority from brigadier generals of the line.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 13, strike out the words "by seniority."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That commissioned service of officers for the purpose of this act shall consist of all commissioned service on the active list of the Marine Corps, whether under a temporary or permanent appointment, and all commissioned service on active duty in the Marine Corps Reserve.

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 23, after the word "reserve", insert "and the National Naval Volunteers."

Mr. BRITTEN. I would like to ask the gentleman how many officers would be affected by that?

Mr. DARDEN. I know of one, but I think there may be others. It is a fair thing and will do no injustice to any officer in the Marine Corps.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AYRES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to make inquiry as to the purpose of section 4. I was on my feet endeavoring to get recognition when we got through with section 4. What is the purpose of striking out the word "seniority" and making it read—

That promotion to major general of the line shall be from brigadier generals of the line.

Mr. DARDEN. The purpose of that is to advance the brigadier generals by selection rather than by seniority. The bill as it came up provided that they should be advanced by seniority. We felt they should be advanced just as the colonels and lieutenant colonels and other officers, that they should go to the office of major general on the basis of merit, and not on the basis of seniority. We are applying the principle throughout the bill to all the officers of the Marine Corps.

Mr. BRITTEN. The reason the bill came in this form was because the brigadier generals and the major generals took rank with the lower and upper half, so called, and the contention was that all rear admirals were promoted by selection first, and then went up automatically from the lower half to the upper half.

Mr. AYRES of Kansas. As a matter of fact, they do now automatically.

Mr. DARDEN. Yes; and we insisted on brigadier generals being promoted by selection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That selection boards shall consist of officers on the active list of the Marine Corps, the composition and procedure of the boards to be determined by the Secretary of the Navy.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 24, after the word "of", insert "not less than six", and, on page 3, line 2, after the word "Navy", strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no officer shall be recommended for advancement unless he shall have received the recommendation of not less than two thirds of the members of the board."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That section 1493, Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 34, sec. 665), is so far amended in its application to the Marine Corps as to require that no officer shall be promoted to a higher grade, excepting in the case provided in section 1494, Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 34, sec. 566), until he has been examined by a board of naval medical officers and pronounced physically fit to perform all his duties at sea and in the field.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 16, strike out "566" and insert "666."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That the requirement of sea service in grade shall not apply to promotion of officers of the Marine Corps, and officers in the upper four sevenths of the grades of colonel, lieutenant colonel, and major, respectively, as established by the first section of this act, shall be eligible for consideration by selection boards and for promotion without regard to length of service in grade.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 3, line 20, strike out "Corps" and insert "Corps;".

Page 3, line 22, strike out "of colonel, lieutenant colonel, and major, respectively," and insert "below brigadier general, subject to selection."

Page 4, line 1, after the word "grade", strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no officer of the Marine Corps shall be ineligible for consideration for promotion by reason of completion of length of commissioned service until he shall have once been considered by a selection board."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. That officers of the Marine Corps in the ranks or grades of lieutenant colonel and major shall not be retired because of not being on a promotion list or on an eligible list for appointment as head of a staff department, and shall be eligible for consideration for promotion by promotion boards without regard to completion of 28 and 21 years' service, respectively. Upon promotion or advancement after the approval of this act, with the exception of the Major General Commandant, heads of staff departments with the rank of brigadier general, an officer of the Marine Corps who may be appointed as Judge Advocate General of the Navy, and commissioned warrant officers, which officers shall receive the pay and allowances provided by law for their rank, commissioned officers of the Marine Corps shall receive the pay and allowances of the grade or rank from which promoted or advanced: Provided, That officers in the grades or ranks stated shall receive the pay and allowances of the grades or ranks in which serving upon attaining the number on the lineal lists of such grades or ranks, as follows: Major general, 2 (excluding the Major General Commandant); brigadier general, 4; colonel, 35 (common list); lieutenant colonel, 38 (common list); major, 80; captain, 254; first lieutenant, 220.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 5, line 23, strike out the word "promotion" and insert the word "selection."

Page 5, line 25, after the word "years'" insert the word "commissioned."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. THOMPSON of Texas: Page 6, line 18, after the figures "24", insert:

"SEC. 17. Section 4 of the act approved February 28, 1925 (43 Stat.L. 1081; U.S.C., title 34, sec. 753), as amended, is hereby amended to the extent that hereafter the minimum age limit for enlistment in the Naval Reserve or Marine Corps Reserve shall be the same as that for enlistment in the Regular Navy."

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this is to make the enlistment age in the Marine Corps and Naval Reserve the same as in the regular service. As it is there is a year of inequality.

The amendment provides for an amendment to the Naval Reserve Act to the extent that hereafter the minimum-age limit for enlistment in the Naval Reserve or Marine Corps Reserve shall be the same as that for enlistment in the regular Navy and not the minimum age of 18 required for the reserve at present.

The enlistment age for the Navy and Marine Corps is 17 years and if this change is made it will enable the Navy and Marine Corps to enlist young men in the reserve with the same age requirements as the regular service (with their parents consent, of course).

The present law requiring as it does an 18-year minimum age limit and at the same time providing for the appointment to the Naval Academy each year of 25 members of the Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve where the maximum age for entrance is 20 years rather defeats its purpose, that of an appointment to the Naval Academy as a reward for faithful and interested service in the Reserve, as there is no time to judge the qualifications of the applicant.

The minimum age limit for the National Guard is 18 years without parents consent.

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Chairman, we accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Take the last paragraph on page 6. In view of the other two amendments we adopted on this redistribution in grades and ranks, should not this be changed to conform with that? I think the status is the 1–2–6, and the bill attempted to make it 1–4–4. We have held the status 1–2–6. Therefore, the brigadier should be stepped up to 6.

Mr. DARDEN. Six brigadier generals of the line.

Mr. GOSS. That is right.

Mr. DARDEN. And you have dropped one major general officer in your operation?

Mr. GOSS. Yes. So there ought to be 6 brigadiers, and that would leave 1 commandant, 2 major generals, and 6 brigadiers, as it now exists.

Mr. DARDEN. Three brigadiers of the staff. That is right.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Goss: In line 15, after the word "general", strike out the figure "4" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "6."

Mr. GOSS. That will then conform to the amendments earlier adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOYLAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H.R. 6803, and pursuant to House Resolution 348, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

APPROPRIATION FOR SPECIAL ACTS RELATING TO COTTON, CATTLE, AND DAIRY PRODUCTS

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House Joint Resolution 345, to provide funds to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the purposes of the acts approved April 21, 1934, and April 7, 1934, relating, respectively, to cotton, to cattle, and dairy products, and for other purposes, be in order immediately after the reading of the Journal on Thursday next, and that it occupy a privileged status as any other general appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN]?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, is that the bill about which the gentleman spoke to me?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is the bill about which I spoke to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANCHARD. How long does the gentleman expect that will occupy?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It should take only a short time, because it is to carry out two acts of this Congress already passed and to make a little appropriation for printing your speeches.

Mr. BLACK. Reserving the right to object, on what day is that asked for consideration?

Mr. BUCHANAN. On Thursday.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, Thursday is District day. We had a great deal of trouble with the old-age-pension bill on last District day. We had a filibuster on that bill. If the gentleman will say this matter will only occupy a few minutes, I will not object, but otherwise I am compelled to object.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It will only take a few minutes, I am sure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, immediately after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, I be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes on proposed Indian legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

RESTORE THE WORLD MARKET TO THE FARMER AND THE BUSINESS MAN

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, there has perhaps not been a time during the last 60 years at least in which sound, calm, and deliberate thought and judgment was needed more than at the present time and during the present economic crisis. The remedy to be applied by any administration at any particular time must be suited to the situation and condition which confronts the country. A wise physician in caring for a patient will, before he drenches his patient with a variety of medicines, first carefully and thoughtfully diagnose the case and determine as best he can just what the trouble or disease is; and once he has correctly determined just what the trouble or disease is, he can then the better determine what the remedy should be and how it should be applied. The progress or status of a disease may require more or less heroic treatment, according to its advanced stage. When Franklin D. Roosevelt became President of the United States he found before him a sick Nation, a country fraught with ills, one that needed not so much at first a pulmotor as it needed a quieting powder. I shall not at this time discuss in detail what all there was that was dumped into the lap of the new President—suffice it to say there was a plenty that came over from Mr. Hoover's administration that needed treatment and attention.

First, the financial structure had largely got away from the people and the Government and was running unbridled under the riding of the few.

During the last Democratic administration of public affairs in the United States the prosperity and the purchasing power of the farmer in America reached its highest stage. During the 8 years of Democratic administration at that time the farmers in America had made more money than they had ever made in any period of three or four times that length of time before. In fact, many had made and prospered more during those 8 years than they had made or prospered during their entire lives. A considerable portion of the farmer's markets and a reasonable prosperity for him hung over and continued for a time after the then incoming Republican administration. After a time, however, the general business conditions of our country became considerably involved; the legislative policies and governmental administrative service reached its highest point of incompetency and inefficiency under the administration of President Hoover. I have no word of criticism to direct against Mr. Hoover. I assume that he may have done that which he believed he ought to do, but I am certain that grievous errors were committed under, by, and during his administration which resulted in bringing the greatest chaos, confusion, and distress to the American people that has ever occurred in the entire history of the Nation.

In my judgment, it was a very serious mistake on the part of Mr. Hoover and his administration when he undertook to relieve and postpone the payment of debts due this country by foreign governments. I recall very well in June 1931, when President Hoover requested the views of the Members of the House and Senate as to whether or not they would endorse and approve the announcement which he made at that time favoring the postponement of the payment of the foreign debts due this country by the foreign governments who were indebted to the United States. In response to the inquiry which came to me from the President at that time, which inquiry was the same as went to other Members of Congress, I stated, "I deem it the first duty of our Government to consider and care for the interests and welfare of the American people. I am not in favor of canceling any debts due America by foreign governments and am opposed to any plan which will eventually lead to that end", and that "American farmers are losing their farms and homes every day by reason of drainage bonds and farm loans against their farms, and unless the payment of their loans and interest thereon can be postponed for a year in order to give them a chance to save their homes, I will be obliged to oppose the postponement to any foreign country the payment of their obligations to the United States." I further stated at that time in my reply that a large number of people in both city and country were unemployed and had difficulty in meeting the taxes and loans against them, and until some relief or assistance was given them I could not favor the bestowing of charity on Europe. I further stated at that time that "The present tariff wall created by recent legislation has been destructive of world trade and I feel it is the duty of the President and Congress to reduce the extremely high tariff to a point that will restore prosperous commercial interchange of the products of American farmers and industry and reestablish a policy that will stop American capital from leaving our own country for foreign fields, thereby throwing American laboring men out of employment, and that restoration of prosperity to America is of prime importance and a nonpartisan matter."

What was happening along about that time near the beginning and throughout Mr. Hoover's administration? The highest tariff law ever created by this country was enacted under President Hoover's direction with a Republican Congress. It was so grossly excessive and unreasonable and unfair that it turned every leading commercial nation of the world to adopt the same policy against us. They felt that since we had lifted the barriers against them until they could no longer trade with us that they had a right to lift their barriers against us, which they proceeded to do, and practically every nation of the world excluded American farm products from the privilege and opportunity to enter the world markets wherever such markets might be found. They believed that they had the right to do to us what we had done to them and proceeded on that theory, and as a result, taking their own conduct with our own, the world's commerce was destroyed and the world's trade was almost entirely broken down.

This tariff wall was raised by Mr. Hoover's administration to this excessive high point under the pretense of protecting the laboring people, and yet the results show that never in the history of the United States Government have more people been unemployed and thrown out of work and more people hungry and unable to secure employment than has been the case while operating under that false and absurd assumption. And under that high tariff act the selfish interests of this country, who seemed to hold the reins, and who happened to be directing the course of President Hoover and his party at that time, sent a bunch of their capital and finances into the foreign fields, where they manufactured machinery and other products of industry on cheap labor, thereby through these selfish interests using the American capital they had made in America to go into foreign fields and compete, not only with our own Government and commerce, but they brought themselves into opposition with the American working man. These same selfish interests that were utilizing the Government under Mr. Hoover's administration, through the gigantic banking interests which they controlled, were selling to the American public foreign securities, bonds, and obligations, which in many instances later proved to be, if not wholly worthless, very greatly and partly so. Thousands of dollars of American citizens' hard-earned money were lost; and in the tragedy many of the smaller banks of our country became involved. The loss to the American public, the American farmer, and the American working man, by this gigantic process and program, has been tremendous and tragic in the loss of homes, and the inability of many an honest man to meet further his just and honest obligations and it makes the very soul of America sick, and many an humble citizen has been, by this process, pauperized.

This picture was not thoroughly seen and understood by all; yet those who did not see this picture as it occurred knew that something tragic and awful had happened to the American farmer and finally to American business in general.

It was this situation that was upon our country when the people of these United States arose and intrusted the leadership of the country to Franklin D. Roosevelt. Into his lap fell this dark and disastrous condition. He found the trade of America destroyed, he found the financial structure tottering, and he found the owners of homes too often in despair; and upon the assembling of Congress by Mr. Roosevelt, in special session under his leadership, he immediately launched a program, the first vital stroke of which was to stop the future breaking of banks and the future pauperizing of thousands of depositors of the banks by establishing, with the approval of Congress, what was known as the "bank moratorium", which closed the banks throughout the country for the purpose of avoiding further crashes and loss, and with the view of reestablishing a more sound financial structure. Almost universally throughout the United States the people then and today know that that move was wise and timely. It perhaps did not satisfy every individual banker in the country. No policy nor program ever satisfied everyone but every thoughtful citizen knows today and realized rather promptly at the time that the move then made by President Roosevelt and the Congress, cooperating with him, saved what there then remained of the banking structure of this country. Had Mr. Roosevelt been President as much even as 2 or 3 years prior to the time he took office, many a depositor of this country would still have had his money that was lost in the crashing days which preceded his taking office as President of the United States.

On December 7, 1932, in addressing a letter to one who afterward became a member of President Roosevelt's Cabinet, in commenting on the recent results of the last Presidential campaign, I said:

> The newly elected President and the incoming Democratic House and Senate have placed tremendous responsibilities upon us. We must relieve the American people from the distress and deplorable condition into which they have unnecessarily been drawn. We must reestablish the trade of our country by reviving our commerce with other leading countries of the world. This can be done, either by conference of our President and his Cabinet directly with the heads of other nations, with a view to paring down a portion of the excessive tariff rates which have been lifted by this country against other nations and which, by them in retaliation, have been lifted against us, or the President might invite the other leading nations of the world to send their representatives to meet in conference with a representative of our own country, for the purpose of mutually agreeing on the reduction of these same tariffs, to be followed up by recommendation for legislative enactment. This country cannot regain the prosperity to which the American people are entitled without the reestablishment of better trade relations. When the commerce of this country begins to move again in exchange for the commerce of other nations, transportation conditions will be improved, employment of men at terminals and in transportation will be increased; and, as men begin to make wages and have employment, consumption of the products of the farm and factories will begin to increase. And as men become employed, naturally they will be granted credit more freely than is the case at the present time—in any event, prosperity will not return until we reestablish the opportunity for marketing and exchanging the products of our fields and factories.

The lower House of Congress has recently passed what is known as the "tariff bill" of this administration, and the matter is now pending in the Senate and will be passed and signed by the President before this Congress adjourns. I regard this piece of legislation as one of the most constructive and most beneficial pieces of legislation, if not the very most important, that this Congress or any other has enacted into law. This will give to the President of the United States the power to negotiate in the interests of the farm products and factories, and will be the means of establishing more friendly trade relations with such countries of the world as we need to deal with. The benefit this legislation will be to the American people will begin to unfold within the next year. It is common sense written into law. It is absolutely necessary for the return of prosperity to the American farmer that he may have a market into which he may go with his products.

I recall very well a statement made by President Roosevelt sometime ago in which he said if he could be right 75 percent of the time he would be well satisfied. The statement in this regard he refers to as having been made previously by Theodore Roosevelt. Without regard to whether anyone should receive credit for such a statement, the fact remains that the expression is a very wise one.

Men of experience in life's affairs well recognize a peculiar trait of human nature so often encountered with, and that is that men who claim perfection and who are always ready to assert that they never make any error usually make more mistakes than anyone else, and usually also contribute but little to the welfare of the human race.

This country is now on its way to recovery and, as I said before, it had drifted into a serious condition under the leadership of Mr. Hoover and those who stood with him, which should have been avoided; but the American people, finding themselves in the depths and agony of distress, turned to the leadership of Roosevelt, and under that leadership, with a Congress that is trying as best they can to be of assistance to him in the recovery of this country from distress, will continue to advance with such a program as will insure to the American farmer and American workingman much improved business conditions and a restoration of the world markets to the American farmer and employment to the willing workingman.

BRONZE TABLET OVER GRAVE OF BRIG. GEN. ROBERT H. DUNLAP

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 276) to authorize the placing of a bronze tablet bearing a replica of the Congressional Medal of Honor upon the grave of the late Brig. Gen. Robert H. Dunlap, United States Marine Corps, in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va., with a Senate amendment, and agree in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Line 10, after "woman", insert "The Government shall be at no expense in connection with the preparation of or the placing of this tablet."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. BRITTEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was agreed to was laid on the table.

SILVER

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio speech made by my colleague the gentleman from Texas, Mr. MARTIN DIES.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

SILVER

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address by Representative MARTIN DIES, of Texas, on Silver, delivered over the National Broadcasting Co.'s hook-up on May 5:

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience, I desire to discuss for a few minutes my bill (H.R. 7581), which passed the House on March 19 by a vote of 258 to 112. This bill provides for the exchange of American agricultural products for silver. Under its terms, the Export Import Bank of Washington, all agricultural marketing associations, and every private exporter are empowered to sell surplus products abroad and accept silver in payment therefor at a premium which shall be not less than 10 percent nor more than 25 percent above the world market price of silver. By utilizing the services of all established and recognized export agencies, whether governmental, cooperative, or purely private, we feel assured that a maximum of surplus products will be disposed of under the operation of the bill. The bill has been amended to include industrial products as well as agricultural surplus products. Against the silver received in payment for surplus products, legal tender silver certificates will be issued, based upon the value at which the silver was accepted, and with these silver certificates the producers will be paid for their products. The general purposes of the bill are, therefore, to dispose of surplus products abroad in a normal and constructive way, retain our dominant position in the export markets of the world, put a safe quantity of new and honest money into circulation and thereby increase the purchasing power of the millions of producers of America who form the backbone of our economic life.

But why accept silver at a premium in payment for our surplus products? The most serious problem that confronts us today is our inability to dispose of surplus products. Everyone is familiar with the unprecedented decline in export trade since 1929. The reasons for this are apparent. Nations who would like to purchase our surplus products are unable to do so because, in the first place, they have no gold to pay for it. The gold of the world is cornered by three nations—the United States, France, and England—and under the monetary policies now in force in those three countries there is little or no probability that in the near future there will be any redistribution of gold.

There is only one other way by which foreign nations can purchase surplus products, and that is by the exchange of their surplus products for ours. This they cannot do because, on account of prohibitive tariff laws, we will not permit the products of other nations to enter the United States. The example furnished by the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill was rapidly followed by other countries, until today the exchange of commodities, products, and goods between nations is practically prohibited. The lowering of our tariff barriers without reciprocal action on the part of other nations would only result in a tremendous increase in our imports with no appreciable addition to our exports. The administration's policy of reciprocal-tariff treaties, concessions, and agreements is necessarily difficult and slow and dependent upon so many complex factors, such as international cooperation, that it is impossible to predict how long it will take to carry it out.

In the meantime, during the slow and difficult process of gold redistribution and mutual tariff treaties and concessions, surplus products are accumulating and depressing the domestic price level.

We must reach one of two conclusions in the United States. We can adopt a purely nationalistic policy in reference to agriculture and industry. This means that we must by legislation restrict and limit production to domestic needs and consumption. If we do this, we drive from agricultural pursuits millions of people now dependent upon farming for a livelihood, and they will be compelled to find other means of subsistence. Is the industrialism of the Nation prepared to absorb this addition to its population? Considering the millions of unemployed, the answer must be, "No." The regimentation by law of agriculture and industry in an effort to adjust production to consumption will be contrary to the spirit and genius of our free institutions, and the resultant benefits, if any, will not compensate us for the sacrifice of fundamental American principles.

But what are the objections to the acceptance of silver in payment for our surplus products? The orthodox gold-standard theorist says that the acceptance of silver at a maximum premium of 25 percent would constitute the dumping of our surplus products on the markets of the world. What about our gold-revaluation policy? Have we not been engaged during the past few months in purchasing gold at a premium in excess of 40 percent above the world market price of gold? In effect, we are accepting gold in payment for surplus products at a 40-percent premium above the world market price. Could it not be charged with equal force and logic that this policy meant that we were depreciating the price of surplus products to the extent of 40 percent, and, therefore, to this extent we were dumping our products on the markets of the world? Now, I am not criticizing the gold-revaluation policy. As a matter of fact, I introduced one of the first gold-revaluation bills in Congress and had a hearing on this bill nearly a year before the administration's gold revaluation bill was passed by Congress. But the failure of the Treasury to issue new currency based upon this increased value of our gold monetary stock deprived us of the full benefits of this act insofar as our internal price level is concerned. The inability to secure gold at any price on account of its scarcity and maldistribution limited the extent to which our export trade was stimulated. Those who say that this bill will constitute dumping to the extent of the premium which we offer for the silver in exchange of surplus products, forget that for 10 years under very conservative administrations we dumped our surplus products on the markets of the world to the extent of 100 percent. In other words, we loaned money to foreign nations to purchase surplus products, and we will never get this money back.

But the ultraconservative, clinging with stubborn tenacity to the gold fetish, says that if we accept silver at a price from 10 to 25 percent higher than the world market price of silver, the taxpayers will eventually have to make good this difference. Even if we sold $2,000,000,000 of surplus products in the next 12 months and accepted silver at the maximum premium of 25 percent, the total amount of the premium would only be $400,000,000. This would be considerably less than the tremendous sums we are now spending on the farm program. But at the same time we would be taking off the markets of the world a billion ounces of silver. Under the operation of the law of supply and demand, the removal of this much silver from the markets of the world would cause the price of silver to rise in excess of the 25-percent premium we offer. But the reactionary answers that there is too much silver in the world to raise its price by removing a billion ounces. Since Columbus discovered America there have been only 15,500,000,000 ounces of silver produced in the world, according to the report of the Federal Reserve Board and the Director of the Mint. Of this amount we can only locate about 9,400,000,000 ounces, and the most liberal estimate puts the amount of silver available for monetary uses at 11,000,000,000 ounces. But we are told that if we pay a premium for silver in exchange for surplus products, we will increase the demand for silver and cause overproduction. Eighty percent of the silver production of the world is a byproduct in the production of other metals, such as gold, copper, lead, and zinc. The increased price of silver without a corresponding increase in the price of other metals with which it is associated would not justify increased production. Even in 1920, when the price of silver was higher than at any time since 1873, the world produced considerably less silver than in 1930 or 1931, when the price of silver was the lowest ever known in the history of the world.

When the price of silver is abnormally low, the producers of silver, like the producers of other commodities under similar circumstances, are compelled to increase production in the desperate attempt to pay the cost of production. The unprecedented low price of silver in the past few years was not due to overproduction but rather to oversupply coming from such unnatural sources as the action of the British Government in forcing India off the silver standard and in melting up her silver coins into bullion and dumping this bullion upon the markets of the world, and the actions of other governments in debasing silver, using substitutes for silver in circulation, reducing the silver content of the divisionary coinage in countries like Great Britain, etc. Therefore, since the supply and production of silver are definitely limited by nature, the eventual effect of this bill will be to increase the world price of silver to absorb the premium.

It is not predicted that the increase in the world price of silver will be sudden. It will necessarily be gradual, and the extent of the increase will depend upon the amount of surplus products we exchange for silver. But this is an advantage and not a disadvantage. If the price of silver were to increase suddenly as the result of the action of our Government in purchasing large quantities of silver, other export nations would enjoy the same advantages in selling their surplus products to silver-using countries as we. But if the increase comes about gradually as the result of the exchange of our surplus products for foreign silver, we alone will enjoy the advantage of the increased purchasing power of silver-using countries.

There is nothing experimental or revolutionary in the plan suggested by this bill. It does not involve the violation of the Constitution or the abridgement of any political, personal, or economic right. It does not constitute any sacrifice of fundamental American principles. Nor does it mark any departure from the ancient landmarks of the fathers. For 80 years silver was as much the money of this country as gold. It was made the money of this country by the Constitution of the United States, and such eminent authorities as Jefferson, Hamilton, and Webster not only believed that it should be used as money, but believed that it could not be demonetized without violating the Constitution.

The silver certificates issued against the silver received in payment for surplus products will not constitute fiat or printing-press money. These silver certificates will be sounder than the paper money we have in circulation today. Not a dollar of our paper money is redeemable in any metal. But under this bill, every dollar of silver certificates issued will be redeemable in a sufficient quantity of silver to make the certificates worth 100 cents on the dollar. This new money will be put into the hands of millions of producers and, unlike bank credit money which exacts its toll of interest charges, it cannot be withdrawn overnight.

It is not claimed that this bill is a cure-all. It does not satisfy the demands of the extreme inflationist. Much is left to the discretion of the administration, so that it can feel its way in putting the act into operation. However, there are sufficient mandatory provisions in the bill to insure its operation regardless of the views of those who will be chosen to administer it. It does not require any new set-up or governmental agency, and it does not put the Government into business. Private exporters and agricultural marketing associations will largely put the bill into operation by the simple process of accepting silver in payment for surplus products and depositing the silver in the Treasury of the United States and receiving certificates in lieu thereof. It is merely the recognition of the money of more than one half of the world as payment for the surplus of our soil and labor. It is believed that the bill as passed by the House, with slight modifications, will be acceptable to the administration.

EMERGENCY GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES WILL BE PAID WITHOUT PARTICULAR PAIN TO ANYONE

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, these have been tense and interesting days in Washington. A hidden political contest of the keenest sort is raging, and the control of the country is at stake.

I am reminded very much of the old Wilson days after the war when his political and economical foes were conspiring and planning and feverishly working for his downfall. You will remember, too, that they succeeded in their fiendish and unholy purposes. The same elements are now vigorously working against the President, and it behooves every tried and true friend of Franklin Roosevelt and every patriot who believes that the carrying out of his policies is essential for our country and for democracy to be constantly on guard against the vicious attacks of these enemies.

There have been mistakes. Hardships have been imposed by some of the things done. Many are prone to forget the benefits and think only of their difficulties. There are elements of discontent in every community.

The unscrupulous standpat partisans who hate Mr. Roosevelt and his ideals of justice for the common man, partisans who care more for their own selfish success than they do for the welfare of the country, partisans who want to go back to the old order of things where big business and selfish interest were in the saddle, these various partisans are attempting to garner into their organization all the elements of discontent.

I hope all these fellows who are throwing bricks at the President will miss their mark. I read about the henpecked husband who complained to the judge that his wife had been throwing things at him ever since they were married. The judge asked, "But why haven't you made a fuss about this before?" "Today's the first time she ever hit me, judge." I hope and pray the President may continue so thoroughly entrenched in the hearts of the people of this Nation that these poison bombs will never touch him.

Not only this, but these unpatriotic partisans are trying to stir up strife and more discontent wherever they think there is a possible chance.

But one thing remains clearly apparent. Franklin Roosevelt is strong with the rank and file of the masses of the people. They believe he is making a valiant fight for them. They know he has tremendous odds to overcome. They have faith in him. They believe he is in sympathy with them and is working almost beyond all human endurance in his efforts to help them. I want to say to all these people, and to the farmers, the small workingman, and hundreds and hundreds of thousands of others: that they have never had a better friend in the White House than they have right now, and that they cannot afford to be asleep while his enemies are trying to destroy him.

Now that the second session of the Seventy-third Congress is drawing to a close, I consider it proper to comment on the recovery program and its costs. Ever since the first session was begun 158 years ago, the operations of government have always started people to discussing—too often with the accent on the "cussing."

Congress seems to be regarded as a natural target for dissatisfaction and discontent; and the second session, unfortunately, has been no exception. I suppose that is due in part to the fact that the Government officer at times has to be a policeman, inspector, tax collector, and regulator. I am afraid that all too frequently it seems to take a peering, poking, meddling sort of character to enforce laws; and so it is the simplest thing in the world to rouse a crowd with a slogan of "Down with the nosey, tax-squandering bureaucrats!" Law enforcement means compulsion, and compulsion does not excite affection.

The other day a wild-eyed, fire-breathing radical rushed up the steps of an aristocratic home in one of our big cities and furiously rang the bell. The door was opened by the bland, rigid, imperturbable family butler. Enraged anew at such a sight, the radical bellowed at the top of his voice, "The revolution is here." But the butler was not disconcerted in the least. He answered with the utmost calm: "All revolutions must be delivered at the tradesmen's entrance in the rear." There are a lot of us who agree with that butler when it comes to a breathless, instantaneous acceptance of every half-baked panacea. Do not ask me whether they bake panaceas or not; anyway, most of them sound as if they or their authors were half-baked or boiled or something.

The American people, you can be sure, are not going to be suddenly stampeded into any social upheavals by the irresponsible tirades of a few misinformed critics. Somebody remarked the other day on that point of misinformation as a basis of criticism that people who are "down on" something usually get that way because they are not "up on" it.

And that is most certainly true of many haphazard criticisms of our governmental functions. If we look fairly at the Federal structure we cannot but be struck by the fact that a good part of its machinery has been created for the sole purpose of being helpful to its citizens.

Nothing shows that so clearly as a classification Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY, Speaker of the House of Representatives, made recently of our total Federal Budget expenditures this year, which amount to about $2,911,000,000.

It has been charged that this administration is recklessly expending money, that it is piling up an enormous national debt, and the time has perhaps come to analyze the recovery expenditures of the first year of operations under the leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Apparently during 13 months of operations under the new deal the gross amount of our public debt increased $5,223,000,000, until the 31st day of March 1934 our apparent public debt amounted to $26,158,000,000. But we had in the Treasury at that time $2,008,000,000 which ought to be deducted in arriving at the amount of our gross public debt. Deducting this amount, we reach the inevitable conclusion that in the first 13 months of the Roosevelt administration our public debt increased only $2,436,000,000.

We have been underwriting investments of banks, insurance companies, railroads, building-and-loan associations, farmers, intermediate-credit banks, joint-stock land banks, and other companies and banks, and we have taken from them their securities. We have been underwriting municipalities, and we have taken from them their securities. If the recovery program succeeds—and it must succeed—practically all of these amounts so invested will come back into the Treasury of the United States.

THE NATIONAL DEBT

Using a new method of approaching the national debt, in view of the vigorous criticisms to which the present administration has been subjected, a different result is obtained. If we have been underwriting the propositions I have mentioned, and if we have been taking their securities, and if the success of the new deal means the payment of these obligations, and it does mean the payment of these obligations, then the correct way of approaching the national debt is to deduct from our entire national indebtedness the cash we have on hand, less the securities we are underwriting, and when we do that we reach the conclusion that at the present time our public debt, less cash and securities, amounts to only $8,264,000,000. Applying the same method to our public debt as it existed on February 28, 1933, we reach the conclusion that our public debt at that time amounted to $6,225,000,000. Therefore, during the 13 months of the Roosevelt administration the public debt increased $2,039,000,000.

It is perfectly proper, I think, in estimating our financial condition so far as the national debt is concerned, to figure in the $2,810,000,000, or increment on gold we have obtained by revaluing the gold dollar. When this item is included we reach the inevitable and startling conclusion that today our public debt, less cash and securities, is $771,000,000 less than it was at the end of the Hoover administration.

Now, is a good part of this nearly $3,000,000,000 squandered, as some isolated critics assume, by brazen, self-seeking bureaucrats, or wasted on silly, futile projects of no public interest or values? That is the charge; now what are the facts?

On a recent trip to Buffalo, N.Y., I encountered several keen business men who frankly told me of their fears for the program of national recovery.

"The Government is spending billions of dollars borrowed money", said one; "spending so much that the mind can't grasp the vastness of the sum. I'd like to know how this terrific debt will be paid."

Another, honestly pessimistic, said "the money borrowed has to be repaid unless debts are repudiated—we'll come out of these recovery experiments with the greatest national debt the Nation ever owed. There is no way to pay it off, and we're headed for bankruptcy." Others said we were pouring money down a rat hole; and some firmly believed that the billions now being spent were actually retarding recovery by loading future years with unbearable taxes.

In answer to their many inquiries I said that one must know why the Government is going into debt to understand how the bill will be paid and that the country as a whole will pay its debt out of the profits it will make by spending now the money it is borrowing.

In ordinary times the Nation could not make a profit by having its Government spend great sums. It is only because of the breakdown in our economic machine that such action is not only possible but positively necessary.

Few people realize how completely our economic machine was paralyzed.

A few figures will make it clear. Let us assume that our Nation is one vast business whose chief purpose is to have an income to feed, clothe, and promote the welfare of all our people.

The national income of all our people in 1928, and again in 1929, was more than $80,000,000,000. That income represented what we then called prosperity: Work for all, a higher standard of living for practically everyone.

But in 1932, our national income was only 40 billions, a 50 percent reduction. Any business whose earnings drop 50 percent has been dealt a terrific blow. Our national machinery was operating on but two cylinders.

More than 11,000,000 men were out of work. My friends were lamenting the costs of recovery, but have they ever considered the costs of depression? The potential labor wasted in the last 3½ years, if employed steadily, could have torn up our railroad system and rebuilt if three times. The wasted man power could have built a $5,000 house for every second family in the entire United States. Here was billions of dollars of man power absolutely wasted because our economic machine had cracked.

When a business man has a delivery truck which runs on only two cylinders, the first thing he does—if the truck has future usefulness—is to have it repaired. He knows that the future saving to be gained by putting it in first-class running condition will more than offset the repair cost.

So it is with out national business machine. If we can spend $5,000,000,000 and make our economic machine operate so that we can turn our national income back toward eighty billions a year, instead of forty, the costs will be more than offset; our Nation will profit forty billions a year.

In short, if by spending five billions we can cause the national machine to increase its income by forty billions, the repayment of the five billions is a minor matter.

The Government's emergency expenditures are moneys spent to promote a bigger national income, and, as in the case of the manufacturer, revenues from the bigger national income have been and will be set aside to amortize the debt.

Most of the expenditures for recovery are already either specifically provided for by taxes or are loans which legitimately must be repaid. For example, the farm-adjustment program is to be paid for by taxes on the processing of farm products. These taxes are now being collected. Farm credits are loans to the farmers, not gifts. The same holds true of advances to home owners, to States and municipalities from Public Works funds, and to banks and insurance companies by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The carrying charges on these loans have been provided for through taxes. This is true even of the N.R.A. program, including the $3,300,000,000 Public Works fund.

It will immediately be said that the farmer, the home owner, and the other borrowers cannot repay these loans unless better times come as a consequence of the recovery measures. This is quite true. But from actual figures now at hand we can see clear indications of a movement toward restoration.

In July of 1932 the Government's deficit was $735,431,-219.68. One year later, July 1, 1933, the deficit was only $241,169,913.82—less than a third as much.

This sharp reduction in our deficit is due chiefly to a reduction of about 25 percent in our regular expenditures, income from the beer tax, an increase in revenue taxes, and the fact that the Government was receiving income from special recovery taxes before actual outlays of money for recovery purposes had become great. For example, the farm processing taxes have already yielded approximately $10,000,000.

More important, the increase in revenue can be explained in part by the fact that the national income is greater than it was. This is the very objective we seek, for as national income becomes greater there is a proportionate increase in the Government revenues from which the deficit for emergency measures will be met.

The present administration may be likened to a receivership trying to reorganize a failed business, using what it can of the old methods and injecting new ideas. But when receiverships fail to resuscitate business that business ceases to exist and a new company occupies the old site. That is our present predicament.

If leaders of industry sabotage the program of recovery and saddle the blame on those who are trying to do the job, they will precipitate a tidal wave which may engulf them. They must be made to see that the old order is dead and a new one is being born. We can make the new order, through receivership methods, something we like or one we abhor. But that is our only choice.

Industrialists are not yet making the sacrifices necessary to recovery. There is much yet to be done in bringing order into our affairs, though there is no reason to doubt that we are on the right track.

At any rate, $5,000,000,000 is not a great price to pay for recovery. We cheerfully and without criticism raised some $20,000,000,000 in 2 years to fight a war in 1917–18, and no one ever questioned its repayment.

Yet with five billions—one fourth of the amount spent on war—being paid out to re-create national wealth, give work and contentment to our people, there are those whose chief worry is that we may be bankrupted. This is beside the point. If we are bankrupt it will not be because we spent some billions of dollars but because our measures were unwise. Five billions of dollars is an investment to restore our economic health, and it ought to pay dividends—perhaps within a year—which may give the Treasury a surplus.

To show what I mean, let me project some figures for comparison: The national income for 1928 was eighty-two billions, and the income-tax amounted to 2.2 billions. Let us assume, on the present rate of progress, that the recovery measures will bring us back 50 percent toward the prosperity of 1928—and do this within a year. The national income, then, should increase from forty billions to sixty billions for 1934, and the income-tax yield should rise from 746 millions to 1.1 billions. Actually, when our income was sixty billions, in 1931, the income-tax yielded 1.9 billions. We ought to be able to count on this much, and it is a substantial answer to those who profess so many fears at present.

In addition, immense revenue is expected from liquors, with the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, and from increased customs duties as international trade revives. It would not be extravagant to expect that, with a 50-percent revival, our total revenues might be five billions for the year.

Assume that our total expenditures for extraordinary purposes should add ten billions to the national debt over a 3-year period of recovery, and that our revenues in the first year were four, in the second six, and in the third eight billions. Assume, also, that our ordinary expenses continued at about two and one-half billions. In the first year, then, we should pay off one and one half billions, in the second three and one half billions, and in the third year five and one half billions of the total ten billions. The recovery debt would be paid in 3 years, with a half billion dollars to spare.

Figures like these are conjectural. No one can predict the percentage of recovery to be expected during any given period. But, assuming that the program produces substantial results, such an outcome is not at all fantastic. Our national income fell from eighty-two to sixty billions in 2 years, and to forty billions in 3 years. The fact that it was once as high as eighty-two billions means that we have the resources, the factories, and the man power to produce that much. We have capacities we are not using. These are not lost. All we need is the courage and the intelligence to put them to work. And if we fell off forty billions in 3 years, perhaps we can get it back in the same time.

The recovery plan is one way to get back to prosperity. If it costs ten billions over 3 years to set us on a basis of eighty instead of forty billions of income a year, our effort will have cost us comparatively little. We shall have spent an average of three and three tenths billions a year to gain forty. If you think about the country instead of any individual sacrifice which may be involved, this is worth working for heart and soul.

It is a national effort. Government cannot do it alone. No few industrialists can help enough. The whole country has to go along. If it does, we shall get back to the eighty-billion days in short order. And we shall pay the costs without particular pain to anyone.

THE PLIGHT OF THE DAIRYMEN

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, in America dairying is a major industry and its chief product, milk, is absolutely essential to the growth of the young and the welfare of our people. The cow is in fact the foster mother of the human race. Twenty million people within these United States are dependent upon dairying for their livelihood and there are approximately 4,000,000 dairy units in America. The number of cows in America at the present time is approximately 21,000,000, with an aggregate value of approximately $2,000,000,000. The annual output of the dairies of the country is, in round numbers, 125,000,000,000 pounds of milk, valued at over $3,000,000,000. This valuation, of course, includes marketing and labor costs. About one half of this milk is used for fluid consumption in our homes, the balance going into powdered milk, cheese, and butter.

Despite the fact that the output of our dairies is essential to national well-being and that dairying is the only type of farming which conserves soil fertility, there is no agricultural group whose economic condition has been more depressed. There is no farming group whose situation has been more thoroughly exploited by the middleman or whose situation has been so outrageously manhandled by governmental experimentation. The dairymen, as a group, are a taciturn generation. They have not worn a path to the Treasury and have not been on the firing line clamoring for governmental aid. But their situation is no less grievous, and the financial return to the average dairy farmer, throwing into the scale the services of his wife and family, is but $750 per year. The dairy farmer is tied to the soil and his situation cries to heaven for relief.

The situation of the New York State dairyman is typical. His land is being sold for taxes, and while he is making a necessary contribution to the health of the people, he finds himself without sufficient return to live comfortably, free from the stress of poverty. He likewise finds himself unable, as has been his practice for generations, to educate his worth-while child.

May I say that the farmers of New York are more truly farmers in the original sense than those that till the soil, for long before the husbandman tilled the earth for profit men drove their animals from place to place and lived upon their milk. The average resident of the country and a good many Members of the House cannot see New York State in terms of agriculture. If he does think of New York at all, he visualizes Wall Street and does not consider this great army of New York producers. This spirit has infected the present agricultural administration. Let me say to the House that the dairy cattle of New York State, which numbers 2,120,000, are valued at over $200,000,000. For generations New York State has been well to the top in the production of dairy products. New York State, in fact, pioneered that field. It originated the sanitary production and distribution of milk and laid the basis of the pedigreed herd in America. The people in my district and indeed the thinking people of the country have come to realize that the economic well-being of great sections of the country is up or down, according to the condition of the dairymen.

RELIEF MEASURES HAVE FAILED

In April 1933 we passed the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which included dairy products. I voted for this measure, and it was my hope and belief that out of it would come some amelioration of the dairymen's condition. Over a year has passed since the enactment of this law and the condition of the dairymen under the Agricultural Adjustment Act has been in fact aggravated and further depressed. The distinguished Secretary of Agriculture started out with the theory that the dairymen were in better condition than the wheat, corn, and cotton farmer. In an apologetic and belated program, set forth in a speech made at Madison, Wis., on January 31, 1934, Secretary Wallace, almost a year after the passage of the act, stated that he was now going to take up the question of the dairymen's condition. What a great concession this was! During the year 1933 in various speeches Secretary Wallace was captious and critical when he referred to the dairymen. At times he became even abusive. At the New York State fair in August of 1933 he roundly scored the dairymen for the New York and midwestern milk strikes, which were brought on largely by his do-nothing attitude and his idle vaporings against the organizations which had saved the dairymen from utter destruction.

In his Madison speech he prated about the necessity for organization and then he and his underlings sought to destroy what solidarity the dairymen had achieved. In that same speech he took a leaf from the book of Lenin, the Russian dictator, when he said:

> Any group that looks with favor on strikes as a means of intimidation must realize that the Department of Justice will scrutinize most carefully all strikes which involve interstate commerce and the movement of the United States mail.

Thus these propagandists of the new deal serve notice that they will visit upon the dairymen their wrath if they resort to extreme measures as a means of improving their condition. Nor is that the whole picture. He and his cohorts in the dairying field, in obedience to the Secretary's complex that farm relief has no place except in the midwestern country where the agricultural group is and has been for a long time most vocal, attempt to depress the price of fluid milk in the various eastern and southern milksheds. This is to be the preliminary step in the nationalism of the dairy industry. He and Messrs. Tugwell, Ezekiel, Frank, and Bean, after playing directly into the hands of the distributors by cancelation of the milk licenses and agreements, agree that their first step is to depress the price of fluid milk. This, of course, would increase the profits to the distributor, concerning whose earnings the Secretary stated in his Madison speech of January 1934:

> I have the composite figures on distributors' profits in St. Louis, Chicago, Boston, and Philadelphia for the 5 years ending December 31, 1933. These figures are for distributors handling from two thirds to 90 percent of the milk in these cities. As the Government auditors—not the distributors, of course—figure, the distributors in these four cities took profits during the 5 years as follows: St. Louis distributors averaged 14.6 percent net profit; Boston, 22.5 percent; Chicago, 25.8 percent; Philadelphia, 30.8 percent. In 1933 our auditors' estimates indicate that St. Louis distributors averaged 7.3 percent net profit; Chicago, 10.9 percent; Boston, 16.3 percent; and Philadelphia, 21.7 percent.

Then followed the absurd and fanciful attempt to fix the price of fluid milk in the various sheds based on the fluctuating price of butter in the Chicago market. It was not the intention of that section of the "brain trust" in command of dairying in the A.A.A. to discipline or bring the distributors to terms. Their obvious and initial purpose was to depress the price of fluid milk and tie it up with impossible hypotheses, regardless of transportation costs, the feeding problem, and labor conditions which differ widely in the various milksheds throughout the country.

The A.A.A.'s whole administration of this problem has been characterized by fumbling, uncertainty, and its only tendency was to adopt policies which were oppressive and destructive of the solidarity the dairymen had gained by organization in an effort to obtain a bare living price for their product. The Department at one stage refused to deal with the representatives of the producers, preferring to deal with them en masse. This made it appear that its seeming purpose was to nationalize milk. This gives color to the charge of communism within the Department. It gives color to the charge, as well, that the roots of some of the "brain trusters" reach back into the chain-store organizations, who are the main chislers in the fluid-milk field.

By this time the dairying group of America had become thoroughly aroused to the danger of the situation. They presented their situation to their Representatives in Congress who effected a congressional organization including Members who represented dairying districts. This had the effect of slowing down the "brain trusters" but not until much of the ground that had been gained by the dairymen through cooperative and other organizations had been effectually destroyed. The Department then proposed a new type of agreement to fix the resale price of milk on the ground that it was unconstitutional. These proposed agreements, the effect of which would be to place the destinies of the dairymen in the control of the "brain trust" and other parlor socialists of the A.A.A., have been almost unanimously repudiated by the dairymen of America. The result has been that this vaunted legislation from which so much was expected, after being used as an instrument of oppression and price reduction, was thrown into the discard. Obviously the future of the dairymen, at least during the Wallace regime, must depend upon organization of producers supplemented by such State control boards patterned on the New York State act, recently declared constitutional by the United States Supreme Court.

NO DAIRYING SURPLUS

I am safe in saying that there is no actual surplus in the dairying field in America. I include herewith a table showing the per capita consumption of whole milk per year in the various civilized countries.

Country	Year	Gallons
Finland	1928	83.9
Switzerland	1927	70.4
Sweden	1914	69.7
Norway	1927	56.0
United States	1926	55.3
Canada	1927	51.0
Czechoslovakia	1928	45.8
Austria	1926	45.0
Netherlands	1927	42.7
New Zealand	1927	37.4
Austria	1926	37.1
Great Britain	1922	30.9
Germany	1928	27.3
France	1928	25.0

It is obvious that fluid-milk consumption in America has not begun to reach its peak and that by intelligent stimulation the Department, together with a curbing of the excessive distributors' profits, which have always been treated academically by the Department, would result in greatly increased consumption in America.

It is now stated that the rejection of the program of the A.A.A. was caused by propaganda financed by the distributors. There is, of course, always one black sheep in every flock. There is available, however, a definite poll of the dairying group taken by Hoards Dairyman, a high-class and authoritative dairying publication. I insert herein that portion of the poll which shows the verdict of 4,909 families on dairy-farm relief. This includes the effect of the N.R.A. on the dairymen:

	Yes	No	Maybe
1. Has the N.R.A.—
Raised price of things you buy	445	103	86
Raised prices of things you sell	500	3,173	543
2. Mark "yes" or "no" on the following dairy plans as to their possibility of helping you as a farmer:
(a) The butter fat allotment plan	459	2,070	----------
(b) The Hoard's Dairyman plan	3,214	414	----------
(c) The diseased-cow plan	1,521	1,103	----------
3. Should dairy processing taxes be assessed on basis of—
(a) A certain number of cents per pound fat on all butter fat produced	558	1,842	----------
(b) A rate per pound fat that would vary according to the price received by producers	1,912	980	----------
4. Should the Federal Government prohibit the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine	3,540	745	----------

BUTTER

The history of the Department's action with reference to butter is an interesting chapter. It is a continued story of the Department's attempt to destroy the solidarity of the dairying group. The "brain trusters" have attempted to drive a wedge between the fluid-milk group and the butter group. Obviously in their attempt to nationalize milk products they intend to destroy them one group at a time. There is and should be no division between the butter and fluid-milk groups. The history of butter purchases and the contract of Secretary Wallace with Mr. John Brandt, of the Land O'Lakes Creamery, is a record of stupidity and broken faith. On the 17th day of August 1933 the Secretary of Agriculture agreed to take $30,000,000 worth of butter off the market. After the purchase of some $11,000,000 worth of butter, and without warning of any sort, this support of the market was withdrawn. Nor was any intelligent publicity given the handling of this situation. The Secretary of Agriculture terminated this procedure on December 16, 1933, with the resulting decline of 7 cents per pound in the price of 92-score butter. The only initiative that the departmental theorists have displayed in this connection has been the attempt to alienate the butter groups from the fluid-milk groups through departmental propaganda that low butter prices result from the higher prices received for fluid milk. I again call the attention of the House to the fact that while the Department is insisting that the fluid-milk group are receiving high prices, they are in fact not in receipt of sufficient income to live comfortably, pay their taxes, and give adequate education to their children. There is an actual underconsumption of butter in America as will be seen by the following table:

[Pirtle, T. R. Supplement to Handbook of Dairy Statistics, Washington, D.C., U.S. Bureau of Agricultural Economics, April 1930]

Country	Year	Pounds per capita
New Zealand	1926-28	34.1
Austria	1928	29.8
Canada	1928	29.3
Finland	1927	20.7
Germany	1928	19.7
Sweden	1926	18.6
United States	1928	17.3
Great Britain	1927	16.0
Switzerland	1928	13.0
Netherlands	1927	12.6

DEPARTMENT ATTITUDE ON CHEESE

Not one thing has been done by the administration with reference to cheese. In his release of August 17, 1933, the Secretary of Agriculture stated that it was the intention to buy enough cheese to improve the present dairy prices. For more than a year not one pound of cheese was bought by the marketing corporation for disbursement through the relief organizations, and the Wisconsin cheese maker saw his market destroyed and no relief in sight. There is likewise an underconsumption of cheese in America, as the following table will establish:

Country	Year	Pounds, per capita
Switzerland	1928	24.0
Netherlands	1923	13.5
Italy	1928	12.1
Norway	1927	10.7
Germany	1928	10.6
France	1925	10.5
Great Britian	1927	10.0
Denmark	1927	10.0
Sweden	1925	8.3
Austria	1926	6.1
New Zealand	1926-28	5.7
United States	1928	4.1
Union of South Africa	1927	4.0
Australia	1928	3.5

COCONUT OIL

Secretary Wallace has openly opposed the imposition of a 5-cent tax on coconut and sesame oils in the Senate. Secretary Wallace is an economic internationalist. His heart bleeds for the Cuban Sugar Trust and the Philippine importer. The Secretary, of course, speaks in terms of international trade. One of the chief sources of butter substitutes is coconut oil compounded from filthy copra. Congress placed a tax on this oil so that it might not, in a spurious and counterfeited form, come in competition with American butter. Secretary Wallace, in his pamphlet entitled "America Must Choose", urges the elimination of the tariff on edible oils, sugar, flax, and wool. The House should remember that none of these items are in the surplus-production group, but the Secretary of Agriculture has declared all of them uneconomic, and has signed their death warrant. The loyalty of this A.A.A. group to the American Constitution has been questioned. I do not go that far, but it is my opinion that these gentlemen are "blue domers", with their heads in the clouds and their feet out of touch with Mother Earth. It is interesting to note that the pamphlet in question is being printed and distributed by several international groups. The Senate cut this tax on coconut oil to 3 cents per pound and directed the return of the receipts to the Philippine government. The House conferees agreed to this provision, and this, so long delayed and so important to the American dairyman, is now a law. The fact remains, however, that Secretary Wallace and the Tugwell-Ezekiel group have shown their hand.

CATTLE AS A BASIC INDUSTRY

H.R. 7478 amends the A.A.A. so as to include cattle as a basic agricultural commodity. This description, of course, includes both beef cattle and milk cows. Under the bill as amended in the Senate and signed by the President, $250,000,000 is authorized for the purpose of giving relief to these groups and it is divided 60 percent and 40 percent. Congress has now appropriated $150,000,000. It will be interesting to see whether it is done equitably or whether certain favorite States which have definitely come into the picture of overproduction recently, get the entire benefit. The dairy industry is fortunate in having Mr. Lauterbach in command of this division. He is a midwesterner, but I am confident that he will make these disbursements from an equitable, national standpoint. I am confident that in his hands the plight of the eastern and southern dairymen will be given just consideration in the disbursement of these funds. We shall await the outcome with interest.

PROHIBITING THE SALE OF OLEO IN AMERICA

I beg leave to call the attention of the House to a bill which I have introduced prohibiting the manufacture and sale of butter substitutes in America. This, in my judgment, would be a noteworthy contribution to the health and well-being of the people of America. The essential parts of the bill are as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no person, copartnership, or corporation shall manufacture, import into the United States, transport interstate, or offer, sell, or have in his possession for sale, any olemargarine, margarine, butterine, or other substitutes for butter, manufactured wholly or in part from any fat other than that of milk or cream.

SEC. 2. That no person, copartnership, or corporation shall manufacture, import into the United States, or sell, offer, expose, or have in possession for sale, any milk or cream or substitute therefor which contains any fat or oil other than that of milk.

SEC. 3. That no person, copartnership, or corporation shall have upon premises occupied by him or them where any dairy product is treated, manipulated, manufactured, or reworked, any substance that might be used for adulteration of any such product and the presence upon any such premises of any fat or oil capable of being used for such adulteration shall be prima facie proof of intent so to use it.

SEC. 4. Any violation of the foregoing shall be a misdemeanor, and upon conviction of a violation thereof a penalty of not more than 1 year or a fine of $1,000, or both said fine and imprisonment, may be imposed.

This bill is patterned exactly upon the law that has been in effect in Canada for 10 years. To my mind there is nothing so criminal as the business of selling synthetic food to the American people. Chemistry has gone far and vegetable and oleomargarine products are produced in a form identical in taste and appearance with butter. This can be produced at a price which is but a fraction of the cost of producing the real article. Congress in permitting the manufacture and sale of synthetic butter signally fails in its duty to the Nation. The sale of oleo and vegetable margarine is a fraud on the American people. It has no vitamin value and whatever food value it ever had is steamed out of it by the processing. It is a sham and a deception and a substitute. It is a grosser fraud than selling paste diamonds for the real article. For the sale of these butter substitutes not only destroys the dairyman but it is seriously detrimental to the health of the American people, particularly those in tender years.

We will hear in this connection the conventional argument that the people should buy what they please. My judgment is that it is one of the functions of the Government to protect the health of the people from counterfeit foods. A race fed on synthetic food is unfit to bear arms. We should be brave enough to follow the example of Canada in the elimination of these fraudulent substitutes. The opponents of this measure will claim that eliminating this food is a discrimination against the very poor. I am familiar with the school of thought that will present this line of argument. They are a group that from the beginning have exploited the under dog. They are great constitutionalists. The fact is that there never was a time when butter was not cheaper than oleo for the reason that the spread of butter is sufficiently greater to offset the increase in price.

There can be no valid objection to the enactment of this law. Permit me to state that the production of oleomargarine including that produced from vegetable oils and animal fat amounted, in the year 1933, to about 250,000,000 pounds. I annex herewith a table showing the amount and value of products that went into the production of this counterfeit food:

Quantity and wholesale price of coconut oil, cottonseed oil, and animal fats used in oleomargarine manufacture, July 1931 to June 1932

Commodity	Used in manufacture, 1931-32	Wholesale prices 1931-32	Wholesale prices 1933	Estimated value 1931-32 prices [1]
		Cents per pound	Cents per pound
Coconut oil	127,967,000	5.30	4.80	$6,782,000
Cottonseed oil	14,874,000	4.35	[2] 4.56	647,000
Butter	39,000	25.50	21.70	1,000
Neutral lard	10,557,000	7.70	6.90	813,000
Oleo oil	15,315,000	6.70	6.40	1,026,000
Oleo stearin	4,337,000	6.00	5.06	260,000
Oleo stock	641,000

[1] Estimated value calculated by multiplying wholesale price times quantity used in manufacture.

[2] Average January to October. Prices for November and December not quoted.

It will be seen that the chief beneficiary of this production is the Philippine Islands, concerning whom Secretary Wallace and the administration are so much concerned.

The value of the cottonseed oil used in this production was $647,000. I am creditably advised that the dairymen of America used in the year 1933 approximately $100,000,000 of cottonseed oil products as food for their cows. They are and will continue to be one of the best customers of the cotton grower, provided the dairyman is not destroyed by competition from counterfeit products. It seems to me clear, from the foregoing figures, that the self-interest of the cotton States require that they should join hands with the dairymen in the elimination of this substitute. It can be done by the enactment of the measure I propose. The same reasoning applies to the cattle-producing groups in America. Their total sales in 1933 of products that went into the production or manufacture of oleomargarine amounted to less than $2,000,000. As the result of this unfair competition, the ability of the dairymen to buy meat for his family has been greatly decreased. If the buying power of the dairymen were restored through the elimination of this counterfeit butter, their purchases of meat would be increased, as I am informed, not less than $50,000,000 annually.

I trust the representatives of both the cattle States and those of the cotton-growing States will see the light on this question. They themselves will be among the greatest beneficiaries through the enactment of this legislation. In all the civilized countries of the world butter substitutes have been made a matter of stringent regulation. In the Republic of France butter and oleo cannot be sold on the same premises. In Canada the manufacture and sale of oleo is completely forbidden. But there is another phase of the matter which I desire to bring before you. Four years ago I called the attention of the House to the erroneous belief that there was no possibility of fraud or deceit in the sale of these products. I said then I did not believe that to be true. I called attention to the fact that the first appearance of that murderous parasite, the racketeer, was in the field of foodstuffs. I called attention to the fact that with printing presses handy how simple it would be to relabel the counterfeit product. My fears appear to be well founded. The Palladium-Times of Oswego, N.Y., carried an Associated Press dispatch under date of May 12, 1934, which was as follows:

BARES MILLION-DOLLAR OLEOMARGARINE RACKET

BOSTON, May 12.—A million-dollar racket in which thousands of pounds of oleomargarine was colored and packaged as creamery butter has been uncovered here by Federal agents, Assistant United States Attorney Charles A. Rome revealed today.

Rome said the agents of the Federal Bureau of Pure Foods and Drugs were ready to place before a grand jury the results of their inquiry, showing the racket was operated by counterfeiters and bomb throwers.

Rome said the oleomargarine was shipped legally from Elgin, Ill., taken to a piggery at Stoneham, colored there, repackaged, and sold throughout the East as a high-class creamery product. He said at least 100,000 pounds has been shipped in recent months. A recent raid on a North End cheese factory, Rome said, disclosed a considerable quantity of counterfeit money, guns, and the materials for the manufacture of bombs.

This newspaper article illustrates the case most clearly. So long as this spurious product is permitted to be carried in the shops of America, so long will the temptation be present to do as these Boston racketeers have done. There is no question that a Nation-wide fraud is being committed upon the American people and it is made possible by the presence of this counterfeit product in our stores.

SUPREME COURT DECISION

There is, of course, another way out. A decision by the United States Supreme Court in the A. Magnano Co. against G. W. Hamilton, as attorney general of the State of Washington et al., held that the taxing power of the State on oleomargarine was plenary. If Congress fails in its duty the States should enact legislation taxing this counterfeit product out of existence.

CONCLUSION

Let me say to the dairymen of my own district and State, as well as to those similarly employed in other States, that their destiny must be worked out by home rule exercised through State legislation or by milk agreements within the various milksheds. It is my solemn judgment that the price they will have to pay for bungling, destructive Federal intervention is too great to be considered. New York State has blazed the trail by the enactment of a control act, and this act, which, strange to say, the " brain trusters " regarded as unconstitutional, has been declared valid by the Supreme Court of the United States.

I respectfully urge the dairymen of my district and State to support and aid in the enforcement of this State law. Vigorously and sympathetically enforced, it will eventually give them their place in the economic sun.

This Nation and the rest of the world are now emerging from the depression. The improved conidtions due to this fact, supplemented by aid given by the State law, will, in my opinion, bring the dairymen out of the valley of despond into the economic light of a new day.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I do not get into the newspapers often, but an article appeared in the Washington Herald this morning bearing the headlines "Representative TERRELL Asks Probe of New Deal."

I did not ask any probe of the new deal and did not say anything like that.

I introduced a resolution providing for an investigation of the commissions, boards, and bureaus of this Government with a view to eliminating some of them to carry out the promises of the Democratic platform. I said nothing about the new deal.

The Democratic platform makes this statement with regard to the matter:

We advocate an immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus, and eliminating extravagance, to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent in the cost of the Federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD at this point the resolution I referred to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The resolution referred to follows:

Resolution providing for the appointment of a committee of the House to investigate the various executive and independent offices, commissions, boards, and bureaus, for the purpose of determining whether or not the Constitution authorizes the creation of all these agencies, and whether their work is necessary for the best interests of the people of the United States, and to recommend the repeal of all such agencies as are found to be unauthorized by the Constitution, or to be unnecessary for the best interests of the people of the United States, or to be uneconomical and unnecessary for the administration of the Government of the United States; and

Whereas there have been created and established by acts of Congress a vast number of independent offices, commissions, boards, and bureaus affecting the interest and welfare of the people, sometimes in an adverse manner, at great cost to the taxpayers; and

Whereas it is believed that some of these Government establishments are not authorized by the Constitution, and not necessary for the proper conduct of the Government, and detrimental to the best interests of the people, and inflict unnecessary tax burdens upon them: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Seventy-third Congress, That a committee of seven Members of this House be appointed by the Speaker of the House to investigate every agency of the executive department of the Government, including all independent offices, commissions, boards, and bureaus appointed by the President or other executive authority, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not any of these agencies were created without authority of the Constitution, or whether or not they are necessary for the proper and economical administration of the Government, and are necessary for the best interests and welfare of the people; and be it further

Resolved, That this committee shall sit in Washington, D.C., during the vacation of Congress and make a thorough investigation of the Government agencies referred to above, as to whether the creation of any or all of them is authorized by the Constitution, and whether or not any or all of the work being done by them is necessary for the proper and economical administration of the Government, and whether the people are getting value received for the money expended, and report its findings with recommendations, to the Seventy-fourth Congress, not later than February 1, 1935; and be it further

Resolved, That the said committee is authorized to administer oaths and subpena witnesses, books, and papers affecting any matter they are examining or investigating, and a majority of the committee shall constitute a quorum. The committee is authorized to employ such experts and clerical help as may be necessary for the proper investigation of any department coming under the terms of this resolution, and all governmental agencies included in the terms of this resolution shall furnish such assistance to the committee as may be requested by the committee in the proper discharge of its duties.

The sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives to defray the necessary expenses of the committee, and all such expenses shall be paid by voucher signed by the chairman and approved by a majority of the committee.

ELECTION CONTEST—CHANDLER v. BURNHAM

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged resolution in the matter of the election contest of Chandler against Burnham.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 386

Resolved, That George Burnham was elected a Representative in the Seventy-third Congress from the Twentieth Congressional District of California and is entitled to a seat as such Representative.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was adopted.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRIVATE CALENDAR BILLS

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, there are several Private Calendar bills with Senate amendments on the Speaker's desk. I do not happen to have the numbers of the bills, but I desire to dispose of them. I desire to move that the House concur in the Senate amendments in the case of all the bills except one introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM].

I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bills may be reported and acted upon at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bills.

JOHN A. RAPELYE

The Clerk reported the bill (H.R. 211) for the relief of John A. Rapelye, with the Senate amendment, as follows:

MARIE TOENBERG

The Clerk reported the bill (H.R. 1212) for the relief of Marie Toenberg, with the following Senate amendment:

Line 3, strike out "Postmaster General" and insert: "Comptroller General of the United States."

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

B. EDWARD WESTWOOD

The Clerk reported the bill (H.R. 4516), for the relief of B. Edward Westwood, with the following Senate amendment:

Line 3, strike out "Postmaster General" and insert "Comptroller General of the United States."

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

G. C. VANDOVER

The Clerk reported the bill (H.R. 4973), for the relief of G. C. Vandover, with the following Senate amendments:

(1) Page 1, line 4, after "Vandover-" insert: ", out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated,"

(2) Page 1, line 6, strike out "[. Such sum is in full compensation]."

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

NICOLA VALERIO

The Clerk reported the bill (H.R. 5405), for the relief of Nicola Valerio, with the following Senate amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,500."

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

IRENE BRAND ALPER

The Clerk reported the bill (H.R. 473), for the relief of Irene Brand Alper, with the following Senate amendment:

Page 1, line 4, after "pay", insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

LAURA GOLDWATER

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H.R. 4253) for the relief of Laura Goldwater, with a Senate amendment, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. BLACK, RAMSPECK, and GUYER.

PLAYA DE FLOR LAND & IMPROVEMENT CO.

The Clerk reported the bill (H.R. 5284) for the relief of the Playa de Flor Land & Improvement Co., with the following Senate amendment:

Lines 5 and 6, strike out "be reimbursed in the amount" and insert "the sum."

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for a half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to make an announcement that the tickets which have been sent to the Members for the commemorative services next Sunday morning are supposed to be for a seat in the gallery. The Members do not require a ticket to get into the House Chamber that morning. The seats of the Members will be on the floor the same as in the case of other similar services. The ticket which the Member received has a number on the back and entitles a member of your family to a seat in the gallery.

Mr. McFARLANE. How about the children?

Mr. BLOOM. You may turn the ticket over to a child if you wish, but we ask that you bring no children on the floor that morning, because the demand for tickets is so great, and due to the fact that the Senate and the House and the Diplomatic Corps, the Supreme Court, and the Cabinet will be on the floor, there will be very few seats left on the floor. The ticket which you received is for a seat in the gallery.

Mr. HASTINGS. What hour?

Mr. BLOOM. Promptly at 11 o'clock.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 8. An act to add certain lands to the Boise National Forest;

S. 696. An act to authorize Frank W. Mahin, retired American Foreign Service officer, to accept from Her Majesty the Queen of the Netherlands the brevet and insignia of the Royal Netherlands Order of Orange Nassau;

S. 1541. An act for the relief of Mucia Alger;

S. 1807. An act to provide for the exchange of Indian and privately owned lands, Fort Mojave Indian Reservation, Ariz.;

S. 1997. An act to compensate Harriet C. Holaday;

S. 2379. An act to provide for the selection of certain lands in the State of Arizona for the use of the University of Arizona;

S. 2568. An act granting a leave of absence to settlers of homestead lands during the years 1932, 1933, and 1934; and

S. 3144. An act to legalize a bridge across the St. Louis River at or near Cloquet, Minn.

JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H.J.Res. 317. Joint resolution requesting the President of the United States of America to proclaim May 20, 1934, General La Fayette Memorial Day, for the observance and commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the death of General La Fayette.

RECESS

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House stand in recess until 7:30 p.m.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 48 minutes p.m.), in accordance with its previous order, the House stood in recess until 7:30 p.m.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 7:30 p.m.

THE 30-HOUR WORK WEEK BILL

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object to this request, but I shall object to any further requests of this kind.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], the Chairman of the Committee on Labor, received a letter today and, owing to the fact that he is addressing a meeting of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, he finds it impossible to be here this evening. He has asked me to read this letter to the Members of the House:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D.C.

Hon. WILLIAM P. CONNERY, Jr.,
United States House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

SIR: Labor throughout the country is calling for the enactment of the Connery 30-hour work-week bill before the present session of Congress adjourns. Working people everywhere are hoping and trusting that Congress will not fail them or disappoint them. They firmly believe, indeed they are absolutely convinced, that the 30-hour work-week bill offers a real remedy for unemployment.

Because of the deep interest which working people have manifested in this bill, I am writing to ask you to sign the petition presented by Congressman ZIONCHECK, which is on the Clerk's desk, and which provides for the discharge of the Rules Committee from further consideration of the Connery 30-hour work week bill.

I earnestly hope and trust that the friends of labor in the House of Representatives will comply with this request promptly by signing the Zioncheck petition without a moment's delay. The officers and members of the American Federation of Labor and all its affiliated members will be indeed grateful to you if you will comply with this official and personal request.

Thanking you in advance, I beg to remain,

Sincerely yours,

WM. GREEN,
President American Federation of Labor.

I was also told to inform the Members that each Member of the House of Representatives on tomorrow morning will receive an identical letter signed by the president of the American Federation of Labor.

Owing to the chiseling that has gone on in big industry, which has refused to comply with the N.R.A., they find it compulsory at this particular time to see that this 30-hour work week bill is enacted into law.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. The gentleman does not mean to say that all industry is not complying with the N.R.A.?

Mr. SCHULTE. I may say to the gentleman that about 55 percent are refusing to comply with the N.R.A. and especially is this true in my district, where they are working men as much as 60 and 70 hours per week, and when the men in these industries complain to the officers, they are told that if they do not behave themselves and keep quiet they will be dismissed from the service of these particular companies.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. ELTSE of California, for an indefinite period, on account of serious illness in his family.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Private Calendar.

ALBERT H. JACOBSON

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, on the last call of the Private Calendar the bills, Calendar Nos. 384, 418, and 454, were objected to. I ask unanimous consent to revert to these bills and take them up in the order named. I am authorized to say that the gentleman who objected when these bills were called, is agreeable to returning to them at this time and taking them up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to return to Private Calendar No. 384, the bill (H.R. 2802) for the relief of Albert H. Jacobson.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman propose to take up more than one of those bills that were passed over?

Mr. WILCOX. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may say to the gentleman that if we establish this precedent right now of returning to bills instead of taking up the calendar as it is before us and starting with 460, we will not get very far with the calling of the calendar tonight.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The particular bill that the gentleman is bringing up now is a bill that I asked be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman has several bills, I understand.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. There are three bills. The other bills I objected to by inadvertence.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the amount carried in the bill?

Mr. WILCOX. The bill is for $2,000, but the report recommends a reduction in the amount.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to ask the author of the bill if he has consulted anyone on this side of the House with respect to these bills.

Mr. WILCOX. I do not believe I have discussed them with any of the Members on that side of the House.

This particular claim is one that arises in this way: Some 3 or 4 years ago Mr. Jacobson was arrested under the national prohibition law by prohibition officers and charged with the illegal transportation of whisky. His automobile was seized and taken charge of by the prohibition officers. He was tried and acquitted of any violation of the law. He went over to get his automobile, only to find that the prohibition officers had been using it as a raiding car and had torn it up.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LYMAN D. DRAKE, JR.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, the next bill to which I ask unanimous consent to return is no. 418 on the calendar, the bill (H.R. 4670) for the relief of Lyman D. Drake, Jr.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know what this bill is about.

Mr. WILCOX. This is a very meritorious bill, I will say to the gentleman from Michigan, and grows out of an injury to Mr. Drake while an employee of the Isthmian Railroad.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Lyman D. Drake, Jr., of Miami, Fla., the sum of $10,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for personal injuries received while in the employ of and working upon the Panama Railroad and in connection with that service and in the employ of the Panama Canal Commission as brakeman upon the Panama Railroad.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500", and in line 10, after the word "railroad", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INTERNATIONAL ARMS & FUSE CO.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H.R. 6241, which was to come up first on the calendar tonight, be passed over and placed at the top of the calendar for the next call of the Private Calendar. It is a jurisdictional bill—to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WALLACE E. ORDWAY

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H.R. 4966, for the relief of Wallace E. Ordway.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PARSONS). Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, this is a bill sponsored by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] that was passed over at the last consideration of the calendar on a question of liability. I understand the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] wishes to make a statement as to where the hole was, with reference to the irrigation ditch.

Mr. PIERCE. There was a hole in the pathway outside of the fence on the Government roadway which the child stepped into and then went into the canal and was drowned. There is no question about the water washing the path away leaving the hole. I would like to read from the Senate report, which is more complete than the House report:

STATEMENT OF R. J. KITCHEN

It is rather a peculiar coincidence, but at the time this child was drowned Congressman Sinnott was in Klamath Falls, Oreg., and knew exactly how it happened. I had had several conferences with Congressman Sinnott before he was appointed judge of the Court of Claims and while he was Representative, and he assured me if I was unsuccessful in the suit against Klamath Falls he would use his best efforts in passing a bill in Congress for the relief of my client.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If the gentleman will read the statement where the hole was, I think it will settle this question.

Mr. PIERCE (reading):

The Government owned a strip 150 feet wide right through part of the town. In the center was the irrigation ditch, fenced in just the part through which the deep canal runs, leaving about 30 or 40 feet on the side where the boy fell in the canal open to the public, and which the public used for automobiles and footpath. The public made a path at the top of the 50-foot embankment and adjoining the wire fence at the edge of the embankment. One not knowing the Government owned the strip outside of what they (the Government) had fenced in would naturally think the city owned it, as it was used generally by autos and pedestrians. At the time of the death of the boy and for a long time prior thereto water had run across the street adjoining the canal and had washed the embankment back so that there was a large hole in the footpath which pedestrians used. A grown person might have avoided this hole, but a boy of 5 years, not knowing the danger, and not being capable of contributory negligence, would quite likely fall into it.

Mr. GOSS. As I recall, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER] objected to the bill and wanted to know whether the hole was on the side of the fence that the Government had jurisdiction of. I take it, from the statement of the gentleman, that that was a fact.

Mr. PIERCE. Absolutely.

Mr. GOSS. I understood the gentleman from Ohio that if he had known that fact he would not have objected to it.

Mr. PIERCE. He has so stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute an identical Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 258

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,000 to Wallace E. Ordway, of Klamath Falls, Oreg., as administrator. Such sum represents compensation to Wallace E. Ordway in his personal right and as administrator for the death of his son, Harry Ordway, who was drowned September 1, 1927, in the United States Irrigation Canal at Klamath Falls, Oreg.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILLIAM S. STEWARD

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5122, for the relief of William S. Steward.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PARSONS). Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, what bills are we considering? Are we not starting with no. 460?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. These are bills passed over temporarily yesterday to be considered before we begin at the star. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of Congress approved September 7, 1916, entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States receiving injuries in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", are hereby extended to William S. Steward for injuries sustained by him while engaged in work for the Isthmian Canal Commission in 1912, and the Governor of the Panama Canal is authorized to pay said William S. Steward, from and after the passage of this act, such sums as would be due him had his injury occurred subsequent to September 7, 1916, such compensation to be a charge against the employees' compensation fund.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ALBERT M. JOHNSON AND WALTER SCOTT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3726, to grant a patent to Albert M. Johnson and Walter Scott.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill about which yesterday I asked many questions of the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT]. Since that time I have talked to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM], and he informs me that this man, Death Valley Scotty, is a real humanitarian and takes care of unfortunates who come along.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. He is a meal ticket for all the bums.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. A meal ticket for all the bums, and when a man is a meal ticket for any unemployed at this time I do not feel I should object to his bill. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Does this involve an appropriation?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. No.

Mr. TRUAX. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subject to prior valid existing rights the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue a patent to Albert M. Johnson and/or Walter Scott (Death Valley Scotty) for the following-described land in the Death Valley National Monument upon payment therefor at the rate of $1.25 per acre or under any applicable public land law subject, however, to the reservation of such rights-of-way as the said Secretary may determine to be necessary or advisable for use in connection with the administration of said monument, to wit:

Those parts of sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 9, 10, 11, and 12, township 11 south, range 42 east; and those parts of sections 5, 6, and 7, township 11 south, range 43 east, Mount Diablo meridian, California, occupied by Albert M. Johnson and/or Walter Scott in the form of Upper and Lower Grapevine Ranches and marked on the ground by concrete fence posts according to the Roger Wilson survey of 1931 and on file in the General Land Office; also the remainder of the southwest quarter northwest quarter section 10, township 11 south, range 42 east; and south half northwest quarter section 6, township 11 south, range 43 east; containing, in all, approximately 1,500 acres.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 3, strike out the figure "9."

Page 2, line 12, strike out the word "east;" and insert the word "east."

Page 2, line 15, after the word "acres" strike out the period, insert a colon and the following:

"Provided, That such patent shall contain a reservation to the United States of all the minerals the lands may contain, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, such minerals to be subject to disposal by the United States only as may be hereafter expressly provided by law."

The committee amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

FLORENCE OVERLY

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 872) for the relief of Florence Overly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MASSACHUSETTS BONDING & INSURANCE CO.

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 4838) for the relief of the Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withdraw his objection until the gentleman from Massachusetts may make a statement?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes. This bill is for the relief of the Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co. I have heretofore objected to all such bills, and I propose to object to this one.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Speaker, this bill is for reimbursement to the Massachusetts Bonding Co. by the Postmaster General, as the bill will be amended, for the loss of a certain number of postal money orders amounting to $22,216.47. Just let me read a part of the report:

On December 11, 1919, a messenger for Philipborn's, a mail-order house in Chicago, was robbed while taking 4,326 postal money orders, totaling $29,396.37, to the National Bank of the Republic.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Has this measure cost the Government any money whatever?

Mr. DOUGLASS. None whatever, and the money appropriated here will be taken out of the fund for the postal money orders which have not been paid.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Is it my understanding that these post-office money orders are all of them over a year old and cannot be cashed now or negotiated?

Mr. DOUGLASS. These money orders cannot be paid. The money has been paid into the Treasury and the Government will lose no money, because they are only giving back to the bonding company money which they paid to the payees of the order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGLASS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. When a Government bond is lost before the Government makes it good it requires an indemnity bond.

Mr. DOUGLASS. There is an indemnity bond provided in this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. For how much?

Mr. DOUGLASS. Double the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. Is there a provision made for keeping up the premiums upon it?

Mr. DOUGLASS. No. The provision is for a bond to be given by the insurance company to the Government in twice the amount to the money appropriated.

Mr. BLANTON. Unless an indemnity bond is kept alive by payment of the annual premium due each year, it is worthless after one year.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I object. I am not going to let a $22,000 bill pass without getting a proper understanding about it, so as to safeguard the interest of the Government.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DOMINIC FRACAPANE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5417, to reimburse Dominic Fracapane for injuries sustained in an accident with a Government-owned motor truck.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

T. BROOKS ALFORD

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5543, for the relief of T. Brooks Alford.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

A. C. MESSLER CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 503, to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of A. C. Messler Co.

Mr. BLANCHARD and Mr. DONDERO objected.

Mr. CONDON. Will the gentlemen withhold their objection?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will withhold the objection.

Mr. CONDON. The last time this bill was called up——

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, a point of inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PARSONS). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TRUAX. When are we to consider Calendar No. 460?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As soon as the bills that were arranged for by unanimous consent are completed. A special arrangement was made for the calling of these particular bills.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. And that was by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was by unanimous consent.

Mr. LAMNECK. How do you arrive at 503 on the calendar?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Arrangement was made for the calling of these bills by unanimous consent.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. And that was yesterday at the close of the call of the Private Calendar.

Mr. CONDON. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was called last time the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BLANCHARD] objected unless he could be given a letter from the War Department stating that they had no objection to this bill being considered. I have a letter from the Secretary of War addressed to Mr. ALLGOOD, Chairman of the Committee on War Claims, in which the War Department interposes no objection, confirming the action of the War Department under the former Secretary of War, Mr. Hurley.

Mr. BLANCHARD. May I say to the gentleman from Rhode Island that the same letter says there is no merit whatsoever to this claim?

Mr. CONDON. That was only an expression on the part of the War Department, and we considered that a year ago. It is just a matter of going to the Court of Claims. I am sure the gentleman said a while ago that if we got this letter from the War Department saying that they would not interpose any objection to going to the Court of Claims, the gentleman would withdraw his objection here.

Mr. BLANCHARD. May I say to the gentleman from Rhode Island that it is a questionable policy to pass the buck to the Court of Claims on bills that apparently otherwise have no merit? I am quite satisfied in my own mind that if we send this to the Court of Claims the Court of Claims will reject the claim, and the United States Government will simply submit itself to some expense that we can avoid right here. That is my reason for objecting to the bill.

Mr. CONDON. If that had been stated in the first place, it would have avoided all this trouble.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Well, there has not been much trouble. We have just confirmed what we did before.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

GEORGE A. CARDEN AND ANDERSON T. HERD

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8482, conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and render judgment on certain claims of George A. Carden and Anderson T. Herd.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DUFFEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BROWNING. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. DUFFEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.
